PARIS, Sept. 22.—A News Agency despatch from [illegible] to-day asserted that Gen. Savanoff, former head of the Bulgarian army, has been summoned to Sofia by the Prime Minister.

OTTAWA, Sept. 22.—Sir Robert Borden will leave the capital on Friday night for Niagara Camp, where he will inspect the overseas forces in camp on Saturday afternoon. The Premier will spend Sunday at the camp.

PETROGRAD, Sept. 22.—Both Riga and Petrograd are now safe from the Germans, War Office officials declared to-day, as a result of the Russian victories around Dvinsk and the reported withdrawal of German troops for a great Balkan drive.

The repeated reverses suffered by the enemy in their attempts to take the outer defences of Dvinsk has affected the morale of the German troops.

There is a noticeable lack of vigor in the Teuton assaults.

The official statement given out early to-day was almost completely silent regarding the Vilna operations, but it is expected here that the Russians have evaded the German trap just as they did at Warsaw.

The Czar's troops are now believed to be falling back upon Minsk.

Gen. Ivanoff's armies are again attacking all along the line in Galicia and the Volhynian fortress district. They are driving in the Austrians and have taken a large number of prisoners.

LONDON, Sept. 22.—Assuming that Greece and Roumania will enter the war on the side of the Allies if Bulgaria joins the Austro-Germans, the Allied forces will be reinforced by nearly a million troops, and the Austro-Germans by 730,000. Greece's forces are widely scattered, and Greece probably will be slow in mobilizing. Roumanie's army is in fine shape.

LONDON, Sept. 22.—Polif Mischef, the Bulgarian Minister to Britain, declared emphatically to-day that his country's mobilization meant nothing but armed neutrality following the examples of Switzerland and Holland.

AMSTERDAM, Sept. 22.—The ten thousand ton Dutch steamer Koningen Emma struck a German mine in the North Sea and sank. The crew escaped.

THE WEATHER

A heavy white frost and generally cool condition this morning indicated that the summer is about over for this year. The temperature stood at 35 degrees. This is the lowest to date.

LARGE FAMILIES RULE AMONG GERMAN WOMEN

BERLIN, Sept 21.—The Prussian statistical office has just issued its last year book, containing details of the last Prussian general census taken on December 1, 1910. According to this there were then in Prussia, 7,-600,380 married, widowed and divorced women, of whom only 575,519 had no children.

As indicating the distribution of children to a family, it may be mentioned that 82,921 women had twelve children, 42,629 had thirteen, 27,084 had fourteen, 16,624 had fifteen, and 17,337 sixteen children or more each. As many as 709 women had more than twenty children.

Altogether the 7,250,000 Prussian mothers had given birth to 29,312,989 children or an average of four children each.

WAR PROFITS IN CANADA MAY BE TAXED NOW

Government is Likely to Follow The Example of The Imperial Parliament in Raising Needed Revenue by This Method.

MAY TAX INCOME

Special to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, Sept. 22.—The announcement in the Imperial parliament by the Chancellor of the Exchequor of the taxation proposal created interest here. The plan to collect sixty per cent. of all profits on war contracts suggested a possibility of Canada making an effort to secure some additional revenue in that direction here.

Undoubtedly the tax on the profits Canadian manufacturers are receiving from filling war contracts would produce a considerable revenue.

The decision of Australia to impose a graduated income tax on all incomes exceeding $200 also suggests the possibility of Canada pursuing a similar course. The Australian war income tax is expected to yield twenty million dollars. Mr. White said last session it was not the desire of the government to invade the revenue of provincial and municipal taxation. Whether or not the same reason will prevail next session in view of the increasing necessity for larger revenue is not known.

To-morrow Jam Day For Baptist Churches

Rev J. R. Webb, pastor of the Murray Street Baptist Church, wishes through The Examiner to remind members of the Baptist churches that to-morrow is the day set apart for them to send or take their contributions of jam, etc., to the store of Messrs. Richard Hall and Son. Forewarned is forearmed.

Overseas Tobacco Fund Sec. To-night

Mr. F. R. Jones, secretary of the Overseas Club Tobacco Fund will meet the local members and all those interested in the work this evening in the Bank of Montreal Chambers at nine o'clock. The local collectors are provided with books and are arranging for regular contributions All of them should endeavour to attend this meeting to-night. Mr. Jones can scarcely add anything to his recent announcements, but by meeting him the local workers should be brought into closer touch with the event of the fund with which tobacco is purchased for the soldiers

CORNET FOR 80TH BAND

Mr T. A. Rodmer Starts The Ball Rolling—Who is The Next Contributor to The 80th Band Fund.

A CHANCE TO HELP

Mr. T. A. Rodmer, George street, has the honour to be the first contributor to the Band Fund of the 80th Battalion. Mr. Rodmer did not make a donation of cash, but he has done what is even better in this case, has presented the band with a splendid silver cornet, a gift that is gratefully received by the band. Mr. Rodmer has shown the right spirit and the way to others. Who will be the next? The band needs music and instruments at once. It is a Peterborough band, pure and simple, and must be supported by Peterborough people. In another column is a reference to a field kitchen subscribed by the Charlotte street Methodist church to the 80th Battalion. If one church can supply $685 for a field kitchen, surely the whole people of Peterborough can provide enough funds to equip a band that will put Peterborough on the map not only in Canada but across the sea. Mr. Rodmer has shown the way. The Examiner wants to hear from other citizens. And set now. We don't want the Peterborough band to have to depend on Belleville for band instruments. Let us make a complete job of it and send out a Peterborough bandmaster, a Peterborough band, and Peterborough instruments. If you have any civic pride you have a chance to show. The Examiner is ready for donations. Dont keep the band waiting—they didn't wait long when it was a question of enlisting.

Salvation Army Band Has 22 Members Now

Recent inroads into the membership of the Salvation Army Band has reduced its numbers to twenty-two, which by rearrangement has enabled Deputy Bandmaster Ford to present an organization that reveals few evidences of its recent losses. The members are practicing faithfully and are determined to maintain the standard established with the assistance of those who have enlisted.

THE SMOKE-HUNGRY BOYS AT THE FRONT

Private effort and even the various organized movements to send out smokes to soldiers and sailors, praiseworthy as they are, can only serve a little part of the need. A big organization is not only able to operate on a more adequate scale, but also to lay out the money to the best advantage. The Overseas Club for all men and women who desire comradeship and mutual help among British subjects throughout the world—has undertaken a large-scale effort to keep our soldiers supplied with tobacco and cigarettes; the Club bearing all the organising expenses, and managing the job so well that not only are freight and duty saved, but purchases made to such advantage that every quarter collected puts $1.00 worth of tobacco and cigarettes straight into the hands of a soldier or sailor on active service—with the name of the giver.

More help is needed. Our readers are asked to contribute, to collect, and to enlist the help of friends in collecting or this kind object. Individual soldiers and sailors can be specified, or the names of regiments, ships and other units, and on each parcel will be written the name of the giver by whose generosity it is sent.

Contributions may be sent to The Examiner.

A Splendid Lecture

"The European War and Its Relation to the Overthrow of Satan's Empire and the Establishment of Christ's Kingdom," is the topic of an interesting lecture to be given at I.B.S.A. Mr. Thorn has spent many years on the lecture platform and is a popular speaker.

Big Gathering in Town Hall Heard Rousing Appeals For Recruits—Speakers Hammered The Need Home From Every Angle and Results Are Expected.

80TH BAND WAS THERE

The Speakers' Patriotic League, Lt. Col. Johnston, and the band of the 80th Battalion invaded Millbrook last night and took part in a rousing recruiting meeting, at which the enthusiasm ran high, and from which favourable results are expected. The meeting was held in the Millbrook Town Hall, which was crowded to the doors, many having to stand throughout the addresses. The attendance was thoroughly representative of Millbrook and the surrounding district, and the enthusiastic hearing that was given each speaker, showed a spirit that is bound to manifest itself in an increased parade state for the local detachment of the 80th Battalion. The message that Canada and the Empire need men and need them at once was driven home from very angle, and no man of military age and fitness could have left the meeting feeling that he was not needed.

Mr. R. J. Doak, Reeve of Millbrook, made a most efficient chairman. In his opening remarks Mr. Doak said that he felt that the reason the rural sections had not responded to the call to the colours as readily as the urban centres, was because they did not realize the seriousness of the situation.

Lieut. Col. Miller.

Lt. Col. Miller was the first speaker In a rousing address he showed that Britain and her allies were fighting militarism in its worst form, a militarism that was seeking to crush the democracy of the whole world. The ruin strewn through little Belgium made William of Prussia stand forth as one of the most infamous criminals in the history of the world. "What if these conditions were to be brought to England, to that island across the seas that we all love?" asked Col. Miller. "would we stand idly by, as many of us are doing now?"

The speaker made an eloquent appeal to the ladies to assist. Comforts for the men were urgently needed. The ladies had done well, and he was sure that they would do better in the future. He asked them to assist in recruiting, the mothers to give up their sons, the wives their husbands, and the girls to encourage their brothers.

Canada's debt to Britain was touched upon at length. The speaker referred to the glorious heritage of traditions that had been handed down to us by the motherand, and appealed to his hearers to be worthy of that tradition.

Judge Ward.

His Honour Judge Ward, the next speaker, apologized for the absence of Judge Huycke, whom, he explained, had been ordered by the Central Committee in Toronto, to attend the meeting at Campbellford, where there was a dearth of speakers. In doing so he referred to the fact that Judge Huycke had given three of his sons to the colours. Judge Ward, in speaking of the causes of the great conflict, said that every loyal Canadian approved of the step Britain had taken in entering upon the contest, and he felt sure that every loyal Canadian would stand behind her to the end. The speaker believed that Great Britain and her colonies war going to be the big factor in bringing the war to a successful close and every portion of the Empire would do its duty in that respect. Men, and more men, and more men were needed to make up the wastage. The first contingent had been 75 per cent. British born The Canadian born had not realized the situation, but were coming to realize it more and more and would come forward in ever increasing numbers. Judge Ward said a wild beast had broken loose in the world. He referred to the ghastly atrocities in Belgium, where 250,000 women and girls had been outraged. "Any man with red blood in his veins should rise at once and help to put an end to that sort of thing." "If you can go, then in God's name, go," said the speaker

"Do you want a change in Canada? Do you want German rule?"

"No," came the response.

"Are you satisfied with the liberties you enjoy?"

"Yes," came quickly from the audience.

"Then do your duty," returned Judge Ward

Mr. R. R. Hall.

Mr. R. R. Hall of Peterborough, in a most eloquent address, made clear

BUCKHORNE QUOTA OF FIVE MEN ALL WERE ACCEPTED

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

That 200 mark by Saturday night for the local detachment of the 80th Battalion is drawing nearer. Buckhorn helped considerably towards increasing the total by sending five of her sons to the armouries, all of which have been passed by Major Eastwood. The five, who were all born at Buckhorn or in the immediate vicinity, are Ptes. Chas. Leonard Jones, Thos. S. Wood, Clayton Montgomery, Leslie Hall and M. L. Hall. Sergt.-Major Miller brought two recruits with him from Millbrook at noon to-day, both of which will go to the hospital for minor operations, after which they will be accepted. They were Pte. Chas. E. Sanderson of Millbrook, and Bandsman Wm. Layfield of Cavan. Other Millbrook recruits are expected in a day or two.

The outside districts are doing their bit now. Peterborough young men who are eligible must not lag behind. How many recruits can Peterborough city itself supply before the end of the week? The country boys are rallying to the colours. Peterborough itself must keep on doing its share.

The members of the local detachment are being issued a portion of their equipment, i.e., tunics and trousers. Caps will be issued as soon as they arrive from Kingston.

The Peterborough boys in the 33rd Battery at Barrefield are being largely called upon for the draft from the battery which is to go overseas at once as reinforcements. Lieut. Meredith Huycke, son of Judge Huycke, is one of the officers selected to go with the draft and a large number of Peterborough boys have been picked. The names of all these are not available to-day, but among them are Sergt. Orme Cavanah, Bombardiers Ed. Graham and Alf. Hagerman, and Gunners A. Graham and A. Butcher. Two of Judge Huycke's sons are going overseas immediately, as Lieut. Wilfrid Huycke has been chosen to accompany the draft company selected from the 50th Battalion, which leaves shortly.

PTE. J. H. ENGLISH NOW REPORTED KILLED APRIL 24TH

Parents Receive News That Well Known Peterborough Boy Reported Missing Since St. Julien Met Death in Action.

A TELEGRAM RECEIVED

All doubt as to the fate of Pte. J. H. English, son of Mr. and Mrs. S. W. English, Margaret Ave., who went to the front with the 57th detachment in the 2nd Canadian Battalion and who has been missing since the battle of St. Julien, has been dissipated by the receipt of a telegram by his father from Ottawa, stating that "Pte. J. H. English, No. 7628, previously reported missing, is now officially reported killed in action on April 4th."

Pte. English was one of the best known Peterborough boys who volunteered in the first contingent. He had a host of friends in Peterborough who have been hopefully awaiting news that he was a prisoner in Germany. His parents will have the sympathy of the community in their bereavement and in the knowledge that their long wait for news has been broken by the intelligence of their sons death. "Jimmy" died like a hero with his brave leader Major Bennett, and so many more Peterborough boys in the terrible battle of St. Julien.

TO TAX CANADA'S BETTING.

Bill Going to Parliament Will Hurt American "Bookies."

MONTREAL, Sept 20.—A bill will be presented at the next session of Parliament to levy a special tax on all money bet on Canadian race courses.

Present intentions are that the proposed tax will be 10 per cent.

The race tracks at present get 5 per cent. of all money that is turned into the Pari-Mutuel machines. The additional 10 per cent. will go to the Government.

In cases where the tracks still retain the old form of "books," the tracks will be compelled to charge the "bookies" 10 per cent. more than in the past for the privilege of controlling the betting business.

Government agents report that the race tracks in Canada do a betting business which amounts to between $8,000,000 and $9,000,000 a year.

In the case of the Pari-Mutuels, the tax will come directly out of the pockets of the public, but at those tracks which still encourage bookmaking, the "bookies," who are with few exceptions from the United States, are the direct sufferers.

"The best gift you can send to the men at the front is more men to help them along."—Lt.-Col. Johnston at Millbrook Join the 80th.

"Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unsurpassed."

WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 22, 1915

ALL IN THE WAR.

The recruiting registers show what is being done by our young men to do their bit; are open evidence of activity in this direction. It is not only evidence, but it is an inspiration. Every young man who dons the khaki, strengthens the mind, gives backbone to the resolve of some waverer, and attracts others to the colours. It is well, therefore, to make as public as possible the record of recruiting. This is, however, not the only form the service to the country and the Empire takes, without the stimulus of cooperation and contact. There are hundreds of silent activities operating. The click of the knitting needles is not very loud, but it finds an echo in the trenches. The Toronto papers are printing stories of the achievements of knitters who are knitting their souls into socks for the good of the soles of our soldiers. One woman in Toronto has up to the present knitted 120 pairs of socks since the war began, and is still doing two pairs per week. To-day is the 415th day of the war, so that this lady has for more than a whole year, put together a pair of soldiers' socks every 3¼ days. And women are doing similarly all over the land. There is evidently one woman in Peterborough that is working for such a record. She was seen yesterday in a Blue Line street car industriously plying her needles. It may be said that this was done for "effect." Some persons may say that she was doing this for effect; but some persons, especially those who do nothing, will say anything. Does the soldier who enlists do it for effect—except upon the enemy? No; he does it to do his duty. So the woman that is bound to do her tale of socks, knits not for "effect," but for effect. And there are thousands of Peterborough, and millions of Canadian, women doing the same in their various ways.

We are all enlisted in this war in some way or other, and one of the strongest incitements to enlistment is the recognition of the fact, that if a young man enters the ranks he has the whole country behind him, giving him comfort and support. He will be stimulated to heroic effort by the recollection of this; for all the heroism is not shown on the battlefield. Heroic struggles, strivings, and sacrifices are going on around us every day, not for effect, because they are not known to the world; but from a simple sense of duty, and spirit of devotion. If the young man eligible for fighting were to yield to a similar sense of duty, he would show himself as much a man as multitudes of women, who are men in the manliness, with which they face and respond to duty. If our young men generally had this spirit, the 60th Battalion would be recruited to the last man before the week is out.

THE LOGICAL COURSE.

In this time of war stress, we have not to think only of recruiting, making munitions, and providing socks for sound soldiers, and jam for sick soldiers. The whole economic, and social, and industrial condition demands thought and suggests action. Whatever in the way of preparation for war is defective; whatever interferes with the effectiveness of our machinery for helping war preparation, has also a sinister effect upon our social and industrial, and other interests. We clamour, and rightly too, for protection of enlisted soldiers from strong drink. We do this because we know that strong drink brings physical deterioration and impairment of morale. If we do this for a small proportion of our population—altogether too small—why should not there be need of a demand for the protection of other young men of Canada enlisted in the ranks of labour, enlisted in the industrial and commercial army? Strong drink weakens and brings relative inability to the digger in the trench, the mechanic at the bench, the salesman in the shop, and to all workers in any field of labour. Why should we not protect these? This war will be, ghastly and destructive as it is, of benefit in some ways—if it makes us think; makes us take the measure of conditions that imperil the general welfare of the body of citizenship.

strong drink in industrial waste, the strong dring in industrial waste, the shortening of production, the expenditure necessary to clear the deck of the ship of state, of its moral and physical wreckage, we strengthen the indictment against the evil of strong drink.

In almost every community on this continent; in almost every province of the Dominion do see the abolition of strong drink an earnest item in the programme of legislative reform. Why not in Ontario? The Government clings to its license system, presumably for the sake of the revenue it yields, which in effect is only a mill on the dollar of the actual waste it represents. It costs the Province of Ontario many times over, the whole of its revenue from strong drink to meet the waste, the loss from unemployment, alleviation of drink-created misery, the dealing with drink-created crime, not to speak of the drink-created industrial waste, the impairment of efficiency of workers, the suffering in countless homes, the every-day tragedies, social and domestic; the moral ruin wrought by drink through the law-sheltered drink traffic. The Government would spring to energitic activity, if a great fire were raging in our forest lands; it would not hesitate before doing something to cope with the disaster, and to take measures to prevent recurrence. Then why should not the Government be logical? The logical course would be in regard to the drink traffic, to concentrate as much energy upon preventing the evils it brings as in dealing with the consequences of its operation.

Nobody will claim that the question of drink being an evil to the individual and the community, is, at all, a debatable question. Even the beneficiaries of the traffic recognize its evil effects; and hotel men in Toronto are cooperating with the authorities to keep drink from enlisted soldiers. If we keep drink from them because it is bad, why not be logical and keep it from all our other men?

There is nothing to prevent the Government of this province from dealing effectively with the drink problem. Public opinion is aroused and would be behind them in taking the most drastic measures to abolish drink. The Opposition in the Legislature is pledged to support such action. Logically the Government is under moral compulsion to take action. That it does not do so, forces the belief that political reasons, reasons of petty partizan profit, restrain the Government. The Government knows, and we all know, that if the question of the abolition of the bar, or even the complete extinction of the liquor traffic, were submitted to the people, and the people were allowed to vote without the interference of the partizan spirit, the verdict would be overwhelmingly in favour of a sober Ontario, a commercially, industrially, and morally sound Ontario. We vote money; we impose direct taxation for the first time in Ontario, for war purposes; yet we perpetuate a system that diverts from useful avenues of employment, an amount of money many times greater than what we directly, as in duty bound, devote to war purposes. Why do we do it? Logically, we, and altogether apart from sentiment, we, the Government and the people who make governments, are called upon to do our duty.

In retaining anything that prevents our doing our full duty, prevents the full force of our contribution in men, money and morale, we are acting the part of traitors—we are to an extent and degree, indirectly helping the enemy.

EAGER FOR PEACE.

One thing is now clear; the German Government is eager for peace. It is making strenuous though naturally subterranean efforts to bring about a peace negotiation. We do not suppose that it is in such desperate plight as to be willing to make humiliating concessions. It is probably prepared to end the contest approximately by a return to the status quo ante. The failure of its war would be obscured by territorial exchanges in and out of Europe and a jumble of criss-cross political concessions. Germany would have her experience as the reward of her experiment and an unshattered organization upon which to built new naval and military power for a fresh attempt in 1920 or 1925. It would yield nothing real in the way of indemnity for the ravages of its armies or in guarantee for the future safety and peace of Europe.—New York Sun.

ONLY REDEEMING FEATURE IN MANITOBA.

The most regrettable fact in the report (Manitoba Royal Commission) is the finding of Mr. Roblin, Dr. Montague, Mr. Coldwell and Mr. Howden, all members of the recent Cabinet, to be implicated in the disgraceful proceedings. The whole affair is one of which all honest Canadians must be heartily ashamed, and we can only hope that such punishment may be meted out to the offenders as will help to deter any others from attempting to repeat the offence. For members of a Provincial Cabinet to lend themselves to such wholesale robbery of the province is inexcusable and should be punishable. About the only redeemable feature in the case is Manitobas prompt and emphatic repudiation of the men who had so grievously betrayed their trust. —Christian Guardian.

The Value of Preparation In Peace as Well as in War

The old maxim, "In time of peace prepare for war," has been abundantly vindicated by the present war. To give the Germans their due they excel in three things, organization, preparation and unscrupulousness. Contrary to their own notions they are not remarkable for inventiveness, although they make up to some extent for that deficiency by their adaptiveness. Unfortunately for them, these advantages were qualified by an overwhelming conceit and arrogancy which tempted them to presume upon these advantages, and ultimately betrayed them to their own undoing.

But whatever measure of success has been achieved in the early stages of the campaign by the Germans has been gained by their unquestionable superiority to the rest of the world in preparedness for war, which, of course, involves organization. We say nothing about unscrupulousness because even from the most utilitarian point of view it is a questionable advantage. Strangely enough, at the outbreak of hostilities the one nation that, like the recipient of the gold-headed cane, "was taken completely by surprise, but made a neat speech," was the only nation in the world which was actually prepared for war. Belgium was absolutely unprepared; France in a more advanced state of preparation than usual, was away behind Germany in many essentials; Great Britain was sinfully proud of its unpreparedness for land warfare, and how the navy came to be ready for business still remains a mystery both to Britons and Germans. But the navy is generally ready for business on some scale, and the Admiralty was away ahead of the War Office. The war has revealed the secret that preparedness for war nowadays involves much more than preparation for the autumn manoeuvres, much more than seeing that every soldier is provided with a tunic and a water bottle; and that every tunic is properly equipped "to the last button."

What does preparedness for war include? It involves questions of finance (the celebrated war chest of Spandau is only a child's money box in wars like this); of industrial organization; of supplies of foodstuffs for both civilians and troops; of employment for all classes; of mobilization both for the field and for the factories of munitions of war; of military training; and last, but not least, of industrial organization. In all of these particulars the war caught the British ludicrously unprepared— except in the case of the navy; and the preparedness and efficiency of the British navy has already won the war for the Allies and for civilization. The one brilliant exception has saved the world from Kultur.

Perhaps the greatest weakness of all, and certainly in Canada, is in industrial organization. The war found the Empire actually dependent upon the enemy country not only for some of the essential ingredients in munitions of war but for the ordinary requirements in times of peace. This is remarkably true in the matter of chemical industries. German adaptiveness and unscrupulousness has seized the fruit of British inventiveness and by its really marvellous organizing ability Germany has made the British Empire dependent for a time at least upon Germany for the products of British brain power. It will be no small set-off to the damage caused by the war, if it forces Britons to be more self-dependent and to take more thought for the morrow. We have already paid too high a price for "Made in Germany" cheap adaptations of British ideas, and we have to sit down and do more sober thinking on these subjects.

Facts and Figures As to The Heavy Toll Of The Drink Traffic

To the Editor: People are slow to comprehend the immensity of the burden laid on their shoulders by the liquor traffic. Some time ago I made the statement that it cost five times as much to look after the mischief wrought by the liquor traffic as the revenue receives from it. I also said that if the money spent in drink were spent in useful articles, it would give employment to eight times as many men as are now engaged in the manufacture of liquor. I was immediately asked for proof. That was easily done because I only stated what anyone can demonstrate mathematically for themselves. But that is much less than the real facts. Everyone knows that there is a great deal of expenditure and loss that cannot be calculated. For instance, very few know how much they give to private charities that are to a great extent made necessary by the drink habit. Losses by sickness, death, loss of time, loss by bad debts, etc., cannot be estimated. So that instead of being five times, it may possibly be double that amount.

Other places report a similar proportion "members of the Dauphin County Board of Poor Directors, Pennsylvania, have announced that caring for the victims of the liquor traffic costs Dauphin County including the City of Harrisburg, more than five times as much as the revenue receives from the business. The revenues of the City and County from the liquor business amounts to $34,315.00 while the two governments spend $186,000.00 in partially remedying the harm that liquor does."

Professor Longacre of Washington, D.C., speaking at Atlantic City recently, said: "The liquor traffic is a revenue consumer. It takes five times as much to care for criminals, paupers and orphans for which the saloon is responsible as the amount of the revenues paid to the government by the breweries and distilleries."

From a Government report we find that there are 4,688 persons engaged in the breweries and distilleries. We also learn that there is one person employed in useful industries for every $2,582 invested. From these figures anyone can prove that the hundred million dollars spent in drink would give employment to eight times four thousand six hundred and eighty-eight. And if you add to this the amount invested in liquor manufacture, the sum total would give employment to nearly twelve times the number of men employed in the breweries and distilleries. In every way the liquor traffic is the enemy of labour, a burden of the sober man and a menace to the nation.

We pin our faith to facts. Give the people the plain, unvarnished facts and they will soon settle this question. Everyone can help in this fight against an enemy worse than the Germans, by taking the "Pioneer" or any other temperance paper and when he has read it, handing it to his neighbour.—H. The Handicap of Bigness.

Many have thought that the mere bigness of the mail order houses enables them to sell more cheaply than the local merchant. On the contrary, bigness entails vastly increased expenses, out of proportion to the increased business. Trace your order through mail-openers, checkers, cashiers, more checkers, billers, still more checkers, shippers, teamsters, etc., with checkers to check the checkers at every step. Then consider the enormous taxes and rents they have to pay. You will find that your local merchant, who superintends his own business, is in a position to give you better service at the same or better prices.

At the morning service thirty-three were confirmed by His Lordship. The morning subject was "The Duties of a Christian," and his evening subject "The Infallability of the Church of Christ."

Mr. A. Breault read an address of welcome to the Bishop, on behalf of the congregation, as follows:

To the Rt. Rev. M. J. O'Brien, Bishop of Peterborough.

May it please Your Lordship—On the occasion of your first official visit to the Parish of Norwood, we desire to extend to you a sincere welcome and to give utterance to the sentiments of devotedness and respect we entertain towards you, personally, and towards the high office you have been called upon to occupy.

The visit of a Bishop to a parish makes an epoch in its life. He comes as the representative of the august head of the universal Church, to remind us of the bond that unites us to the Church, Catholic and Apostolic, to preach to us the doctrine once delivered to the Apostles, and to confer the graces which the fullness of the priesthood enables him to bestow. The older members of the parish, in the sunset of life, welcome you, my Lord, as their bishop, and desire to express to you the consolation their faith affords them in their declining years. The son and daughters of the old, the younger men and women of the parish, welcome you, and beg to express to you their loving allegiance, and their unwavering devotion to the Church of their youth. The children of the parish, my Lord, are also present to welcome you, and to receive blessings and counsel from the representative of Him who once said "Suffer the little children to come unto Me." But we all, young and old, have other reasons for rejoicing on the occasion of your visit to this parish. You are not a stranger to us. You were born, and lived from your childhood in this diocese, and you are known personally to the majority of our parish. We have followed your career as a young priest, and we were pleased to learn that your early priestly labours were rewarded by your elevation to an office wherein your talents and your energy would find greater scope for exercise, and would be instrumental in conferring on the entire diocese blessings that might have been reserved for a single parish.

We welcome you, therefore, as our Bishop, to whom we express filial obedience. We welcome you also as a personal friend, who has a deep concern in all our interests, temporal as well as eternal, and who will be ever ready to aid us to become worthy members of the divine institution to which we belong.

The children on whom you have this morning conferred the Sacrament of Confirmation will have special reason for remembering your visit to this parish. They are the first fruits of your Episcopal labours in our midst, and we trust that they will prove worthy recipients of the graces they have this day received.

In concusion, my Lord, we desire to express the hope that God may spare you many long years to continue the work you have so well begun, and we humbly beg of you that you may remember us from time to time in your prayers to God.

Occupants Were Badly Shaken up But Were Not Injured—Rural School Fair at Westwood a Success

HASTINGS, September 21. — The special train on the G.T.R. on Saturday evening proved a great convenience to the visitors to the Peterboro Exhibition, giving them the privilege of an all day visit to the city.

A collision between two autos occurred on the Norwood road last week resulting in a severe shaking up of the occupants but fortunately all escaped without serious injury.

Those who took in the Rural School Fair at Westwood on Tuesday were well pleased with the exhibits and the different speakers, also the patriotic nature of the proceedings.

The millinery opening last week proved quite interesting to the fair sex. Miss Paquette is in charge and has just returned from a visit to the fall openings in Toronto.

The latest reports are to the effect that Mr. Stillman is doing as well as could be expected.

HOW PERISCOPE CAN "LOOK AROUND CORNER"

Writer Describes Ten Different Types Now in Use in War Zone

The invention and perfection of periscopes for submarines offers a fertile field to the optician. Earnest Coustet writes an article on periscopes in La Nature, Paris, in which he describes something like ten different types now in use and mentions the fact that there are many others.

The simplest form of periscopes, according to the Frenchman, is the 20-foot verticle steel tube, which is really nothing but a telescope fitted with prism so that the line of sight will "turn a corner." A rough adaptation of this is that in use in the trenches. The instrument takes in 45 degrees of the horizon, or one-eighth the total field. The rest of the field comes in sight when the tube is turned on its axis. Says Mr. Coustet:

"This periscope gives very clear images, but as it can be used with only one eye at a time it does not allow of distinguishing the different planes of vision very well, and tires the observer's eye rather quickly. Binocular periscopes have been attempted, but luminosity is lost by gaining the advantage of stereoscopic vision.

"The so-called combination periscope allows of vision with both eyes, though it is not stereoscopic. A real image is thrown on a ground-glass screen, much like that of a phonograph-camera; it may be looked at with the two eyes, but no impression of depth and space is given. The screen avoids excessive fatigue, but it can be used only in bright light. The size of the image is often insufficient to bring out detail. To obtain greater enlargement without diminishing clearness too much, magnifying-lenses are sometimes added.

"The preceding periscopes do not enable a commander to take a rapid survey of the horizon; it takes five to ten seconds to make a complete circle. Again, the observer must himself move around with the eyepiece. If the image is to remain upright without moving the eyepiece, it is necessary to use a compensation prism whose movement makes up for that of the eyepiece.

"This is the principle of the panoramic periscope whose tube is fixed and bears at its summit a glass bulb containing a reflecting prism mounted on a base that may be turned with a handle. There is a compensating prism that turns at half the speed and keeps the image straight.

"To observe successfully all points of the horizon, it suffices to turn the crank, without it being necessary for either observer or eyepiece to change place.

"Nevertheless, however rapid the operation, it does not enable the observer to see the whole horizon at once. This is realized in the periscope with ring-shaped eyepiece. At the top of the tube is a ring-shaped lens which retracts toward the base of the tube rays that reach it from all sides. A panoramic image is thus obtained that includes all surrounding objects, though they appear smaller and more distant than with the naked eye. The observer also sees, in the centre of the panoramic image, a portion of the field on a larger scale."— Kansas City Times.

Hindenburg Occupies The City of Vilna

LONDON, Sept. 20.—The Germans have occupied Vilna, and by a wide-sweeping movement to the north of that city have succeeded in almost, if not entirely, surrounding a portion of the Russian army which is fighting in the railway triangle between Vilna, Lida and Vileika. At any rate, the Russian forces in this district either must fight their way out eastward or retire in a south-easterly direction, for the only railway left entirely in their hands is that which runs from Vilna to Lida and thence to Baranovitchi.

The army of Field Marshal von Hindenburg, which took Vilna and has reached Vileika, to the east of Vilna, is working in close co-operation with that of Archduke Leopold of Bavaria in an effort to catch a part of the Russian army, an operation which has been so often tried without success since the Austro-German commenced their drive in Western Galicia in early May.

The Russians expressed confidence in the outcome of the battle, which must be decided before complete success falls to one side or the other, but with their northern armies closely held along the Dvina and the German flank well protected by their cavalry, which recently occupied Widsy, across the Vilna-Petrograd railway, it seems impossible that any aid can come to them from that direction. The battle seemingly must be fought out between the troops now in the district between Vilna, Lida and Slonim with the assistance of any reinforcements that can be spared to hold the German force which has reached Vileika.

At the southern end of the line General Ivanoff is still keeping Field Marshal von Mackensen at arm's length from the fortress of Rovno, the key to the route to Kiev, and in counter-attacks has retaken a number of villages both in Volhynia and Galicia. It seems apparent from the inability of the Austro-Germans to hold their positions in the southern area that they have sent reinforcements from that front to Field Marshal von Hindenburg's northern army, which as heretofore, is expected to score the biggest success.

1st Harvest Festival An Entire Success

The first harvest festival at the Byeaville Sunday School held last night was a complete success. With a large display of fruits, vegetables, plants and other goods, the hall was abundantly adorned with the season's harvest. Some of Mr. F. Wise's prize-winning plants appeared in the array and were a most welcome gift as was also a donation of Quaker Oats from Mr. W. H. Denham. Adjt. McElhiney auctioned the articles which returned a considerable sum. Sergeant John Cunningham and Mrs. Cunningham received unsparing assistance from members of the Sunday School and other residents of that neighbourhood.

SUBWAY CAVED IN

Two Hundred People Dropped Thirty Feet Into a Great Gap in Street

Special to The Examiner:

NEW YORK, Sept. 22.—Two hundred persons dropped thirty feet into a great gap in Seventh avenue, today when the subway, under construction, caved in for an entire block.

Estimates of dead and injured were still widely at variance on account of the great confusion, and ranged anywhere from one dead to 25.

A big brewery truck went down in the crash. Many persons were hurled from sidewalks into the great trench, and everyone who was on the street itself was engulfed.

At 9:30 the police said that there were two known dead.

New York City, Sept. 22.—Official police estimates this afternoon indicated six killed and hundreds injured more or less, in the subway cave-in on Seventh Avenue. The police have charge of the situation and are investigating proceedings.

ERNIE MARKS CO.

Coming to The Grand For All Next Week

Commencing on Monday night next, Sept. 27, The Ernie Marks Co., supported by Ernie and Kitty Marks, will fill a week's engagement at The Grand Opera House. This popular company needs no introduction to local theatre-goers, for capacity houses have always greeted them here. Good standard plays are always well interpreted by The Marks Co., and the vaudeville features put on between acts are always bright and amusing. The aim of the company is to give patrons a little more for their money than they expected, and in this is the big secret of the Marks Bros. success. For the opening play "A Receipt in Full" will be presented. This is an entirely new bill full of sparkling comedy, and possessing a deep thrilling plot. The seat sale for Monday night will open Friday morning. For Tuesday night "Amy of the Circus" will be presented. There will be the usual Saturday matinee.

Arts and Crafts Column

In this column, conducted by Mr. Hughson Johnstone, painter and decorator, 152 College Street, will be answered —on Wednesdays — questions of the kind given below, for the benefit of those who, in this period of stringency and enforced and suggested economy, might like doing their own work. Questions relating to painting, signwriting, paperhanging, furniture polishing, and decorating may be sent to the Examiner, and will receive attention in due course.

John Moran, Peterborough, Ont.—Is there any mixture or polish I can get to make linoleum look fresh after it has got dull?

Ans.—Yes, there are on the market many makes of varnish entirely suitable. Your dealer will recommend one to you, or you may simply oil the linoleum with equal parts of boiled linseed oil and turpentine applied very evenly with a rag. Another way is to wax it and polish as you would a hardwood floor. The varnish treatment is best. The others are much cheaper yet fairly satisfactory.

An Admirer, Peterborough, Ont.—Through your "Arts and Crafts" column kindly tell me the proper proportions to use to make a chocolate colour?

Ans.—I cannot give exact proportions, as there are different shades of chocolate. But I will put you in line so that you may make chocolate colour and you can vary the shade to suit your own particular conception of chocolate. To burnt amber add a small quantity of lake or carmine, or take Indian red and black with a very little golden ochre; a very little white may be used if necessary.

Anxious, North Monaghan.—I have a bedroom just freshly papered, but the wet has come through the ceiling and stained it. Would the stain show through if kalsomined over it, or would I need to have it stripped?

Ans.— I hardly understand your question, whether you intend to kalsomine the whole ceiling or merely to whiten the stained portion. If it is only the stain that you want to hide it would be better to put a piece of the ceiling paper over it, especially as it has recently been papered. But if you intend to kalsomine the whole ceiling I would certainly advise stripping it first, unless the ceiling is in bad shape beneath the paper. But in any case coat over the stain with a solution of sugar of lead first to kill the stain.

Unexperienced, City.— Would panelling have a nice effect in a dining room 15x13x10 feet, without a plate rail? If so would you kindly tell me the amount of paper required?

Ans.—Panelling is largely a matter of individual taste and is controlled almost entirely by environments. The question of a plate rail or its absence is of little importance to the symmetrical manipulation of panelling when in the hands of an experienced decorator. As to the quantity of strapping required it is impossible for me to say being, ignorant of the shape and details of your room. However I can give you the quantities for ceiling and wall. 8 rolls of ceiling, 17 rolls of wall should do.

Barkus, Homewood Ave.—Is there any way I can putty, or with other composition fill a small dent in a polished mahogany table top?

Ans.—I would not suggest using any sort of a filler; it is sure to be very unsatisfactory. Try this. Take a damp cloth and lay it on the dent, then with a hot poker, barely touch or perhaps better, nearly touch the cloth directly over the dent; it may require two or three applications. But if you are careful, the hot poker will draw up the dent fairly level. Then a few drops of olive, or sweet, or lemon oil, rubbed over the spot, should make it O. K.

Careless, Peterborough, Ont.— My room has just had an expensive paper put on it, and unfortunately some careless person has knocked a piece of the paper off in a most conspicuous spot. I have not a scrap of the paper left to patch it. But could touch it over with paint if I knew how to make the shade. It is about the colour of crushed strawberries. Will you please tell me how to make it?

Ans.—If you think you can touch it up with paint, I will tell you how to make crushed strawberry. But do not use oil paint. Mix to a stiff paste a little whiting in water, then add in powder form or ground in water, some rose pink until you get the desired hue; a wee bit of chrome yellow may be necessary to tone it. Then thin it with gelatine that has been dissolved in water. As this distemper colour dries very much lighter, you will have to test your colour on a sheet of paper first.

CANADIAN NURSES OF FIRST CONTINGENT NOW AT DARDANELLES

Major Regan, paymaster for the Canadian nurses who went to the front with the first Canadian contingent passed through the city yesterday on his way to the Niagara military camp. The Canadian nurses of the first contingent, including Miss Beatrice Blewett of this city, are now at the Dardanelles. They are stationed at Mudros, on the Island of Lemnos. Major Regan witnessed their departure from England on August the first for the Dardanelles. They arrived at Egypt on August 11th, where they remained a week before proceeding to Mudros for duty. Owing to the terrific heat and the arduous duties of the nurses, as a result of the severe fighting at the Dardanelles, the Canadian nurses may possibly only remain in the East three months, when it is thought likely they will be relieved and return to England on furlough. Major Regan paid a splendid tribute to the ability, courage and heroism of the Canadian nurses.

Life Crushed By Money

Dramatic Scene in Famous NewYork Church When Pastor Confesses

NEW YORK, Sept. 22.—The Rev. Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, noted Brooklyn preacher, successor to Henry Ward Bleecher and Lyman Abbott in Plymouth Church, one of the most famous in America, and author of books on religious subjects, told his congregation that his life-long ambitions for wealth and power had utterly crushed out his life.

Ambition he declared, had brought him to the brink of poverty, and humbled him so that, he said, he was not worthy to unloose the shoe laces of a poor worker of the slums.

A solemn hush fell upon the old Church. Members of the congregation for weeks had been reading in the papers of the financial troubles of their pastor. Serious innuendos concerning rim had reached their ears.

Then, their pastor for 16 years, his face white and drawn with the agony of an inner struggle, humbled himself before them and threw himself upon their mercy.

As the preacher declared that his love of position, wealth and honour had caused him to fall from his ideals, aged men and women bowed their grey heads, and young people gazed as though at some dramatic action upon a stage.

It was clear from the preacher's words that "the storm of alternate blame and praise," as he himself termed it, broke over his head with a violence that all but overcame him.

Doctor Hillis read his formal statement monotonously. It was strictly an admission that the speaker had strayed from the path which a "true prophet of God" ought to follow.

In these words, pronounced with heat and fervor, Doctor Hillis referred specifically to himself as "a man who has stumbled and lived below his ideals," and used words of merciless reproach.

Having once publicly admitted his passion for money and fame and its disastrous consequences, the closing words of his sermon were aimed to point a lesson to the younger generation.

The depths of the preacher's spiritual abasement and mental mortification were indicated by words like these taken from his sermon:

"For the man who has stumbled, who has lived below his ideals, as I have lived, and you have lived, there is always left the mercy of God."

Although Doctor Hillis did not make any statement today, Frederick W. Hinrichs, his attorney, confirmed the report that Doctor Hillis propose to sell his handsome home in Monroe place, and apply the proceeds toward the liquidation of his debts.

The activities of Doctor Hillis caused further unpleasantness when a summons in a suit for $50,000 for libel, brought by his nephew, Percy D. Hillis, of Victoria, B.C., was served on the minister.

There are families in Peterborough who have three or four representatives in the ranks. Others with grown-up sons have sent no one. There is a fine chance for the latter class to join the 80th Battalion.

Lakefield Fair Director Dead

Death came with startling suddenness yesterday to Allan Trennum of the seventh concession, Smith township. Deceased, who is a director of the Lakefield Fair, was rolling the race track at the Lakefield fair grounds. He completed the operation about two o'clock in the afternoon and was about to unhitch the horses when he was stricken with heart failure. Dr. Fraser, of Lakefield, was summoned, but the man was beyond medical aid when he arrived. Deceased leaves a wife and one child. He was a comparatively young man and was well known and highly respected in the community.

Yesterday was the first day of the fair. Trennum, together with a number of others, were engaged in putting the finishing touches on the grounds, in preparation for the races, which are to be held today.

BASE IN THE ENGLISH CHANNEL

"Fishermen" Were Supplying German Submarines

NEW YORK, Sept. 22.—That Germany secretly established a submarine base on Guernsey Island, in the English Channel, and that thirty supposed fishermen captured there proved to be enlisted men in the German navy, was the information brought to New York to-day by Frank S. Perr of Ithica, N.Y., who arrived on the liner Minnehaha.

"These 'fishermen' were caught setting casks of petrol adrift for the submarines to pick up," said Mr. Perr. They probably will be shot.

"It is reported in England that 28 German submarines have been caught in steel nets set by the English."

A Fascinating Display
Of The Cutest Styles Imaginable
In "Young Folks'" Headwear For Autumn

"LITTLE MISS CANADA" will hardly be able to contain herself when she gets her first glimpse of these New Autumn styles. We seldom remember having such an extensive display, and never were the styles so varied and undeniably snappy and cute. Velvet, Silk and Velvet and Felts are shown in numberless new designs. The Glengarry Tam, Highland Bonnet, Napoleon, Turban and straight brimmed styles with soft crowns predominate. A special feature of the showing are the bonnets for "Wee Tots" of three to six years. These are particularly captivating. They are shown in velvets, corded silks and silk poplins in a full range of newest Autumn colors. Fond Mothers who take a keen interest in the smart appearance of their children would indeed be doing them an injustice by not bringing them along to see and try on a few of these stunning creations. Low prices prevail throughout the entire display.

SPLENDID PATRIOTIC MEETING

to the audience the tremendous conflict that was being waged. He showed that Germany had been preparing for forty years for the struggle, and demonstrated that it would require all the resources of Great Britain and her allies to defeat her. Germany, through her belief that she was the chosen of God, was striving to dominate the world and make good her doctrine that "might was right". Every man must come forward in the British Empire so that there would be a superiority in numbers sufficient to crush the enemy, and to drive that idea from their minds for ever. Mr. Hall said that he did not want to dwell altogether on the gloomy side of the situation. He rapidly sketched the plans of the German leaders, and showed how Sir John French's little army, by fighting the greatest rear-guard action in the history of the world, had blocked them almost at the gates of Paris. He pictured how the German flag had been driven from the seas; how the enemy had lost his Asiatic possessions, and, through the loyalty of General Louis Botha and the Boers, had been wrested of her African colonies. But more men must come forward so that the enemy might be finally crushed. Canadians were not helping the motherland—they were fighting for their own liberty when they entered upon this war and if Canada was doing her duty in proportion to the spirit shown in Britain, she should have 500,000 men in the army, or at the front, instead of the 75,000 we have at present. Mr. Hall closed with an eloquent appeal for recruits.

Rev. Mr. McConnachie.

An appeal that was striking in its earnestness and sincerity was made by the Rev. A. H. McConnachie of South Monaghan. "We are living in a time that is big with tremendous issues. I pity any one who can live his ordinary life as if these big things were not going on in the world," he said. It was a time when young men should consider the investment of their lives. There were people who might reach the three score years and ten who would not do as much for good as the young man of twenty, who went to the front and offered his life for the principles that were at stake in this great conflict. Many young men had answered the call as a call to God, as he believed sincerely it was.

Rev. Canon Allen.

Rev. Canon Allen of Millbrook, the next speaker, said he had been impressed by the seriousness of a call which brought men of different nationalities, religious and political beliefs together on one platform to appeal for recruits. It was a solemn thing to ask mothers to give up sons, wives to give up husbands, and girls their young men, but it must be done, or else the last line of the old song of which they were so fond would have to be changed from "Britons never shall be slaves" to "Britons ever shall be slaves." He appealed to the young men of Millbrook and the surrounding district to come forward and enlist.

Rev. Mr. Butler.

Rev. Mr. Butler of Cavanville suggested that a meeting be held in his district. He felt sure that the young men of that neighbourhood would respond if the situation was placed squarely before them, and offered every assistance in his power to help the work along. Rev. Mr. Butler referred to the world war as a conflict between ideas, and emphatically declared that there never was a nation that stood more for honour and truth than did Great Britain in the present struggle.

Rev. Canon Davidson.

Rev. Canon Davidson was called upon. He said that he had not come to the meeting as a speaker, but merely on the ground of comradeship. On that ground he wished to appeal to the young men. "These men here in the khaki uniforms," he said, pointing to the 80th Band, "and their chums in Peterborough want comrades. Come along and join them. You have no idea of what a splendid body of men we have up there and they will give you a hearty welcome. Canon Davidson discussed briefly the provisions that were being made to look after soldiers at the front and their loved ones at home. His address roused the audience to a high pitch of enthusiasm.

Lt.-Col. Johnston.

Lieut. Col. Johnston, second in command of the 80th Battalion, was the last speaker, and he was greeted with cheers while the band played "He's a Jolly Good Fellow."

"There are two things needed" stated Lt.-Col. Johnston "recruits and the Red Cross." We must do everything we can to look after the welfare of the men who are wounded, and we must have men to fill up the gaps in the ranks. The best gift you can send to the boys at the front is more men to help them. We have a splendid body of men in Peterborough, and I am proud to say that there has not been a black mark against one of them."

The meeting was brought to a close by the National Anthem and three cheers for the King.

During the programme the band of the 80th, under Bandmaster Hughes, played "Oh Canada," "Rule Britannia," "Tipperary" and other patriotic airs, in fine style. The Band made a fine impression on the people of Millbrook.

In addition to the list of those published yesterday who furnished cars, thanks is due to Dr. Frank, who was on hand with his car and took a number out to the meeting.

Sergt.-Major Mills remained in Millbrook to-day to look after the recruiting there.

"Bonnie Dundee" has been selected as the regimental march for the 80th Battalion Band. The rollicking Scottish air with its lilting melody and irresistible swing makes an ideal march. And Bandmaster Hughes and his boys do justice to it, too.

The band of the 80th were given leave of absence from this morning's parade on account of their presence at last night's recruiting meeting at Millbrook.

Kingston Whig: On the order board in front of the orderly tent of the 33rd Battery, a notice is posted stating that all men who get a pass to go to Lindsay or Peterborough on any of the surrounding towns must deposit the sum of $1 the cost of having their throat swobbed when they return. This is being done as it is feared that the men might contract a disease which is said to be going the rounds in that locality.

Kingston Standard: Yesterday afternoon Lieut. Douglas Huycke delivered a lecture to the men of the 33rd Battery on ammunition. Lieut. Douglas Huycke is a brother of Lieut. G. M. Huycke of the same battery, and of Lieut. Huycke of the 59th Battalion. All are sons of Judge Huycke of Peterborough.

Kingston Standard: Capt Layfield, quartermaster of the 80th Battalion, has three large tents in which he is handling the clothing and supplies of the 80th. A staff of clerks have been secured and the work is rapidly assuming systematic shape.

Captain Cecil Arnott of the Strathcona Horse, who was operated on for appendicitis at the Canadian Stationary Hospital at Rouen, France, according to a letter received by his parents in this city, is making favourable progress. He is now at Dieppe and expects to have a furlough and may probably come home when he is sufficiently convalescent to travel.

A recruiting meeting will be held at Centreville on Monday night. The speakers will be J. H. Burnham, M. P., Rev. J. R. Webb, and Lt.-Col. Miller.

HAS DIFFICULTY. CCATCCCC

NEW YORK, Sept 22.—William F. Connor, who again will direct Mme Sarah Bernhardt's American tour, gave out two causes for her delay in coming to New York to keep her engagement.

Mme. Bernhardt has not mastered the difficulties of using an artificial leg and men of her supporting company are fighting for their country.

Both these obstacles to her return to America are speedily to be overcome, however, and Mr. Connor said the tragedienne would appear in New York by the end of November in her now play "Jeanne Dore," from the pen of Tristan Bernard, in the New Amsterdam Theatre.

Mr. Connor explained that the zeal of the manufacturer of Mme. Bernhardt's limb had caused part of the trouble. In his efforts to perfect the leg he overlooked minor details which made it impracticable, so Mme. Bernhardt had ordered a new one, but would retain both. Mr. Connor said she would bring three legs if she felt the need of that many.

"She is determined to keep her promise to return to America," he said, "and a detail like the task of learning to walk in new conditions will not deter her. Besides, canes now are fashionable and she might be in the prevailing mode if she thought it necessary. But she will act as usual and in all probability it will not be necessary for her to use a cane."

The other cause of the change in the date of her coming has been overcome through Mme. Bernhardt's influence with the French War Department. The government, Mr. Connor stated, had promised to release the men of her organization now at the front. Four of her actors have been slain in battle. She is engaging other players to take their places, and to facilitate her arrangements the other members of her company are to be released from service. The entire organization will leave Bordeaux with Mme. Bernhardt when she starts.

One man who has seen the actress three hundred and forty-two times has reserved two seats for every performance which she gives in New York.

Fred Denison says soldiering is a far better game than hockey. He has tried them both. There is room for a lot of athletes in the 80th Battalion.

GRAPHIC STORY OF THE FIGHTING IN GALLOPOLI

LONDON, Sept 21.—How the British and French through the summer kept at grips with the Turks in Gallipoli, with terrible losses on both sides in the arid, congested area, where the gain or loss of a few yards of trenches measured the tide of battle, and the dead lay so thick that a temporary armistice was imperative, is related by General Sir Ian Hamilton, commander of the British forces, in a despatch to Lord Kitchener made public in London this evening.

Covering the fighting in the Dardanelles from May 5 to July 1, the account sheds little light on the general military situation, being mainly noteworthy as a soldier's description of what the contenders endured. Indirectly it pays a tribute to the gallantry and fighting qualities of the Turks.

Going back to May 5, soon after the allies obtained their first footing on the peninsula, General Hamilton relates how the commanders, hard pressed for reinforcements found it necessary to mix the French and British troops "to an extent even of the French on our right having a British battalion holding their own most extreme right."

Three Day's Battling.

Following then three days of terrible fighting, with Krithia as the objective.

"The steady advance of the British," says the General, "could be followed by the sparkle of bayonets, until the long lines entered the smoke-clouds. The French at first made no move; then, their drums beating and bugles sounding the charge, they suddenly darted forward in a stream of skirmishers, which seemed for a moment to cover the whole southern face of the ridge of Kereves Dere.

"Against these the Turkish gunners turned their heaviest pieces, and, as the leading group stormed the first Turkish rebout, in black bursts, explosive shells blotted out both assailants and assailed.

French Troops Triumph.

"The trial was too severe for the Senegalese Tirailleurs. They recoiled; they rallied. Another rush forward; another rupulse. Then a small supporting column of French soldiers were silhouetted against the sky as they charged upwards along the crest of Kereves Dere.

"Not until next morning did any reliable details come of what had happened. The net result of three days' fighting had been a gain of 600 yards on the right of the British and 400 on the left and in the centre. The French captured all the ground in front of Farm Sjimmerman, as well as the redoubt."

The German leaders of the Turks were quick to realize the advantage the attackers had gained. General Hamilton continues, and by counter-attack after counter-attack tried to wrest away the trenches they had lost.

"Everywhere our assailants were repulsed," says the account "and now for the first time I felt that we had planted a fairly firm foothold upon the point of Gallipoli Peninsula." This was on May 10, and General Hamilton was able to relieve some of the exhausted men on the firing line after eighteen days and nights of uninterrupted fighting.

Siege Warfare Necessary.

"During this breathing spell," says Gen. Hamilton. "I realized the limit of what could be attained, mingling initiative with surprise. The enemy was as much in possession of my numbers and dispositions as I was of his first line of defence. The opposing fronts stretched parallel from the sea to the strait, and now there was little scope left for tactics which would bring fresh battalions against the lines of unbroken barbed wire. Siege warfare was soon bound to supersede manoeuvre battles in the open."

3,000 Turk Dead.

In preparation for this the British commander tells how he divided the front into four sections; then describes the fitful fighting up to May 18, when the Turks made a most violent assault on the British positions with forces estimated at 30,000 under command of the German Field Marshal Liman von Sanders himself. But the British held firm, leaving upwards of 3,000 Turks dead within open view of the trenches.

"On May 20 white flags with red crescents began to dot the Turkish lines. Presently a Turkish staff officer and two medical officer met a British officer between the lines, an informal armistice was reached and stretcher parties on both sides began collecting the wounded.

Meanwhile, it was observed that columns were on the march in the valley up which the Turks were accustomed to bring reinforcements. As evening drew on the enemy's concentration continued, and a message was sent stating that no clearing of the dead and wounded could be allowed during the night. The stretcher parties fell back, and immediately firing broke out."

FRESH AT NIGHT

If One Uses the Right Kind of Food.

If by proper selection of food one can feel strong and fresh at the end of a day's work, it is worth while to know the kind of food that will produce this result.

"At the time I commenced the use of Grape-Nuts my health was so poor that I thought I would have to give up my work altogether. I was rapidly losing in weight, had little appetite was nervous and sleepless, and experienced, almost constantly, a feeling of exhaustion.

"I tried various remedies without good results; then I determined to give particular attention to my food, and have learned something of the properties of Grape-Nuts for rebuilding body, brain, and nerves.

"Since using Grape-Nuts I have made a constant and rapid improvement in health, in spite of the fact that all this time I have been engaged in strenuous and exacting work.

"I have gained twelve pounds in weight and have a good appetite, my nerves are steady and I sleep sound. I have such strength and reserve force that I feel almost as strong and fresh at the close of a day's work as at the beginning.

"Before using Grape-Nuts I was troubled much with weak eyes but as my vitality increased the eyes became stronger.

"I never heard of another food as nutritious and economical as Grape-Nuts."

"There's a Reason."

Is Ready to Annex Belgium

Germans May Also Make a German Province Out of Northern France

GENEVA, Sept. 22. — The Lausanne Gazette says it has learned the German government has decided to issue a declaration annexing to the German empire the occupied territories in France and Belgium.

The Gazette says this measure has been determined upon for the near future, because it now appears impossible that the war will be ended, as had been hoped, before winter. According to this newspaper, the German Government intends to organize this conquered territory from a political and administrative standpoint, which is expected to strengthen Germany's moral position. Civil administration has been slowly replacing military rule in the occupied regions and, the Gazette continues, this process will be extended methodically.

VIE IN GIVING UP GOLD.

PARIS, Sept. 21.—Through the stirring of local and professional pride in every part of the country to turn in the largest amounts, the voluntary exchange of gold for paper at the Bank of France and its branches, which had dropped to 50,000,000f. ($10,000,000) weekly, has again risen to 60,000,000f. The railway men have thus far done the most toward swelling the total, and there is also considerable rivalry among parish priests and Mayors of cities, who are issuing calls to the public urging them to give up their gold for their country's sake. As an example, Mayor Bellamy of Nantes posted the following on the billboards of the city to-day:

"Our branch of the Bank of France has taken in fifteen millions in gold, but this is not enough. To keep your gold is to betray the heroes who are giving their blood. Keep your gold and you delay victory. To bring in your gold is to be a good Frenchman. For France, for the honour of Nantes, deposit your gold."

Farmers who came to a fair at a village in Touraine on Wednesday brought to a representative of the Bank of France 45,000f. ($9,000) in two hours.

The negotiations in New York for a loan to France and Great Britain are being watched with great public interest. The newspapers contain columns of telegrams on the subject, devoting more space to it than to the submarine controversy between Germany and the United States.

Mr. John Coughlin, of Hastings, who attends the meetings of the Cheese Board remarked this morning that out of one hundred bags of potatoes recently dug on his land, a quantity representing thirty-five bags were rotten. This condition, he remarked, was general in his neighbourhood, but more favourable reports have emanated from the townships on the higher and sandy ridges.

YOUNG HEIRESS LEAPS 120 FEET TO HER DEATH

NEW YORK, Sept. 21. — Miss Elizabeth Fenley, daughter of Oscar Fenley, president of the National Bank of Kentucky, of Louisville, Ky., and prominent socially throughout the South, killed herself by leaping from the roof of an eight storey loft building at No. 30 West Eighth street into the 30-foot excavation for a new building. Her fall was really ten floors, a distance of about one hundred and twenty feet. She died before reaching St. Vincent's Hospital.

Miss Fenley, who was thirty-one years old and of exceptionally attractive appearance, had suffered a nervous attack following an active season in society last winter. Treatment in Louisville not improving her condition, her physician sent her to this city two months ago to be attended by Dr. William Pritchard, of No 148 West Seventy-second street.

She took a suite of rooms at the Majestic Hotel, Central Park West and Seventy-second street, and Dr. Pritchard assigned Miss Edith Hebb, a nurse, to be Miss Fenley's constant attendant. Miss Hebb lived with Miss Fenley thereafter at the hotel.

Recently an aunt of Miss Fenley, Miss Short, of Louisville, came to this city and she also stopped at the Majestic. Miss Fenley improved, and when Miss Short started back for Louisville Miss Fenley insisted upon accompanying her aunt to the Pennsylvania Station without the escort of her nurse.

Drives with Aunt to Station.

For her sojourn in this city Miss Fenley had engaged a touring automobile and a chauffeur, and unaccompanied by the nurse, she and her aunt drove to the station, where Miss Fenley saw Miss Short off on a train for Louisville.

Miss Fenley's movements thereafter are uncertain until she ended her life, except that she had told Miss Hebb she wished to do some shopping. She was driven to a large store in the downtown section, where she directed the chauffeur that he could return to the garage.

Hundreds of persons were passing through Eighth street at half-past five that evening, while many factories were being emptied of their employees. The factories in the loft building at No. 30 West Eighth street were dismissing their men and women employees when Miss Fenley made her way to the roof. The elevator attendants said they did not take her up, and it is believed she walked up the stairs and was not observed by the scores descending in the elevators.

The scream of a woman from the roof of the building attracted the attention of hundreds in the street, and they looked up in time to see Miss Fenley step off the curbing of the roof. She shot straight down upon the rocks at the bottom of the excavation.

LONDON, Sept. 21.—Stonehedge, the most ancient of British megalithic monuments, has been sold at auction for $33,000 to C. H. E. Chubb, an Englishman.

Stonehedge, the remains of a great prehistoric structure in England, is on Salisbury Plain, Wiltshire. It consists mainly of a circle of vast stones, nearly half of them now prostrate, but which originally supported horizontal stones and of several pairs of huge stone columns arranged with an inner circle of much smaller stones. This monument is generally supposed to date from the Bronze Age.

CANADA'S GREAT GRAIN CROP.

NEW YORK, Sept. 21.—James J. Hill has said repeatedly during his present visit to this city that his chief aim in furthering the efforts of bankers to float the huge credit for England and France is to insure good prices and a good market for American grain. In view of this, sight should not be lost of the record crop of wheat that Canada is also anxious to market abroad. Advices from Fort William and Port Arthur, at the head of Canadian navigation on Lake Superior, tell of the tremendous inflow of wheat from the Western fields which is being stored preliminary to shipment to Europe.

Five hundred carloads of grain are being unloaded every day into the fourteen elevators at those points. These shipments represent merely the overflow from choked elevators at Western cities, and to facilitate shipments it is expected that the Canadian Pacific and other roads operating in Ontario and westward will be hauling as many as 3,000 cars a day to these towns within ten days. The elevators have aggregate capacity of 22,500,000 bushels of wheat.

Efforts are being made to increase the upper-lake fleet of grain boats to handle the harvest. The Canadian vessels number 100, and it is estimated that nearly 500 fresh-water ships, flying the American flag, will soon be carrying Canadian grain to elevators on the lake shore. Through this increase of lake service it is estimated that close to 300,000,000 bushels of wheat will be transported this season from the fields to points convenient for export, compared with the highest past record of 213,000,000 bushels.

C. F. & I. EARNINGS INCREASE.

An increase of $891,288 in net earnings from operation during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1915, over the earnings for the previous year is shown by the annual report of the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company, made public by President Jesse F. Wellborn. Interest and other charges deducted from the net income resulted in a deficit for the year of $334,661, as against a deficit of $905,988 in the previous year.

The report shows gross earnings from operation of $16,578,039 and operating expenses totalling $14,812,951, leaving net earnings from operation $1,765,058. President Wellborn said the reduction in sales was due to a curtailment in the consumption of coal.

PARIS.—So great has been the drain on the French supply of silver, owing doubtless to the large note issues, that orders have been given to stop exportation of silver, and to limit the amount of silver coin which even a traveller must carry out of the country on his person to 50 francs.

GERMAN FINANCIAL POSITION.

The public offer of the third German war loan, which is destined to test the real facts of Germany's economic situation, has now been before the German public for a fortnight or more. It is to be for an unlimited amount, bearing 5 per cent. interest, and is reported to have produced $2,265,000,000 in subscriptions. But between $2,000,000,000 and $3,000,000,000 is also stated by German newspapers to be outstanding in unfunded obligations.

INCREASING RAIL CAPITAL

The capitalization of Canadian railroads increased by $276,990,060 during the fiscal year 1914, and is now nearing the two-billion mark, the exact figure being $1,908,920,761. If the stocks and bonds outstanding for railways under construction are taken into account, the final aggregate of capitalization is $1,962,128,070. Dividends on stock in 1914 amounted to $30,434,601, or $3,101,228 more than in 1913. The interest charges on all bonds were met in full.

C. W. Nash, president of the General Motors Company, stated that profits of the company did not come from war business. "The company," he said, "has not sold a dollar's worth of war material from any of its plants in the United States. The English company has made a deal for something like two hundred and fifty automobiles, which will serve as ambulances in the Red Cross service."

Copper exports from Atlantic ports for the week ended September 16 were 1,986 tons, making a total of 5,497 tons since September 1, as compared with 10,100 tons in the corresponding period last year.

Russian Victories Reported Near The Galicia Border Sapanoff and Dunaoff Taken

Germans Are Dislodged From Dubno Bridgehead---Germans Take Ostrow in Minsk Region, According to Berlin Statement.

LONDON, Sept. 23.—A delayed addition to last night's Petrograd statement has been received as follows:

"Having captured the forest near the village of Jaroslavich, on the Styr, south-east of Lutsk (in Volhynia, Russia, about 25 miles from the Galician border) our troops captured two officers, about 100 soldiers, and two machine guns. After a bayonet assault near the village of Ivanie, on the River Ikwa, in the Dubno region, our troops dislodged the enemy from their [illegible]. In the region north and west of the town of Krementz our troops, after a fight, captured the villages of Sapanof and Dunaeff taking a large number of prisoners.

"The Austrian press seeks to cast doubt on the truth of our communique of September 14, particularly in regard to the passage relating to the enormous number of prisoners taken by our troops during the recent period. The headquarters staff, which already has had occasion to explain its attitude towards the question of guaranteeing the truth of its communiques, declares that the number of prisoners registered and captured during the operations on the south front and in west Russia in the period covering the last days of August and the beginning of September alone, reached a total of 70,000. This figure will be increased considerably when small parties of prisoners who have been captured in numerous encounters and often during disorderly flights of the enemy are brought in. These parties of prisoners were so exhausted that they were not in a fit state to march.

"Latest reports state that in the upper Styr region the enemy is driving before him as he falls back all the cattle he can find, without paying for them or giving receipts."

Germans Take Ostrow.

Berlin, wireless to London, Sept. 23—Bavarian troops under Prince Leopold Tuesday stormed Russian positions on the Myschanka River, on both sides of the Brest Litovsk Minsk railway and captured the city of Ostrow, it was officially announced this afternoon.

The official statement says:

"Army group of Field Marshal von Hindenburg; south-west of Lennewarden, on the Dvina, north-west of [illegible], the Russians attacked. The fighting continues.

"East of Smetina, south-west of Dvinsk, our troops penetrated into enemy positions over a front of three kilometres (nearly 2 miles), wide. We took nine officers and 2,000 men prisoners and captured eight machine guns.

"North-west and south-west of Oschmjana our attack is progressing favourably. On both sides of Suboltniki the Gawia sector has been crossed.

"Army group of Prince Leopold of Bavaria. The Molczadz sector has been crossed to the south-east of the place of that name.

"Russian positions on the western bank of the Myschanka River on both sides of the Brest-Litovsk-Minsk railway were stormed. We captured 1,000 prisoners and five machine guns.

"Further south Ostrow was taken after house to house fighting by our advancing divisions, who crossed the Ozimki Canal near Telechany and threw back the Russians in the direction of Dobroslawka.

"Army group of Field Marshal Von Mackensen. East of Tomaschin there have been minor battles.

"South-eastern theatre of war. There is nothing to report."

81,000 People In Bread Line In City of Brussels

Food is Very Scarce and Restrictions Are Becoming More and More Severe—Many Privileges to Belgians Have Withdrawn.

TORONTO, Sept. 23.—From recent advices that have reached Canada from the interior of Belgium, it appears that the Germans have withdrawn many of the privileges previously accorded to Belgians in the territory occupied by the enemy. So severe has the German Military Government become, that it is no longer possible for a "neutral" to secure a "laisser-passer" which would permit him to cross the frontier into Holland. The instance of a Hollander is quoted, a man who is intimately acquainted with the German officials. He has been held up for three months by the promise that the passport would be forthcoming "to-morrow."

But there are moments when letters will be smuggled out and with them comes information that is often of value. It has been possible to employ the German postal service between Brussels and points in Holland, but only post cards could be used and the necessary language was carefully prescribed by the German officials.

Belgians who are living in England and, who have friends in Canada, have been writing for some time, counselling them strongly not even to make the effort to communicate with members of their families or friends in Belgium. The German Government seizes all letters and employs to its own advantage information therein contained.

This plan, together with the system of espionage, has been successful in bringing to the knowledge of the German government, the names and addresses of practically every Belgian exiled from his native land. It matters not if a Belgian has stopped in England or whether he has come to Canada, the Prussian official at Brussels know his place of abode and what he is doing. Consequently it is a dangerous practice to communicate with friends in Belgium and to make any statement that might be useful to the enemy.

Life in Brussels is becoming more and more monotonous as the restrictions become severe. Food is very scarce, there being 81,000 in the "bread line" every morning. Some of these include men and women, who before the war, were living in the midst of plenty. Only one thing has the German Government done in the Belgian capital that reveals a spirit of fair play, and that is in connection with the schools. They have withdrawn the law which made it compulsory to learn the German language. That is now optional.

FOUR KINDS OF BOMBS SEEN IN THE TRENCHES

English Magazine Describes The Hair Brush and Others.

LONDON, Sept. 23.—There are no other articles on the subject of the war that can compare with those to be found month by month in Blackwood's Magazine. Even the censor has been unable to take the life and spirit out of them, and perhaps because they see the light so long after the events they describe have occurred they contain valuable and interesting information not to be found elsewhere.

A writer in the current number gives an interesting account of the various bombs that are being used in the trenches. He says:

"The hair brush is very like the ordinary hair brush except that the bristles are replaced by a solid block of high explosive. The policeman's truncheon has gay streamers of tape tied to its tail to ensure that it falls to the ground nose downward. Both these bombs explode on impact, and it is undesirable to knock them against anything, say the back of the trench, when throwing them.

"The cricket ball works by a time fuse. The removal of a certain pin releases a spring which lights an internal fuse timed to explode the bomb in five seconds. You take the bomb in your right hand, remove the pin and cast the thing madly from you. The jam tin variety appeals more particularly to the sportsman, as the element of chance enters largely into its successful use. It is timed to explode about ten seconds after the lighting of the fuse."

BAD COLD IN THE CHEST.

"I am happy to tell you that I used Dr Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine and was promptly cured of a very bad cold in the chest," writes Miss Josephine Lauthier, Dover South, Ont. "You can depend on Dr Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine to relieve and cure all inflammations and irritations of the throat and bronchial tubes."

Australians' Casualties Are Placed at 13,976

MELBOURNE, Australia, Sept. 23 (correspondence)—The number of casualties among the 76,000 men that Australia has sent to war was made known by Premier Fisher in a statement to Parliament to-day. The losses, including the men who died in Egypt, and en route since the embarkation of the first contingent in November, 1914, now total some 13,976, he said, of which he gave the following classification:

	Officers.	Others.	Total.
Dead	177	2,855	3,032
Wounded	356	8,756	9,112
Missing	11	725	736
Sick	94	992	1,086
Prisoners	2	8	10
Totals	640	1,336	13,976

The Premier stated that 40,000 troops were now in preparation for the front, and that by early winter the Australian expeditionary forces not counting losses, would have reached a total of 117,000.

Hebrews Are Still Celebrating

This Time it is The Feast of Tabernacles—Elaborate Ceremonials

The Hebrews of this city, in common with their brethren throughout the world, are celebrating to-day the Feast of Tabernacles, also called the Feast of Booths, and in Hebrew, Succoth. The observance lasts for 8 days, and closes on October 1st, with the 'Rejoicing with the Law.' In Jewish homes, synagogues and temples, booths thatched with straw or leaves, are constructed, in remembrance of that distant period when the Hebrews were an agricultural people in Palestine. While the Feast of Tabernacles has gradually assumed a nationalistic significance, its agricultural character is perpetuated by the custom of erecting booths in which the families gather and where they have their meals. The joyousness of the Feast of Booths, developed in music and torchlight processions, reaches its height on the seventh day. On the eighth day, called Shemini Azeret, memorial services and services for rain and dew are held. There are elaborate ceremonies for each day of Succoth, and there are carried out, as far as possible, by all orthodox Hebrew congregations.

A GERMAN IDEA OF THE NAVAL SITUATION

Mr. Isaac Barth, State Senator of New Mexico, who has returned from England and Germany, told a New York reporter the following, in a recent interview:

In Germany they have post cards of the Kaiser's searching for the British fleet. A German army officer was absolutely amazed when I told him that Germany did not have a ton on the high seas at the present time; that her fleet was bottled up in the Kiel Canal and that England had snatched from her all her colonies. He was flabbergasted. There are many persons in Germany who sincerely believe that the German merchant marine is running as strong as ever and that the greater part of the German navy is searching for the fleeing British fleet.

RUMANIA'S ATTITUDE IN BALKAN CRISIS IS STILL IN DOUBT

LONDON, Sept. 23—Developments in the Balkan crisis moved swiftly to-day, each new event bringing Bulgaria and Greece nearer war, with Rumania's attitude seemingly in doubt.

Serbia replied to Bulgarian mobilization order by moving two division of troops within striking distance of the Bulgarian frontier.

The Crown Prince Alexander according to Nish dispatches, plans to lead the Serbian armies in person, if the Bulgarians strike.

The Greek Cabinet was in continuous session until after midnight, and no reports of its action had been allowed to leave Athens at an early hour to-day.

Diplomats here believe Serbia will deliver an ultimatum to Bulgaria and that this communication will result in a declaration of war.

MADNESS SAYS GERMAN CLUB TO EXPECT TO CRUSH ALLIES

PARIS, Sept. 23.—"Humanite" asserts that the German Bund Neues Vaterland, a Berlin organization, has issued a powerful petition in reply to the six powerful German economic associations who demanded "annexation of Belgium in all but name, annexation of the French coast as far as the Somme as a strategic necessity, annexation of the Briey ore region, and the coal regions of the Departments Du Nord and Pas de Calais, annexation of Verdun, Belfort and the western slope of the Vosges for strategic reasons, and annexation of Russian territory adjoining East Prussia for military reasons."

As to this programme the Bund Neues Vaterland says: "East and west more than 13,000 square kilometers (a kilometer is two thirds of a mile) with more than 16,000,000 inhabitants would thus be annexed. What do the petitioners of the six associations imagine our relations would be with these men, who would have to be subjected to German domination?"

The Bund's petition further asserts that:

"The idea of weakening England and Russia until they become powerless or even are annihilated is so childish as not to admit of serious discussion, as is shown clearly by the lessons of history. To fight for such an object, which cannot be attained, is pure madness. The propagation of this madness is dangerous because it makes difficult anything like lasting peace."

For the foregoing attack on what the Bund calls a "crazy illusion," its offices were raided and one of its members arrested for treason.

MELTING DANTE'S STATUE?

Italians Say Austrians Are Recasting It to Make Cannon.

ROME, Sept. 21. — The Tribuna announces that the monument erected in Trent to the memory of Dante, considered to be a masterpiece of sculpture, has been demolished by the Austrians in order that the bronze may be used for making cannon.

The Right Road.

The road to successful business may not be so easy as the well worn road to failure, but the trail has been well marked by those who have passed that way. They never needed any brakes on the road to success, but often required a whip, particularly at the rough places. The whip they invariably used was newspaper advertising. If you will think of the most successful merchants or manufacturers you know of, you will find they were liberal users of newspaper advertising. They began as small advertisers, and grew to be large ones, as a natural consequence.

Will you, Mr. Merchant, profit by their experience?

ARCHDUCHESS SCOLDS A WOUNDED ITALIAN

ROME, Sept. 20. The Idea Nazionale says that, at a hospital in Innsbruck the Archduchess Zita, who was visiting the wounded, stopped at a bed where lay an Italian Second Lieutenant of Oltoni, she spoke to him in Italian. The young officer answered courteously and, not knowing who she was, asked her: "Are you an Italian?" The Archduchess, annoyed, answered: "I was born in Italy where I lived until I was married but as an Austrian I have nothing in common with a country which has lost her honour." The officer, although wounded, sat up in bed exclaiming: "We had enough honour left to declare war on Austria!"

Soon afterward the Imperial Chamberlain reprimanded the officer for having been disrespectful to the wife of the Austrian heir apparent. The officer calmly replied: "The Archduchess was disrespectful to the Italian nation which is worse."

TWO WOMEN TESTIFY

Halliburton, P.E.I.:—"I had a doctor examine me and he said I had falling of the womb, so I have been taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it has done me a lot of good. All the bearing-down pains have vanished. I have gained ten pounds in weight, the discharge is all gone, and I feel better than I have for a long time. I think any woman is foolish to suffer as I did for the sake of a few dollars.

"You can use my letter as a testimonial. It may encourage other poor women who suffer as I did to use your Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. Geo. Collicutt, Halliburton, Lot 7, P.E.I.

Read What This Woman Says:

New Mooresfield, Ohio.—"I take great pleasure in thanking you for what your Vegetable Compound has done for me. I had bearing down pains, was dizzy and weak, had pains in lower back and could not be upon my feet long enough to get a meal. As long as I laid on my back I would feel better, but when I would get up those bearing down pains would come back, and the doctor said I had female trouble. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was the only medicine that helped me and I have been growing stronger ever since I commenced to take it. I hope it will help other suffering women as it has me. You can use this letter."—Mrs. Carrie Lloyd, New Mooresfield, Clark Co., Ohio.

Mr. Rapid—Very. We ran down three men, two boys, a baby and ten dogs.

Mrs. Rapid—Yes, we had a perfectly killing time.—Baltimore American.

Mrs. Green—I overheard Nora talking to herself as she brushed off the fancy china. She said so much of it was nothing short of monotony.

Mr. Green—Don't worry, my dear; it won't be long before she breaks the monotony.—Chicago News.

"Have I told you, Mr. Smart, that I am expecting my mother here to visit me week after next?"

She tactfully put the question to me at a time when I was in full of contentment that nothing could have depressed me.

"You don't say so!" I exclaimed, quite cheerfully.

"That is to say, she is coming if you think you can manage it quite safely."

"I manage it? My dear countess, why speak of managing a thing that is so obviously to be desired?"

"You don't understand. Can you smuggle her into the castle without any one knowing a thing about it? You see, she is being watched every minute of the time by detectives, spies, secret agents, lawyers and heaven knows who else. The instant she leaves Paris, bang! It will be like the start's shot in a race. They will be after her like a streak. And if you are not very, very clever they will play hob with everything."

"Then why run the risk?" I ventured.

"My two brothers are coming with her," she said reassuringly. "They are such big, strong fellows that—"

"My dear countess, it isn't strength we'll need," I deplored.

"Ah, sir, I quite understand. It is growing serious, quite as all of that thing. But I will let you know in ample time, so that you may be prepared."

"Do!" I said gallantly, trying to be enthusiastic.

"You are so wonderfully ingenious at working out plots and conspiracies in your books, Mr. Smart, that I am confident you can manage everything beautifully.

"And now, let us talk about something else," she went on complacently, as if the project of getting the rest of her family into the castle were already off her mind. "I can't tell you how much I enjoyed your last book, Mr. Smart. It is so exciting! Would you be entertained by a real mystery?" Very promptly I said I should be. We were having our coffee. Hawkes and Blatchford had left the room. "Well, tradition says that one of the old barons buried a vast treasure in the cellar of this"—

"Stop!" I commanded, shaking my head. "Haven't I just said that I don't want to talk about literature? Buried treasure is the very worst form of literature."

"Very well," she said indignantly. "You will be sorry when you hear I've dug it up and made off with it."

I pricked up my ears. This made a difference. "Are you going to hunt for it yourself?"

"I am," she said resolutely.

"In those dark, dank, gruesome cellars?"

"Certainly."

"Alone?"

"If necessary," she said, looking at me over the edge of the coffee cup.

"Tell me all about it," said I.

"Oh, we shan't find it, of course," said she coldly. I made note of the pressure. "They've been searching for it for two centuries without success. My—that is, Mr. Plane has spent days down there. He is very hard up, you know. It would come in very handy for him."

I glowered. "I'm glad he's gone. I don't like the idea of big looking for treasure in my house."

She gave me a cuttle for that.

CHAPTER XIII.

The Countess Gives Me a Surprise.

FOR an hour or more after leaving the enchanted rooms near the roof I lounged in my study, persistently attentive to the portrait of Ludwig the Red, with my ears straining for sounds from the other side of the secret panels. Alas! Those panels were many cubits thick and as staunch as the sides of a battleship. Not there was a vast satisfaction in knowing that she was there, asleep perhaps, with her brown head pillowed cosily to the wall, but little more than an arm's length from the crimson watercoat of Ludwig the Red. For he sat rather low, like a Chinese god, and supported his statement with his knees.

Morning came and with it a stolen determination to get down to work on my long neglected novel.

"A fine morning, sir," said Hawkes in a voice that seemed to come from the grate.

"Is it?" said I, and my voice sounded gloomier than his.

"Send Mr. Poopendyke to me, Hawkes, immediately after I've finished my breakfast."

"Very good, sir. Oh, I beg your pardon, sir. I am forgetting. Mr. Poopendyke is out. He asked me to tell you he wouldn't return before 11."

"Out? What business has he to be out?"

"Well, sir, I mean to say he's not precisely out, and he isn't just what one would call in. He is up in the—ahem!—the east wing, sir, taking down some correspondence for the—for the lady, sir."

I arose to the occasion. "Quite so, quite so. I had forgotten the appointment."

"Yes, sir; I thought you had."

"Ahem! I dare say Britton will do quite as well. Tell him to"—

"Britton, sir, has gone over to the city for the newspapers. You forget that he goes every morning as soon as he has had his"—

"Yes, yes! Certainly," I said hastily. "The papers. Ha, ha! Quite right."

It was news to me, but it wouldn't do to let him know it. The countess read the papers, I did not.

It was nearly 12 when my secretary reported to me on this particular morning.

"Mr. Poopendyke," said I, "are you employed by me or by that woman upstairs?" I would never have spoken of her as "that woman," believe me, if I had not been in a state of irritation.

He looked positively stunned. "Sir?" he gasped.

I did not repeat the question, but managed to demand rather fiercely, "Are you?"

"They were my words, sir, but meant to explained desperately. "I was merely putting two and two together—forming an opinion from her manner, not from her words. She is very particular to mention everything you do for her and thanks me if I call her attention to anything she may have forgotten. She certainly appreciates your kindness to the lady."

"That is extremely gratifying," said I coldly.

He hesitated once more. "Do I—you understand that the divorce limit is absolute. It's only the matter of the child that remains unsettled. The"—

I fairly leaped at him. "What the infernal do you mean by that, sir? What has the divorce got to do with it?"

"A great deal, I should say," said he, with the cool, almost supercilious patience that has made him so valuable to me.

"Upon my soul!" was all that I could say.

"The men from the telephone company are here, sir, and the electricians. Where are they to begin, sir?"

"Tell them to wait," said I. Then I hurried to the top of the east wing to ask if she had the least objection to an extension phone being placed in my study. She thought it would be very nice, so I returned with instructions for the men to put in three instruments—one in her room, one in mine and one in the butler's pantry. It seemed a very jolly arrangement all round. As for the electric bell system, it would speak for itself.

Toward the middle of the afternoon when Mr. Poopendyke and I were hard at work on my synopsis we were startled by a dull, mysterious pounding on the wall near by. We paused to listen. It was quite impossible to locate the sound, which ceased almost immediately. Our first thought was that the telephone men were driving a hole through the wall into my study. Then came the sharp rata-ta-tat once more. Even as we looked about us in bewilderment the portly female of Ludwig the Red moved out of alignment with a heart rending squeak and a long thin streak of black appeared at the inner edge of the frame, growing wider—and blacker if anything—before our startled eyes.

"Are you at home?" inquired a voice that couldn't by any means have emanated from the chest of Ludwig, even in his mellowest hours.

I leaped to my feet and started across the room with great strides. My secretary's eyes were glued to the magic portrait.

"By the Lord Harry!" I cried. "Yes!"

The secret door swung quietly open, laying Ludwig's face to the wall, and in the aperture stood my amazing neighbor, as lovely a portrait as you'd see in a year's trip through all the galleries in the world. She was smiling down upon us from the slightly elevated position, a charming figure in the very latest Parisian hat and gown.

"I am not making afternoon calls," said she. Her face we flushed with excitement and self consciousness. "Will you please put a chair here so that I may hop down?"

For answer I reached up a pair of valiant arms. She laughed, leaned forward and placed her hands on my shoulders. My hands found her waist, and I lifted her gently, gracefully to the floor.

"How strong you are!" she said admiringly. "How do you do, Mr. Poopendyke! Dear me, I'm not a ghost, sir!"

"How do you do?" he jerked out. Then he felt of his heart. "My God, I don't believe it's going!"

Together we inspected the secret doors, going so far as to enter the room beyond, the countess peering through after us from my study. To my amazement the room was absolutely bare. Bed, trunks, garments, chairs—everything, in fact, had vanished as if whisked away by an all powerful genie.

"What does this mean?" I cried, turning to her.

"I don't mind sleeping upstairs now that I have a telephone," she said serenely. "Max and Rudolph moved everything up this afternoon." Poopendyke and I returned to the study. I for one was bitterly disappointed.

"I'm sorry that I had the phone put in," I said.

"Please don't call it a phone!" she objected. "I hate the word phone."

"So do I," said Poopendyke sublimely.

I glared at him. What right had he to criticise my manner of speech? He started to leave the room after a perfunctory scramble to put his papers in order, but she broke off in the middle of a sentence to urge him to remain. She announced that she was calling on both of us.

"Please don't stop your work on my account," she said and promptly sat down at his typewriter and began pecking at the keys. "You must teach me how to run a typewriter, Mr. Poopendyke. I shall be as poor as a church mouse before long, and I know father won't help me. I may have to become a stenographer."

He blushed abominably. I don't believe I've ever seen a more unattractive fellow than Poopendyke.

"Oh, every cloud has its silver lining," said he sentimentally.

"Before I married my wife I could have listened to her sweet voice for hours," said Smith to his friend. "Yes—and now?" asked the friend. "Now," said Smith, with moisture in his eyes, "I have to!"

"Am Brudder Trustee Pullback in de hall tonight?" asked Brother Gardner as he arose and looked around him after the regular business of the meeting had been disposed of.

Trustee was there. In fact, he wasn't six feet from the president. He stood up with a sort of a yank and a jerk, and Brother Gardner continued:

it you cum along and sot down by a white man on a nearby bench. Do you remember de occushun?'

"Yes, sah."

"You first begun to talk religun. Den you switched off on to politics. Dat white man 'peared to be mighty well posted, but you wanted to make out dat you knowed all about it. Darfore when he asked what you thought de next congriss would do on de tariff question you puffed out your chist and replied:

"'I can't jest say at dis time, but I'a shore dat de impetuosity of de occashun will abominate de incompatibility of de advantageous responsibility.'

"Dem's your werry words, Brudder Pullback. I writ 'em down at once."

"Yes, sah; I said 'em."

"And I now want to ask you what you meant by 'em? Just explain yourself, if you please."

"I—I can't 'sactly say, sah."

"Did you mean dat we was gwine to hab anodder panic?"

"Skasely."

"Did you mean, den, dat money was gwine to be plenty?"

"Skasely."

"Den you can't jest tell what you did mean?"

"N-no, sah."

"I thought not. I know dat de white man didn't. He jest looked at you and shrunk all up and didn't hab anythin' mo' to say. My old woman heard you, and your words gin her a chill. You kin set down, and if Brudder Pickles Smith am among us he will please arose."

Talking About Railroad Rebates.

Brother Smith was on hand, and as he got his posture the president beamed down on him and said:

"Brudder Smith, I was on de back end of a street kyar de odder evenin' gwine home, and you was dar in talk wid a butcher. I sorter kept in de dark, and you didn't see me. You was talkin' about railroad rebates, and you suddenly waved your arm and remarked:

"'I ain't studied into de comprehenciveness of de articulashun as fur as I intend to, but it am my present opinyun dat de invisibility of de commemorashun gravitates de cryptical assimulashun.'

"I didn't write your words down, Brudder Smith, but I believe I quote 'em correctly?"

"Yes, sah."

"And jest what did you mean by 'em? Take your time, but tell us what you meant."

Nature intended the liver to filter the poisons from the blood as the kidneys do. When the liver is sluggish the blood stream becomes loaded with impurities that poison the entire system. CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS are a specific for these troubles. They gently stimulate the liver to do its duty.

"I reckon I meant dat de railroads"—

"De railroads what?"

"It was either de railroads or de butcher, sah."

"Yes? Waal, I reckon it was de butcher. He looked at you and den jumped off de kyar and fled for his life. If he has been found dead since, den you am to blame fur it. I can't think, howeber, Brudder Smith, dat you meant any wrong."

"No, sah."

"Jest wanted de butcher to understand dat you was comin' along on languago, eh?"

"Dat's all, sah."

"Werry well. We will now hear from Brudder Syntax Johnson. I take notice dat he am asleep behind de stove. Will some brudder kindly rouse him up?"

Brother Johnson was given a swat on the ear and roused, and when he had come to understand where he was at the president said:

"Brudder Johnson, I was ober to de coal yard whar' you work de odder day, and dere wasn't nobody in de office. You was out in de yard, howeber, and I heard you talkin' to a strange cull'd man out dar. 'Pears you had been talkin' about de hard times, and all to once you raised your voice and said:

"'I hain't sayin' dat de panic am all ober, but what I do say am dat de mediation of de dimolishun seems to have assimilated mo' or less of de intermobility.'

"Right den and dar, Brudder Johnson, I picked up a shingle and writ de words down, and I know I have 'em correct. You had no sooner got dat speech off dan dat strange darky went out of de yard on de dead run, and I reckon he's on de go yet. Did you mean to threaten his life, Brudder Johnson?"

"No, sah."

"But you must have meant sumthin'."

"Are you shore you did?"

"N-no, sah."

"And I hain't shore either. All I know is dat I had a weakness in de knees all de way home, same as if somebody had struck at me wid a club. You orter be mo' keerful, brudder—you really had. You may sot down now, and I have a few words to say to Cucumber White."

Cucumber White's Case.

Cucumber was also nodding with sleep, but he roused up to take his medicine.

"Brudder White," said the president after a moment, "de odder hot night you went into Jackson's ice cream place to get a five cent dish to cool you off. Am dat a fact?"

"Yes, sah."

"I was dere fur de same purpose. I took a back seat when I entered, and dat's de reason you didn't see me. You was waited on by a cull'd gal, wasn't you?"

"Yes, sah."

"And when she brought your order you pinted to de cream and said:

"'Dis am de season of de year when de human system craves for de conglomeration of de irresponsibility, and de nigher you approach to de maladministrashun de more odiferous becomes de woolashun.'

"Have I quoted you correctly, Brudder White?"

"Yes, sah."

"How long was you learnin' dem words?"

"'Bout two weeks."

"And what do dey mean?"

"Sumthin' 'bout ice cream I reckon."

"But you don't know fur shore?"

"No, sah."

"I wish you did. Dat gal was tooken ill an hour arter you went out, and de last news was dat de doctor didn't know whether he could save her life or not. I also understand dat five gallons of ice cream went sour befo' you was around de co'ner. You may sot down, brudder, and rest dat large but weary brain of yours.

"Now, I have just a few words to say to de rest of de members of dis club. When you want to know whether a cull'd man am a fool nigger or not just listen till he opens his mouf. If he talks plain English he am all right. If he goes to turnin' de crank and grindin' out sich words as we have heard yere tonight, den let him down as a pusson to beware of. He'd steal your dawg and take along de bar'l dat de canine slept in.

"And in closin' let me say dat not withstandin' the apprompshun of de dedderashun and de irritashun of de obderashun we shall hope de elimination of de prevaricashun will continue to exceed de confabulashun."

Sultan the Amateur.

Douglas Hallam, wounded in action against the Turks a few days ago, is remembered here almost as much for his amateur interest in the stage as for any of his other random, reckless exploits. Hallam took part in one of the Press Club productions some years ago, wrote parts of the performance, had usually up his sleeve some scenario for a new play of an unconventional sort, and was usually looking round for some chance to shew his peculiar ability. When he was a reporter on a Toronto newspaper, which he became just for the experience, he always had some novel play of wanting to do at Christmas or Easter. He was always scribbling with flashlight powder. At the University he was always scribbling with some project. When he went into business he always seemed to hate it. When he took up with flying it was because he was weary of routine and wanted a new sensation. His enlistment in the Navy was as a flying-man. Before he gets through with the war Lt. Hallam will have accumulated enough new experiences to last him a while, and may settle down in Toronto to do something that won't leave him eternally dissatisfied.

Gold in Saskatchewan.

A promising and alluring gold strike in the Canadian North-West is reported to the south-east of Lake Athabasca. The excitement dates back to a year ago, when a good deal was heard about the Beaver Lake deposits of rich, free gold. Beaver Lake is something over a hundred miles beyond Le Pas, from which point it is reached by steamer and portage. For a time men went in at the rate of a hundred a week, but the excitement wore down, partly because of the difficulty in getting the ore out to where it could be mailed. Assays of the Beaver Lake ore ran high, however, and there seems to be little doubt that in that district there is as genuine golden wealth as there is silver wealth around Lake Athabasca. Development is going on this summer on some of the claims staked out last year.

Gave Life for Empire.

Without the satisfaction of having gone to the front, or the glory of dying in battle, Harry Robbins Seale of Toronto gave his life for his country as truly as any Canadian soldier who met his death from shrapnel or German gas, when he died at St. Michael's Hospital a few days ago.

Early in July, having a day off from his work with the Don Valley Brick Works, he went to the Armories and volunteered for active service with the 10th Royal Grenadiers. The doctor told him that before he enlisted he must have a varicose vein removed from one of his legs. Accordingly he had that operation at St. Michael's Hospital, but died a couple of weeks later of blood poisoning.

The Limit.

"Why don't you call in Dr. Flea?" asked the friendly cricket.

"Not for me," promptly replied the sick centiped. "I had him once."

"What's the matter? Did he pull your leg?"

"Huh! He pulled all of them."—Catholic Standard and Times.

LONDON AT BAY AS ZEPPELIN ATTACKS

Millions Watch and Defy Germany's Monster—England Unafraid—Rage, Not Alarm, Inspired

The following is a published description of a Zeppelin raid over the heart of London: Above the din of the orchestra there swoops over the theatre a curvaceous form. "Boom," "Boom," whispers a pretty girl sitting next to a British officer. "No," the officer says, whereupon: "It's a dear Londoner," she knows it.

"Boom," the whisper runs through the audience.

If you knew what was transpiring in the street, nearly on our there, instead of waiting for the host act to end, think a cosmic is being enacted that there on the old town of London, in all its rich-thousand years' history never beheld until Germany tried her new war.

The curtain goes down. You file out of the theatre into a crowded station and traffic is at a standstill. A million quiet cries make a subdued roar. Seven million people of the biggest city in the world stand gazing into the sky from the darkened streets. Here in the climax of the twentieth century. Among the stars floats a long, gaunt Zeppelin. It is dull yellow, the color of the moon. The long fingers of the searchlights, reaching up from the roofs of the city, are touching all sides of the dumb spectacle with their white tips. Great booming Zeppelin bombs—falling—falling—turning. Lesser noises—of shooting—are nearer at hand, the noise of aerial guns sending shrapnel into the sky.

Fires and Battle

"For God's sake don't do that!" says one man to another who has just struck a match to light a cigarette. Whispers, low voices, run all through the streets. "There's a red light in the sky over there; our houses may be burning," exclaims a woman, clutching at a man's coat. "There are a million houses in London; why ours particularly?" he responds. A group of men talking French stand gazing up from the street. They are in waiters' clothes and have rushed out from the supper room of one of the most luxurious hotels in the world. "The devils!" exclaims one, and then —"We've got it—it can't get away. There's shrapnel all around it."

"Oh—my neck!" says a pretty girl in evening wraps. "I can't look up a minute more." But she does. All about you are beautifully garbed women and men in evening clothes. "Oh's," "Ah's," and long-drawn out exclamations of admiration like the sounds made by holiday crowds watching fireworks, greet the brilliantly white flashes of shrapnel.

Suddenly you realize that the biggest city in the world has been the night battlefield on which seven million harmless men, women and children live. Here is war at the very heart of civilization, threatening all the millions of things that human hearts and human minds have created in past centuries. Mourners to-night will leave the side of their dead to look into the sky fearfully. Little children, who have said "Now I lay me down" and have gone to sleep, will be awakened and rushed into cellars to save them from death. There are more cries—"Good God, it's staggering!" as a shrapnel flash breaks apparently near the great airship.

What a roar of joy would go up from the millions of this great city if they could suddenly see the yellow object transformed into the flash of one gigantic explosion, little white gloved hands clap their approval at the Zeppelin's near approach to death; white teeth sparkle in smiles; men roar with delight. These men and women, flowers of the twentieth century culture, have become elemental. Dirty, bloody, battle-mad soldiers felt the same way in battle. Killing has been put into the hearts of these crowds. If the men up there in the sky think they are terrifying London they are wrong. They are only making England white-hot mad.

Brothers All

The redness of a burning building fills the sky. The dome of historic St. Paul's cathedral looms up against the redness. You pass the old church in a side street. At the gateway stands the old verger, half dressed. It has been his duty for the past half century to guard against church thieves and fires as other sextons have guarded it for centuries past. But he's got a bigger job on his hands than any of them ever had before. The verger's white-haired wife stands beside him. They are talking with three girls such as never come into the lives of church sextons except on nights like this. They are pointing out to the aged couple with cheaply jewelled fingers the slowly fading yellow form of the Zeppelin. We are brothers and sisters in the streets of London to-night. Neither man nor woman, neither good nor bad—just human, outraged, mad, unwilling to die. It is a miracle the great gas bag in the air brings about.

On the Plinth of "Chinese" Gordon's monument sits a soldier and a girl, who is tracing invisible figures on the stone pavement, his arm is about her; her face is bent to his. Maybe they've seen this Zeppelin to-night, but just now she's listening to the old story that will be new when the books telling of the story of to-night's Zeppelin raid have crumbled into dust. They typify London and England—unchanged one lota by this Zeppelin raid that only ended in the loss of harmless lives. The next day recruiting tripled.

STRANGE GOD OF HUNS

Vastly Different is Anglo-Saxon Conception, Says Writer

Well might the allies despair of winning or justifying their cause if they were to accept the German Emperor's belief that God was always on his side, says The New York Sun. To people whose religious feeling is not militant and whose conception of God is impersonal the Emperor's conviction, so constantly intimated, that the Almighty is with him and against his enemies comes as a shock. It seems insincere and wanting in reverence. But it is nothing of the kind, as Mr. Sydney Brooks points out. To the English and the Germans God is a different being. To the English "He is the Lord God Almighty, a terrific overshadowing being, feared and revered, and kept in our private sanctuaries, to be appealed to in moments of profound grief or emotion, but certainly no companion to our ordinary thoughts or actions." But, to quote Mr. Brooks, "the lieber Herr Gott of the Germans is above all things a very human comrade, a partaker of the common round to be recognized in whatever is loved or enjoyed. He is also an intensely German deity, peculiarly associated with the German soil, the supreme war lord and guardian of the German hosts. The German heart responds to Him even when the German intellect refuses to relax its scepticism and refuses still more sternly to be caged within the four walls of any doctrine."

GERMANY AND ALSACE

Outrageous Treatment of Indomitable of Conquered People

If Germany ever had any illusions regarding the loyalty of the people of Alsace to her, they have completely disappeared and there is not better proof of this than the way in which German officials treat the people of the "Reichsland." Their fury against them is boundless and every prison is full of men and women of all classes who have incurred German wrath. Soldiers of Alsatian birth are sent to the most dangerous part of the eastern front. The fidelity of the Alsatians to France is touching. Everybody speaks the Alsatian dialect, which most of the innumerable spies do not understand.

Wagging the Tail.

At first sight there would appear to be little connection between flattery and the wagging of a dog's tail, yet in nearly all the northern languages the same word signifies both, and flattery is derived from the word signifying to wag the tail. In the old Norman flagra signifies to flatter and also to wag the tail. In Danish logre is to wag the tail, and loger for one is to fawn on one. In Dutch vleyden is to flatter, and cleydaeserten is to wag the tail. In the old German wedeln is to wag the tail, and in English wheedle is to gain one's end in flattery.

Marine Magnesia.

Chemical analyses of starfishes, sea urchins, and crinoids, collected from all parts of the world, show that the skeletons of these animals contain much magnesia. The percentage of magnesia is highest in those specimens that lived in tropical waters and lowest in forms from the icy seas of Greenland and the Antarctic, with a regular gradation between which even shows the tonic effect of cold ocean currents upon life at the sea bottom.

Red, Blue and Orange Hailstones.

Humboldt, an authority on atmospheric phenomena never disputed, told of a heavy hailstorm which passed over Tuscany on March 14, 1813, every ice globule of the entire fall being of a beautiful orange color. Five years prior to this extraordinary event Carmola, Germany, was treated to a fall of five feet of blood red snow, followed by a slight fall of blue hail, which is said to have given "the whole face of the earth an exceedingly curious aspect." Red hailstones fell at Amsterdam in 1798, at London in 1663 (during the time of the great plague) and at divers places in Ireland and France in the early part of the past century.

The Cavalcade.

The most imposing regiment in the Italian army is the Corazzieri, or Royal Bodyguard, which for physique of man and horse is the most magnificent corps of the kind in Europe. No trooper in the Corazzieri is less than six feet one or two, whilst many are far taller, and their wonderful feats of horsemanship are known throughout Europe. Most of the men are comely of feature, as well as splendid of limb, and the large majority of them come from the peasantry.

Curious Headdress.

In Russia the maiden who is free may dress her locks as she wishes, but not so the wife. She must hide her hair.

As a recompense for the sacrifice she dons a hood which may well be called weird. In shape it is not unlike a bishop's miter, and it is adorned as the fancy or the purse of the wearer dictates. Gold, silver, and even precious stones have been used in decorating the kokoschnik, as it is called.

In certain parts of Spain a hood similar to the Russian style is worn. Particularly is this popular with the dancers among the Toledo peasantry, although it must be very hot and uncomfortable.

The Dutch maiden of Amsterdam pins her faith and her head to a hood which resembles in shape an inverted flowerpot.

BOWSER GETS GIFT.

IT HELPS TO REVIVE FOLKS.

Mr. B. Feels Happy After Drinking Stuff and Says He'll Order It by the Barrel—Too Much of It Knocks Him Out, However.

(Copyright, 1915, by T. C. McClure.)

About midafternoon the other sultry day a boy appeared at the residence of Mr. Bowser with a gallon jug and said to Mrs. Bowser:

"This is a present from the butcher to Mr. Bowser, and he says you must put it in the icebox."

"What is it?" was asked.

When the boy had departed Mrs. Bowser drew the cork and took a long sniff, and a look of doubt and suspicion spread over her face as she poured a little of the water out in a glass and tasted it. There was a taste that seemed familiar, but she put the jug on ice without meddling further. At 6 o'clock Mr. Bowser came home dragged out.

MR. BOWSER DRANK TWO LARGE GLASSES.

His collar was only a damp rag around his neck, and his shirt bosom had gone limp. He had missed the car and been obliged to walk eight blocks, and as he could not overhaul and murder the conductor and as no tramp had accosted him between his house and the corner he had come home to take it out of Mrs. Bowser. He had thrown down his hat and jerked off his coat and was preparing for words when she said:

"A boy left a jug of what he called C. M. W. here this afternoon, and I put it in the icebox. He said the butcher sent it."

"Then hurrah! He told me three or four days ago that he would send it, but I didn't depend upon him. By George, but I'm glad it's here!"

"Why, the butcher's got a farm with a mountain on it called Chickadee mountain. On top of the mountain is a spring of ice cold water. It has strange medicinal qualities. A pint of it will revive a man on a hot day more than two gallons of wine. I've been almost played out with the heat today, and now is the time to use it."

The jug was hauled out of the icebox, and Mr. Bowser dumped two large glasses without stopping to breathe but once. His face was a picture of good nature as he sat down to the dinner table and said:

"I can feel that clear down to my toes already. Wonderful thing—very wonderful! The butcher has got millions in that spring if he only knew it. Why, I wouldn't know that the thermometer had been above 70 today. I think I'll try another glass. Yum, yum!"

Mrs. Bowser looked dubious and thoughtful, and as Mr. Bowser turned to his plate again he continued:

"Tomorrow I shall order that spring water by the barrel, and as soon as it comes I shall insist on your drinking it with me. It's the purest that nature can yield. How many germs do you think we have been drinking with every glass of city water?"

"Five or six, perhaps."

"Five or six? The number is 1,875,453, and each and every germ is capable of starting a case of rheumatism or typhoid fever. The wonder is that we are alive. I calculate that I have taken into my system during the past year over 600,000,000 germs. Isn't it a miracle that I am still on earth?"

"And haven't the medical profession discovered the curative properties of this water and made use of them?" she asked.

"They have made the discovery—ha, ha, ha! But the butcher won't let them use the water. He keeps it to present to his customers. No meat, no Chickadee water—ha, ha, ha!"

In a Happy Mood.

Mrs. Bowser glanced up to find his face flushed and smiling, and as he looked he winked at her and said:

"Now, hain't this perfectly lovely to be home eating dinner with my little wifey, with a gallon of Chickadee mountain water at my elbow! Guess I'll try a little more. Ah, but that would knock the hottest day in the year into a cocked hat!"

Mrs. Bowser reached over and took the empty glass and smelled of it.

"What—what's matter, lovey?" he asked.

"That's 'cause it comes from the top of a mountain, you know."

"Is it? I didn't know but it was because brandy had been mixed with it. You are sure it's nothing but water?"

"Jess water, Mrs. Bowser—jess Chickadee mountain water. Chickadee sits in a trap above the spring and sings while the water runs downhill. Chick-a-chick, you know, and—ha, ha, ha!"

The cook came in with a dish and looked at Mr. Bowser in a puzzled way, and Mrs. Bowser hurried him through the rest of the meal and got him upstairs. He didn't go, however, until he had taken another glass of nature's purest and best and carefully returned the jug to the icebox. He wanted to go out and sit on the front steps, but in reply Mrs. Bowser said:

"I think it's cooler right here, and, besides, I want to talk with you. Do you think of trading the house and lot for a farm?"

"Do I? Do I think? Do I think of trading for a farm?" he repeated in a high pitched voice, and then after a hearty laugh he continued:

"No, lovey dovey, I don't think. Your hubby is no farmer. He don't know a burdock from a pumpkin. Shay, let's go to the theater tonight. Take my arm and let's go to the theater."

"Not this evening. I think the C. M. W. has gone to your head a little."

"Gone to my head! Why, Missus Bowsher, who ever heard of such a thing! No, sir; no, sir. Head's all right. Chickadee is all right. Mountain is all right. Shay, that's wonderful water. I'm going down and have another glass of it. I feel as if it was last winter. I don't feel over thirty years old."

Greatest Water on Earth.

Mrs. Bowser filed various objections, but they were set aside, and Mr. Bowser went down and helped himself. The cook saw him pouring from the jug, and he smiled and winked at her and said her wages should be raised $4 a month. When he returned to the sitting room his gait was uncertain and he was reaching out for things to balance on as he walked. When he had finally got seated in a rocking chair he said:

"Greatest water on the face of the earth. Never heard of anything like it. Shay, Missus Bowsher, let's have a game of cards tonight. I can beat you five out of six."

"Not tonight, Mr. Bowser. It has been a very hot day, and you have suffered from the heat. If you will lie down I will put ice to your head."

"I suffer from heat! Not much! Your husband is no sufferer. Shay, I'm going over and shee that butcher and order fifty barrels of Chickadee. How nice it is to be sitting here wiz your tootsy wootsy of a wife! Where's she cat?"

"In the back yard."

"C-call she c-cat in. I owe her a 'pology, and I want to make friends wiz her. I feel good, and I want you and she c-cat to feel good too. Shay, while we are waitin' to 'pologize to she c-cat I'll shing you a shong."

"Don't talk so loud, Mr. Bowser, and do please lie down and let me cool your head. Can't you understand that you are not exactly right in your head?"

"Whazzer mazzer my head?"

"You are dizzy."

"Nonshense! Never dizzy in my life. It's she room shat's dizzy. Now, you listen and I'll shing 'The Old Oaken Bucket' to you. Old oaken bucket hain't in wiz she jug, but I'll shing it. Don't cry when I shing. I'll stand up, and I'll shing—shing"—

But he didn't sing. He stood up to fall down and a minute later was fast asleep. When Mrs. Bowser awoke him next morning he was still lying there. He followed her down to breakfast without a word. He had nothing to say when he found the jug of Chickadee water empty. It was only when he was ready to go to the office that he turned to remark:

"I'll see about the divorce and alimony this afternoon, and you can be packing your trunks. You have finally succeeded in driving me to the dead line."

A Barrel Trick.

One Sunday morning, when everybody had gone to church, a traveler undertook to show the landlord how to draw three different sorts of wine from the same cask. The two went down into the cellar and the stranger bored a hole in the barrel, on which he asked the landlord to place his thumb. He then bored a second hole, which mine host had to stop with his other thumb. He had set to work on the third, when it apparently struck him that the landlord could not be equal to the task of stopping that also, and he ran out of the cellar "to fetch a tap." He never returned, and the innkeeper had to wait by the side of his cask until the folks had come out of church. The rogue had by that time decamped without paying his bill.—London Answers.

(Woman's Realm)

Beautiful, fluffy, natural-looking curls or waves, without the use of the ruinous curling iron, are now possible for every woman. Yes, not only possible, but very easily acquired over night and with benefit to the life and health of the hair. It is only necessary to apply a little liquid silmerine before retiring, using a clean tooth brush for the purpose, drawing this down the full length of the tresses from root to tip. In the morning the hair will have a most delightful curliness and lustre, without the least suggestion of grease or stickiness, and will be quite comfortable, no matter how the hair is done up.

As liquid silmerine is procurable at any drug store and as a few ounces of it will last for months no woman need put up with that flat, lank, dank appearance of the hair which gives such an unwholesome look of plainness to most faces.

NAPOLEON SHOWS HOW TO BECOME A GENERAL

Brilliant Advice of Greatest Soldier—Common Sense, Maps and Mathematics Are the Recipe

A French colonel has been at considerable pains to scan the literature of Napoleon and select from it every observation of the greatest of military geniuses that bears upon the art and science of war. Anybody can read what Napoleon advises. There is nothing manifestly obscure about his principles. If only one could read it, and then proceed to discomfit and destroy the Germans. One naturally turns to those precepts that are collected under the head, "How to be a Great Captain." Napoleon was a great captain, and he knew undoubtedly how one ought to act in order to be one. He says in the first place that one ought to make aggressive war. Napoleon recommends that the soldier who aspires to be a great captain should read and reread the maxims and campaigns of Alexander, Cæsar, Hannibal, Gustavus Adolphus, Turenne, Eugene and Frederick the Great. He fails to mention Marlborough in this connection, though at another time he said that Marlborough was the only English general he would consider fit to cross a sword with. He insists that there is nothing vague or mysterious about the art of war. Its general principles are unchanging, and most of them have to do with the blunders of the enemy.

Experience no Teacher

Napoleon said it was remarkable that though he had fought sixty battles he knew no more when he finished than when he began. Cæsar, too, fought his first battle like the last. He said that it was a great art in battles to change the line of operation during action. He attributed to this principle, of which he claimed to be the discoverer, his victory at Marengo. The simplest manœuvres were, in his opinion, the best. He added: "Yet one must have common sense. I cannot understand how generals can make mistakes. It is perhaps because they wish to act by inspiration. The most difficult thing is to guess the plans of the enemy—to perceive the truth in all the conflicting reports that you receive. It is like a fist fight. The more one hits the better. It is necessary, however, to study the map carefully."

His observations about generals were to this effect: "The time for a commander-in-chief to work is night. If he uselessly fatigues himself during the day he is worn out at night. At Vittoria we were beaten because Joseph (Napoleon's brother) slept too much. If I had slept the night of Eckmuhl I would never have executed that wonderful manœuvre, which was the finest I ever made. I multiplied myself by my agility. A general-in-chief ought not to sleep. The essential quality for a general is firmness; the rest is the gift of heaven. To be a good general one must know mathematics. In a thousand circumstances mathematics will serve to rectify ideas. Possibly I owe my success to my mathematical ideas. A general ought not to have too vivid an imagination; that is worse than anything. Because the enemy has captured an outpost it does not necessarily follow that the entire army is there."

Analyzes Himself

His own great gift of generalship he reduced to the possession of one gift—to see the truth clearly, and even in a talk to see through all the phases of a question to its base; a gift one might think that has to be born in a man and cannot be acquired, even though all the military chronicles ever written were read and digested. Naturally enough, he blamed his own reverses to hard luck and was unable to see that his enemies had any military gifts at all. He asserted that Wellington was an ordinary man, who was merely prudent. He had an alibi for every defeat. Of Waterloo, he said that all fair judges saw all had won. "It ought have saved Europe."

Little Boy Was Cured By Using DR. FOWLER'S Extract of Wild Strawberry.

Diarrhoea arises from many causes such as, change of water, change of climate, change of diet, catching cold, the eating of unripe fruits, etc.

Never neglect what, at first sight, appears to be a slight attack of diarrhoea, for if you do some serious bowel trouble may ensue.

Mrs. Wm. Bartlett, Stanley, N.B., writes: "Last summer our little boy, age 1½ years, took diarrhoea. He got so bad as to pass blood. We procured a bottle of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, and after I had given him the third dose he was all right. I would not be without it, as I consider it a household remedy. It is a Godsend to any family."

There is nothing that can take the place of "Dr. Fowler's."

There is nothing "Just as Good."

How Any Women Can Remove Hairy Growths

(Beauty Culture)

It is not longer necessary for a woman to visit a beauty specialist to have superfluous hairs removed, for with the aid of a plain delatone paste she can, in the privacy of her own home, remove even a stubborn growth in a very few minutes. The paste is made by mixing some water with a little powdered delatone. This is applied to the hairs and after 2 or 3 minutes removed and the skin washed, when it will be left clear and hairless. Be sure you buy real delatone.

More Damage Done On The German Front

Some Ammunition Depots Are Blown Up

FRENCH ARTILLERY CONTINUES TO HAMMER GERMAN LINE

Berlin Admits That Much Damage Has Been Done at Various Points---Enemy's Official Bulletin Describes Yesterday as a Day of The Greatest Aircraft and Artillery Action Along The Entire Front---Aviator Shot Down.

CLOSING IN ON DVINSK, BERLIN SAYS

PARIS (French Official Communique) Sept. 23.—The French batteries blew up several German munition depots in the Champagne region last night, and silenced enemy guns that were pouring a steady fire upon the French works.

The Germans shelled Roelincourt sector and the trenches south of Searpe throughout last night, the French replying with great vigor. North and south of Avre, this afternoon's official communique reported, the French fire was most intense and very effective. Artillery fighting raged violently around Beuvraignes.

PARIS, Sept. 23.—"France is prepared to do without meat or cotton and ot eat black bread till victory comes if that is necessary," said a member of the French Government to-day to an American financier who was speaking of the prospects of the Allies obtaining a loan in the United States. The Frenchman pointed out that the Allies could get along without a loan from the United States, if necessary, but they would immediately have to cut off their orders for all supplies in the United States, as they could not permit the further exportation of gold across the Atlantic ocean.

PARIS, Sept. 23.—Former Prime Minister Clemenceau to-day in a bitter comment on the disappointing news from the Balkans, declared that Anglo-French diplomacy failed miserably when it neglected to secure Bulgaria's support at the time of the Russian advance into the Carpathian mountains.

LONDON, Eng. Sept. 23.—The British steamer Groningen has been blown up by a mine. One of her crew was killed. The survivors are being brought to shore.

LONDON, Sept. 23.—Premier Asquith this afternoon made a formal statement in the House of Commons denying the rumours that there were to be important changes in the British Cabinet. The Prime Minister declared that he does not propose to alter the composition of he ministry.

LONDON, Sept. 23. — The Dutch steamer Kociegen Emma, which struck a mine Tuesday, sank in the Thames to-day, as she was being towed to the docks. Passengers and crew had previously been taken off.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 23.—The American Consulate at Stuttgart, Germany, was struck by a fragment from a bomb during the French aeroplane raid last Tuesday. American Consul Higgins to-day cabled that none of the occupants were injured.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 23.—In a note to-day, the German Government consents to arbitration of the loss of the Frye, and names experts to reach an agreement as to pecuniary loss, but does not acknowledge any treaty violated in the sinking of the Frye. The note suggests a settlement by The Hague arbitrators.

NEW YORK, Sept. 23.—That Dr. Dumba's period of tarrying in this country should be made as short as possible, and when he goes Captain Von Papen the coiner of "those idiotic Yankees" phrase should go with him, is the conviction expressed in editorial comments in the American newspapers this morning. Some newspapers also express the view that the revelations in the documents taken from James F. J. Archibald in England warrant a demand for the immediate recall of Count Von Bernatorff.

BERLIN, via Wireless, Sept. 23.—German troops closing in upon Dvinsk from the West have penetrated the Russian advance positions taking 1,212 prisoners, it was officially announced this afternoon. The Czar's troops are falling back upon the city's outer defences, which have been under long range bombardment since Sunday.

BERLIN, via Wireless, Sept. 23. — Four French aviators were shot down by German troops yesterday in what was described as a day "of the greatest aircraft and artillery action along the entire front." The official communique admitted much damage done by the French guns on German defenses.

French Aviators Bombarded Palace of King of Wurtemberg

Reprisal For German Raids on London and Other Places in England and France—One Hundred Shells Dropped on Royal Palace.

PARIS, September 23. French aviators have bombarded Stuttgart, capital of the Kingdom of Wurttemberg, according to the French official communication issued tonight. They dropped about a hundred shells on the Royal palace and the station. The official report says:

"In retaliation for the bombardments by the Germans of open towns and civilian populaces of France and England, a group of aeroplanes set out this morning to bombard Stuttgart, capital of Wurttemberg. About a hundred shells were dropped on the Royal palace and the station. Our aeroplanes which were bombarded at different points along the line, returned in safety to their base."

The point of departure is not named in the communique. It this was Nancy the aviators had a straightaway flight of 135 miles to Stuttgart, allowing for no detours. The distance from Belfort is a matter of five miles shorter.

A statement issued before the announcement of the attack on Stuttgart, tells of the effective bombardment of the railway station at Conflans, which is in occupied French territory on the line between Verdun and Metz, by a group of seven French airmen.

Officers Elected For Coming Year

Meeting of C. L. A. Society of Charlotte St. Church

On Tuesday evening the C.L.A. Society of Charlotte Street Church held their first general meeting for this coming year. The evening was given up to business and a discussion of the work for the year. The society has taken upon itself to form a chapter of the local Red Cross Society, and expects to devote a great deal of energy to this line of work.

The election of officers took place the following being elected:

Hon.-Pres.—Rev. J. P. Wilson.
President—Mr. A. D. Hone, B.A.
Vice Pres.—Mr. A. Moore.
Sec.-Treas.—Mr. A. R. Brown.

STAFF SERGT. S. E. SEWELL, of Peterborough, with the 8th C.M.R. at Barriefield Camp and shortly to leave for England. Sergt. Sewell, who was formerly employed by B. F. Ackerman and Son, has seventeen relatives at the front.

PART OF THE EQUIPMENT IS BEING GIVEN OUT

80th Battalion Men Are Nearly All Fitted Out With Part of Their New Service Uniform—Remainder is Expected in a Day or Two.

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

The chief business around the Armouries to-day was equipping the men of the local detachment of the 80th Battalion with new outfits. The complete equipment has not yet been received, but the colder weather has made it necessary to issue something warmer than the fatigue uniforms the men were wearing. Captain R. E. Layfield, Quartermaster of the 80th Battalion, is expected this evening and it is likely that the balance of the equipment will be here in a short time.

Four new men were on parade with the 80th Battalion yesterday. The Buckhorn men accepted yesterday will not report for duty for a few days.

SATISFIED WITH RECRUITING.

In referring to some remarks credited to Lt.-Col. Ketcheson, O. C. the 80th Battalion, C. E. F., in an interview in a local paper the other day, the Examiner intimated that the commanding officer of the 80th had been either misquoted in the paper in question or was ignorant of the real facts here. That the former is the case would seem evident from the following letter received by the Examiner, today:

Barriefield Camp,
September 22, 1915

To the Editor of The Examiner,

Sir,—In an article in your issue of Monday, September 20th, you quoted me as saying that I was not satisfied with the recruiting as it was going on in Peterborough.

Such is, however, I am glad to say, not the case. You have evidently been misinformed regarding my statements.

On the other hand, I am very much pleased with the number, and the fine appearance of the men, who have been recruited at Peterborough, and I wish you to contradict your report of Monday.

W. G. Ketcheson, Lt.-Col.
O. C. 80th Overseas Battalion, C.E.F.

The Examiner's authority in regard to Lt.-Col. Ketcheson's remarks was the interview already mentioned.

Word received from Signal-Corp. Jas. McIlby, this week, proves that the report from Ottawa as to the 21st C. E. F., being in France, if not now in the trenches was correct, so that Canada now has a considerable representation in the fighting line.

Does Peterboro Want The 80th Band For The Winter?

Do the people of Peterborough want to keep the Band of the 80th Battalion here during the winter? The Examiner believes that they do, but they must act at once. If the band is equipped by the generosity of the citizens of Belleville or some other place, then that other place will have a claim on the band. It's our band, we're proud of it, and we want to keep it here. The answer is easy. We must see that it is provided with instruments and music. Surely the citizens of Peterborough don't want the word to go round that there were enough loyal musicians in Peerborough to form a splendid band, but there were not enough patriotic people to equip it properly. And that is what will be said if there is not a ready response to the appeal The Examiner is making on behalf of the band. We have received a number of subscriptions for which we wish to express the sincere thanks of the band, but the response must be quicker and more spontaneous if results are to be obtained. Surely a city of 20,000 people is not going to keep its money hid in the cellar while some other smaller town provides instruments for Peterborough men to play. The City Council should take the initiative in this matter, but the whole body of the people should be solidly behind it. Let us hear from you. Leave your subscription at The Examiner Office.

ALL CLASSES ARE CALLED

Bulgaria is Mobilizing All Her Male Citizens Between Ages of 18 and 45— Particularly All Her Reservists.

IT LOOKS LIKE WAR

LONDON, Sept. 23.— Bulgaria has called out 27 classes of reservists. It would appear that she has summoned to the colours all her male citizens between the ages of 18 and 45. If this interpretation is true, Bulgaria has called out practically all her reservists and there can be but little doubt that she means to enter the war.

DEATH OF FOUNDER OF LADIES' SCHOOL

At One Time Conducted a Ladies' School in This City.

TORONTO, Sept. 23. Miss Elizabeth Veals, for many years an authority throughout Ontario on the subject of the education of young ladies, died yesterday. Miss Veals came from England many years ago and took a high place in educational life in Canada. Miss Veals was governess to the children of the Earl of Dufferin, the Governor-General, and when the Earl and his family left Canada she opened a ladies' school at Peterborough. Her success was immediately established, and to find more scope for her talents Miss Veals came to Toronto, and started the Glen Mawr school for ladies, Spadina Avenue. From that period until she retired, Miss Veals was an outstanding figure in educational life. Her tremendous influence among girls was a great factor toward the success of her undertaking, and many who came under her tuition owe a deep debt of gratitude to Miss Veals, whose character and ideals were such as to guide young girlhood into the best of womanhood.

CHANGING NAMES OF STREETS SLOW WORK

By-Law Thrown Out By Council Was Sent Up Again By Board of Works.

The city council is moving in a circle in its treatment of the bylaw to change the names of certain streets. At the last regular meeting a bylaw, long over due, was treated to a broadside of amendments and was finally returned to the Board of Works. Last night the Board again recommended it to the council without inserting a change. Ald. Saunders and Ald. Edgar moved that Princess street be changed to Gladstone Ave., but the motion was lost. So back it goes to the council, and one of these days it will likely be passed with its questionable improvements in the naming of parts of Park and Reid streets.

SAD TRAGEDY IN DUMMER

Fourteen Year Old Girl Living Near Stoney Lake Dies Under Very Suspicious Circumstances.

INQUEST TO-DAY

HAVELOCK, Sept. 23. A peculiarly sad tragedy occurred at Centre Dummer, near Clarina, Stoney Lake, on Friday last when Lillian May, the fourteen-year-old daughter of Sanford Lindsay of that place, died under very suspicious circumstances which may yet develop into serious charges against one or possibly two different parties.

Coroner Kindred of town was notified of the case, and upon visiting the scene, ordered an inquest, which was opened on Saturday afternoon. After viewing the body the jury ordered a post mortem upon the remains which was performed by Drs. Holdcroft and Blair of town, that afternoon. The inquest was adjourned until this afternoon at 1:30 o'clock, when it will be resumed at the town hall. Havelock Crown Attorney Batton of Peterborough, and Inspector Rogers of the Provincial Detective Department, Toronto, are expected to be present, and the evidence which will be taken is expected to lead to serious charges and to implicate at least one or perhaps two men.

COUNCIL HELD BRIEF SESSION

Spent Less Than a Minute Last Night Providing for Sewer Work

Less than sixty seconds sufficed for a special Council meeting last night, and had it been in the Council Chamber the old clock would surely have stopped, and the ivy silk flag have fluttered over the Mayor's head at less irregular courses.

But it was down in the Committee Room where Ald. Green was guiding the Board of Works the inverted Council, through the ins and outs of a busy season. He simply adjourned the Board. From there sent along the route Mayor Boiler unceremoniously remarked we are now in Council. Moved by Ald. Scanlon, seconded by Ald. Denham, that sewer construction on the following streets be advertised:

Robinson Street from Rogers street to the G.T.R.

Victoria Street from Rogers to Dublin street.

The Council then adjourned.

The sewer work will be proceeded with at once.

Ald. Langford wanted the Council's permission to remove a tree from Rundle street in front of Trinity Church, but did not think of it until the adjournment had been made. He later obtained the necessary permission under the new act regulating this work.

Overseas Club Tobacco Fund

SIGNALLER P. W. JOSEY, of Peterborough, who left here with the 26th Battery and who is now in the 3rd Canadian Reserve Artillery Brigade at Shorncliffe, England.

Mr. F. R. Jones Reassures Local Members That Every Twenty-Five Cents Contributed Sends a Packet of Tobacco To The Trenches—A Sensible Unassuming Busines Man.

ANSWERED QUESTIONS

Mr. F. R. Jones, of London, Eng., who is now in Canada in the interests of the Overseas Club Tobacco Fund, last night met the Peterborough men who are assisting in this work. He answered every question the local men could call up and he told the complete story of the Overseas Club and its present patriotic endeavours.

First and above all, is the fact that the Overseas Club and the Overseas Club Tobacco Fund are two separate and distinct entities. The former absolutely guarantees that every twenty-five cents contributed for tobacco is utilized for that purpose and for that purpose alone. Hence, while Mr. Arthur Private's conduct during his short stay in Canada was manifestly extravagant, Mr. Jones states that he can prove to the hilt that not one cent of the tobacco fund was used. The Overseas Club which has been in existence for years, and now numbers nearly several hundred thousand members distributed throughout the Empire's dominions, it was from the club's finances that Mr. Private drew his expenses. He engaged a collector in Toronto to work on a percentage basis. He had no authority for this, but even for that purpose he did not use any of the fund money. Mr. Private engaged to pay one newspaper for the use of its columns, and thereby drew down the ire of the Canadian Press Association. Here again he exceeded his authority, and Mr. Jones has had to undo all the entangling obstacles. Finally, when the Overseas Club observed the expense sheet of Mr. Private they decided to send out Mr. Jones, who was given full authority to act on behalf of the club.

Most of the members of the Overseas Club are elderly business men, who were unfit for military service, and like Mr. Jones, they were strangers to mechanical work. Since they could not fight nor make munitions, and desired to help the country in some manner they took up not only the Tobacco Fund for the soldiers, but also opened an aeroplane fund, and have already contributed many units to the British Air Fleet. They have also a field service and in all these activities they are actuated only by patriotic impulses.

"We are not in the tobacco business," Mr. Jones stated in reply to Mr. F. D. Kerr, who asked for information regarding the connection between the Overseas Club and the tobacco manufacturers Martins of London and Tuckett's of Hamilton.

The Examiner has recently however printed the most of these facts. Mr. Jones however, gave first hand statements vouching for the absolute truth of his reply to the Toronto World which journal admitted that it had no criticism for the Overseas Club, but only for Mr. Private.

Mr. Jones told who Mr. Private was and how the Club members had been disappointed in him from whose brilliant journalistic work they had expected good results in organizing the Tobacco Fund here. Mr. Private did display initiative, but he failed to carry through plans he commenced and in addition his extravagances were injudicious and unnecessary.

To Mr. Kerr, who said that all kinds of questions are asked of collectors, Mr. Jones stated that he himself was the London representative of the International Correspondence Schools of Scranton, Pa., and his chance of their affairs in the Old Country. Previous to that he was the London representative of the Ingersoll Watch Company. As a result of organizing work he had accomplished he was impressed into coming to Canada, not only to forward the Overseas Club's Fund for Tobacco for the Tommies, but also to vindicate the honour and the integrity of the Club.

Peterborough was the one town in Canada which had developed the Overseas Tobacco Fund to a considerable basis, on the enthusiasm which he had read between the lines of letters had prompted him to come to Peterborough to meet the local members of the Club and reassure them as to the workings of the Fund and the plans of the Overseas Club.

Mr. R. J. Soden, the local president demonstrated to Mr. Jones the local system of collecting and making

ALLIES WILL HAVE TO DEPEND ON THE EAST FOR LOANS

Western American Banks Are Either Dependent on German Support or Are Involved With Packing House and Rockefeller Interests

ONLY CHANCE IN EAST

Special to The Examiner.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 23. The Allies depend upon the bankers interests of the East to float the proposed $500,000,000 dollar war loan for no help can be given by the bank and the of the western banks, according to a statement made to-day to a treasury department official.

There is scarcely a bank in Chicago he said, which dares shoulder any portion of the loan to the Allies, through fear of strongly entrenched German interests. Such banks as are not dependent upon German-American interests for support, he said, are involved with the packing houses and Rockefeller interests, both of which are admittedly antagonistic to an Anglo-French loan.

THURSDAY, SEPT. 23, 1915

NO TIME FOR REGRETS.

This is no time for regrets, for recalling what might have been, for recalling the mistakes of statesmen of the past. We have some light-thinking journals deploring the fact of the prevention of Canada's contribution naval policy! We have others keenly criticising the Asquith Government for blunders made at the beginning of the war. History will tell us that statesmen are not infallible. They all make mistakes, and it is only after the result of such mistakes is brought home that we are wiser than they — after the event. Lord Salisbury, Premier of Great Britain, was indirectly and innocently responsible for the establishment of the German navy, and the development of German ambition, one of the causes of this great war. He made an unfortunate "swap"—traded Heligoland to Germany for a swamp in South Africa. This seemed at the time an innocent arrangement. But it made possible the German navy and kindled the German lust for conquest. Germany took Heligoland, fortified it, made it the Gibraltar of the North Sea. Had Germany not been given Heligoland she would have had no navy in the North Sea, because she would have had no base—would have been compelled to confine herself to the land-locked Baltic. Without possession of the fortified island, the Kiel Canal would have been useless, more so than it is now. Lord Salisbury's mistake was a costly one; but we never fully realized it till now, when the German possession of Heligoland menaces Great Britain, which was before its cession, immune from danger. But it is unavailing and ineffective, and injurious to national interests to hark back upon mistakes. The work of the present is to do our best; and anything that prevents our doing our best—impairs the spirit of unity—whether it be recrimination or reproach, or a war-time election, is another mistake; but, unlike some mistakes of statesmen—made with full knowledge of the evil results.

A WAR ELECTION.

The Weekly Sun says "the party papers are playing an entertaining farce about the elections." It declares that they know very well that there is no possibility of deferring an election beyond the time set by the constitution. This may be technically correct, but is there no way to extend the life of parliament if national and imperial interests demand such a thing on, October 7th, 1916? There may be no constitutional power; but there is the power of the compulsion of duty, the compulsion of necessity, that may well be invoked. The British constitution is an unwritten, intangible thing, built up by precedent on precedent, the result of action in great emergencies, in which the end has justified the means. We cannot contemplate the holding of an election in war time. It would be as incongruous as Nero feasting and fiddling while Rome was burning. In the future, as far as human eye can see, there is seen no limit to the national effort we must make to help the victory of our cause. We can at present see little prospect that there will be a speedy end to our exertions, a situation that only calls for more earnest endeavour. If the war lasts till October, 1916, and after, we must keep at it; and we can permit of no relaxation of personal or national effort till it is finished. An election would disturb everything, and call off all our people from the emergent demand for participation in the war.

If, it so happens that the war is still on when the term of the present parliament expires, we must do something to avoid an election. We can do it by extending the parliamentary term. We may have no constitutional warrant for such a course, as the Sun asserts. But we can rise to the emergency. We must not let a constitutional technicality interfere with the performance of our duty. That will be no time for hair-splitting.

The Sun says the public would resent an amendment of the constitution to prolong the life of the present parliament. The people would much more resent the other part of the alternative, the holding of a war-time election. Our contemporary asserts the impossibility of the parties agreeing to an extension of the term. There seems to be no ground for this fear. Surely partyism has not such a grip upon us that we should sacrifice our highest interests to its petty interests. So far both parties are true to a working arrangement by which party politics is subordinated to the demands of the crisis; and there should be no trouble when the time comes for party agreement upon the terms of an extension. There would, of course, be objection to creating a new parliament by act of parliament; but there could be no objection to extension of the parliamentary term from one session to another, with the probability that in an early interval the war would be over and a general election admissable. Everything should be subordinated to a national continuance of effort in the interests of war prosecution. We must win this fight; it is more important than winning elections. We can't do both at the same time. The lesser interest must give place to the greater.

There may be no precedent for a de anno in anno extension of the parliamentary term. Then make a precedent. The barons had no precedent, no constitutional authority for taking King John by the throat and extorting Magna Charta. They set a new precedent and laid the foundation of British liberty, that the world is fighting for to-day. If it was justifiable to create a precedent to create the highest fact of human liberty in the world, would it not be justifiable to create a precedent that would help preserve it? If Canada cannot constitutionally meet the situation to avert a war-time election, she can do it by establishing a new precedent. If she does so she will have added a new clause to the British constitution, and won a place in history to the golry of her public men, who placed patriotism before party. This war is unprecedented, the danger it creates is unprecedented; and the action to meet it may well be unprecedented.

GERMAN INSULTS TO BRITISH SOLDIERS SHOULD BE RESENTED

A notable article on the treatment of British prisoners of war in Germany appears in the September number of Blackwood's Magazine. The writer signs himself simply "An Exchanged Officer," but it may be permissible to state that the gallant officer who bore himself so bravely under the most trying and painful circumstances in which a soldier could be placed is Captain Malcolm V. Hay of Seaton. Captain Hay was severely wounded in the early days of the war, and after spending some time in hospital was taken as a prisoner of war to Germany. He was subsequently released among the first group of exchanged prisoners, and is now living at his home in Old Aberdeen, where he is slowly recovering from his injuries.

The article in Blackwood's is entitled "From Cambrai to Wurzburg," and shows even more vividly than pen pictures from the trenches the true inwardness of German "Kultur." Although the author was very seriously wounded even his helpless condition did not save him from the jeers and insults of his captors. On leaving the hospital for the train which was to take him to the prison camp, he was led to expect at least a stretcher-bed on which to rest his paralyzed limbs. But the carriage with the bed was not for "dem Englander." The wounded Scotchman was ordered by a German officer to get out.

"In spite of my protests this officer attempted to make me climb down on to the platform, but as this was quite beyond my powers he allowed me to crawl along the corridor. At the far end of the tram was a third-class corridor coach of the usual Continental type, with hard wooden seats, the partitions running only half-way to the roof. The coach was full of wounded French and English soldiers, among whom I recognized several who had been in hospital with me, but I was not allowed to speak to them. At the end of the coach was a compartment, one side of which had been transformed into a bed by nailing up a board against the seats which was covered with straw. I was assisted on to my bed of straw by a German N.C.O., who, along with three other soldiers, all with loaded rifles, and fixing bayonets, took up all the remaining room in the carriage. It was evident that I was to be efficiently guarded."

Later the writer explained to a German officer that the wound in his head was only newly healed and that he was still quite paralyzed on one side, and requested permission to be allowed to travel along with the French officer from whose company he had been somewhat rudely shifted. But the German officer's brutal retort was "Das ist schon fur ein Engander."

Jeering Germans.

It is impossible to read without feeling of burning indignation of the insults which were hurled at the wounded British soldiers by the jeering Germans. At one station on the way to the prison.

"The sentry was telling curious visitors that one of the Englanders had been cut in the face and was badly disfigured. Whereupon a German soldier pulled the poor fellow out of the sleeping mass on the floor, and set him up on the seat. The others, standing and pointing with their fingers at the poor mutilated face with coarse jeering laughter. The young Irish soldier sat patiently through it all—his blinded eye was a running sore, the torn cheek in healing had left a hideously scarred hollow and the mouth and nose were twisted to one side. His condition would have stirred pity in the heart of a savage, and yet these Germans laughed and jeered.

"This scene comes back to me with a fresh bitterness when I see the able-bodied young civilians in this country—they must number several millions—who should be ashamed to be seen alive until the perpetrators of deeds such as these have been brought to account.

"This poor fellow came from County Carlow. Is there a man in Carlow or in all Ireland who would have witnessed this same unmoved?"

MORAL GAIN BY WAR

Inspiring Interpretation by Most Famous Philosopher of France

As President of the Academie des Sciences Morales et Politiques, Henri Bergson, France's most dearly loved philosopher, delivered an address on the meaning of the war. He shows how, when Germany was working out her natural self-development, Prussia—an artificially-created State, not one of natural growth introduced and succeeded in imposing on Germany her mechanical system of Government, her mechanical army, which strangled the free, human, development of the people. By the defeat of France in 1870-71, Bismarck induced the whole of Germany to accept Prussian materialism. In the great industrial development that followed, lust of conquest took a new form in the thirst for wealth. So came the desire to dominate the world, and the trust in material force to secure that end. The alliance between militarism and industrialism has made Germany ruthless and regardless of all rules in the conduct of the war. Wishing to strike at the enemy's industry and wealth, she was filled with the spirit of destruction, and to make the war short, in the interests of German commerce, she adopted all methods for terrorizing the enemy population.

Such, says M. Bergson, is the explanation of the spectacle before the world. "Barbarism reinforced by the capture of civilization." Humanity, physically enlarged enormously by the advance of the mechanical arts, was busy trying to fill up "the soulless void in the body politic by creating more liberty, more fraternity, more justice than the world has ever seen." Then, in the person of Germany, brute force sought to usurp the place of moral force. But, says Bergson in a fine passage, great miracles then happened; moral forces suddenly revealed themselves as creators of material force. In Great Britain especially, where "one million, two millions of soldiers suddenly rose from the earth," and "in a nation thought to be mortally divided against itself all became brothers in the space of a day. From that moment the issue of the conflict was not open to doubt." Great spiritual gains, Bergson is confident, will be the issue of the war, and the philosopher of the future will see "how humanity was saved by material suffering from the moral downfall which would have been its end."

THE TREMENDOUS FINANCIAL ISSUES OF THIS TREMENDOUS WAR

Most striking is the reminder which the Imperial Government's drastic new taxation gives of the fact that Great Britain is financing the fight for the liberty of the world. France, in normal times, a very rich nation, but one has been investing her surplus savings in Russia. Russia, too, is a rich nation, but her richness lies, like Canada's, largely in natural resources, which huge sums have been invested in developing. France cannot draw upon her Russian investments to pay for the war. Russia cannot, on demand, turn her natural riches into ready cash to pay for war munitions. Each can follow the example of Germany and turn out paper money for domestic use. Neither can hand out real money for purchases abroad. But Great Britain can, and Great Britain's realizable cash is so vast in quantity, so stupendous a factor in the world's finance, that now, after a whole year of cash disbursements on a scale such as the world never dreamed of, British bank notes, alone of all the paper money of the Allies, are still redeemable in gold.

It is calculated that the national income of Great Britain is twelve billion dollars a year. About two billion dollars of this is saved. Without counting the billion dollars each which she is lending to France and Russia, her total war expenses are five billion dollars per annum. Of course, Britain's income has been affected by the war, but not to any alarming extent, since the British navy enables her foreign trade to be maintained with a minimum of inconvenience. If the British people add to their annual savings by cutting down their living expenses which amount to ten billion dollars, by from 25 to 50 per cent., they can thus finance the war without calling in foreign aid. They have already done this to a considerable extent, and the new taxation now announced, with the important provision of an increase of 40 per cent. in the income tax, will complete the process.

Meanwhile a terrific problem is being created by the war loans floated by the belligerents. If the Allies win the war, both France and Russia will be able to pay Britain the interest on the loans she has advanced, and ultimately the principal as well, and Britain likewise will be able to repay the loans she has obtained from her subjects. If, on the other hand, Germany were to win, she would be able to repay the enormous domestic loans she has floated on paper that now is nothing but promissory notes unbacked by money. She would do this by levying huge indemnities on the Allies. Imagination is staggered at the contemplation of the ruin and downfall which this would involve on Germany's victims, who would be called upon not only to bear the whole cost of the war, but to pay Germany stupendous rewards as well. Not equally appalling will be Germany's position if the role is reversed, for the Allies, who represent civilization, would never inflict such cruel conditions as Germany undoubtedly would. But Germany's position would be one of staggering ruin none the less. As one economist has aptly put it, Germany would have nothing but mountains of worthless paper for her economic reconstruction. Few people have financial imagination enough to foretell what would happen. The bald fact is that from the banking standpoint Germany is already insolvent, and her military collapse would mean national bankruptcy on a scale such as the world has never seen. The stakes in this war are mounting stupendously every hour. More and more it becomes a war to the death"—Montreal Herald-Telegraph.

THE FAIR.

When the pippins, golden yellow, in the orchards tempt a fellow
And the corn is cut for fodder and the pumpkins ripe and round,
Then a man with pasters thrilling comes along the fences billing
And the town lot, long neglected, soon becomes enchanted ground.
In the weedy, dusty clearing, snowy canvas tents appearing
Send a wave of expectation like a wireless on the air,
And the boys begin to muster and the place is in a fluster

It's a marvel how the wagon manages to hold them all,
While old Bess is like a filly newly taken from the stall.
Other loaded turnouts meeting, friends and neighbors loudly greeting,
Everybody starched and ironed in a way to make you stare,
Hoping with a thrill of rapture that your folks a prize will capture,
That's the way you always journey when you're going to the fair.

There are cakes and cream and candy and a sweetly smiling dandy
Who will sell a diamond scarf pin, such a sparkler, for a dime,
And the wooden horses flying and the people who are trying
To beat the simple shell game, but are losers every time.
Bands are blaring, fakirs calling, parachutes and pennies falling,
You are dizzy with the effort to be looking everywhere,
But it is not very often that you go to see a fair.

Homeward in the sunset glory we rehearse the wondrous story
And with bashful tremors shaken show the tintype we had taken
In the shabby tent erected near the noisy poultry shed.
In our dreams again we're gazing at the rows and rows amazing
Of the pigs and sows and horses and the things to eat and wear,
And we count the snows and roses till again the gate uncloses
On the razzle-dazzle racket of the annual county fair.

LESSONS TAUGHT IN EUROPE'S WAR

Artillery Men Tells United States Officers of Guns Which Are Used There

SERVING THE ALLIES

WASHINGTON, Sept. 23—Lessons which the United States may gain from the European war comprise the major part of a letter written by Tracey Richardson of Kansas City, a soldier of fortune, who is now serving with the Princess Patricia's regiment of Canadians in Europe, to a Washington friend.

After an enlistment in the regular army Richardson joined the filibustering expedition under Gen. Lee Christmas in Nicaragua, and has been soldering ever since. He joined the Orozco revolution against Madero, subsequently serving as a colonel of artillery in the Huerta army, which he left at the time of the occupation of Vera Cruz by American forces.

Guard at Mexico City.

When Capt. Burnside, the military attache of the American embassy in Mexico City, believed it would be necessary to defend the embassy from attack, Richardson was placed in charge of the machine guns and later at Vera Cruz he was engaged in "intelligence" work for the army expeditionary forces.

He is known as a machine gun and field artillery expert, and his observations as to the needs of the United States army in the light of experiences in the big war have been carefully studied.

Six Inch Cannon Best.

"I am very glad that Gen. Crozier (U.S.A. chief ordnance) has taken the stand that he has in demanding more artillery," he writes, "there is no reason why we should not have an army of such size and artillery of such worth that we could feel safe under any circumstances. But I cannot say that I agree with him that the 6-inch gun is the best; for while it is true that the 8-inch gun is the most common and, in open warfare is the best, still in this modern trench warfare the gun that is going the most damage is the 6-inch gun.

"This gun will dig up a trench and everything in it; will tear up barbed wire entanglements, or demolish any kind of buildings or temporary fortress, and its range puts it in safety from the ordinary 8-inch gun. By the use either of high explosive or shrapnel shell it does terrific damage.

Secret of German Success.

"This is the secret of the German artillery success. Their 6-inch guns start to work on our trenches and while they will have upwards of five batteries for the attack, the English will have about two guns with which to reply to the cannonade and with such heavy odds against them these two pieces are quickly put out of action.

"The 12-inch or larger guns are good, but are seldom used on entrenchments, because of expense, I think, but for shelling reserve troops, towns where troops are quartered, roads and railways, they are invaluable.

"I would like to see the United States bring out a gun of about 8-inch calibre, but with an extremely long range, sixteen or eighteen miles, if possible. Of course, a gun with such range would not be as accurate as the smaller pieces, but would be excellent for searching out the big guns of the enemy and his aviation camps, headquarters, etc. Of course it would have to be used in conjunction with aeroplane observers.

Value of Air Machines.

"This brings me to another important branch of the service. The material damage done by bombs dropped by air craft of either side has not been great by comparison, but the effect on the morale of troops attacked has been noticeable, while of course for purpose of observation and spotting for artillery they have been of tremendous value.

"I understand the new Vickers machine gun which is being installed in the United States army is the same as the English army is now getting. It is a great weapon, weighing a little more than half of the ordinary machine gun and being much simpler in construction and less given to jamming.

"Also they have an excellent flash concealer, an ordinary piece of stovepipe fitted over the water jacket and projecting about two feet beyond the muzzle, concealing the flash at night. In addition they are fitted with steel belts holding 100 cartridges, which make it possible to fire the gun at a 90 degree angle at air craft. Of anti-air craft guns I have never seen an aeroplane brought down except by rifle fire.

Automatic Like Benier Gun.

"The automatic rifle I have mentioned before is similar to the Benier gun which the navy was partially equipped with at Vera Cruz. While this gun will not take the place of the heavier and more durable machine gun, it is a most useful weapon in trench warfare, as it can be carried about by one man and can be used from any place in the trench without special preparation. In fact, it can be used in a loophole through a steel plate as an ordinary rifle, but, of course, with a great increased volume of fire.

"This light automatic would be of great value in holding a newly gained trench from counter attack, as it does not require the preparation necessary for the larger and heavier models. I hope the United States will retain a good supply of these automatic rifles, even though the Vickers gun is installed.

"The German ordinance equipment contained the instrument which is of great menace to the enemy—telescopic sights for use by sharpshooters. The sights are on special rifles and used only by the very best crack shots, who are able to work form a distance that makes it almost impossible to locate them. A logical development of the telescopic and the periscopic sight would be a combination of the two which would render the user absolutely immune except to big gun fire.

When Richardson wrote he was in an English hospital recovering from injuries received in battle. He expected to return to the front shortly.

When You Wash Your Hair Don't Use Soap

Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali, which is very injurious, as it dries the scalp and makes the hair brittle.

The best thing to use is just plain mulsified cocoanut oil, for this is pure and entirely greaseless. It's very cheap, and beats soaps or anything else all to pieces. You can get this at any drug store, and a few ounces will last the whole family for months.

Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in, about a teaspoonful is all that is required. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, cleanses thoroughly, and rinses out easily. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and is soft, fresh looking, bright, fluffy, wavy and easy to handle. Besides, it loosens and takes out every particle of dust dirt and dandruff.

MORE WOMEN CONDUCTORS.

Berlin Street Railways Were Employing 2,700 in July.

As a result of the depletion in the ranks of street car conductors who have been called to the war the Berlin street railways now have working as conductors 2,700 women, according to the Vossische Zeitung. The number rose to 2,700 in July, and is still on the increase, owing to the further enrollment of men employed on the cars.

Before the war the normal number of conductors on Berlin cars was 4,900. Thus, 60 per cent have already been replaced by women.

NIGHT FIGHTING IS BEST

Darkness and Silence Essential to Most Important Movements

Owing to the havoc caused by modern artillery, commanders are now carrying out a considerable number of their most important movements under the protection of darkness. The night attack is a form of tactics which is becoming increasingly popular, and night fighting has developed into quite a science. All manner of ingenious ruses are practiced to enable large bodies of troops silently to advance across country and launch an unexpected attack on the enemy.

The success of such tactics depends very largely on the silence with which they are carried out. During night operations troops are strictly forbidden to carry their rifles at the "slope," which is to say, across their shoulder. This is to prevent the muzzle of the rifle glittering in the moonlight above the undergrowth. The men have to carry their arms in the right hand, but never with the left, the reason being that the bayonet is slung on the left side, and the weapon would continually rattle against the rifle, and cause a sound which could be heard for a long distance, especially if several hundred soldiers' bayonets and rifles clashed. To cut noise down to a minimum troops during a night attack never march in step. The steady rhythmic tramp of several hundred men would be heard for miles.

Hard roads are avoided, and the soldiers march in broken step each side of the road, on the grass, if possible, two columns of men occupying each side of the highway, this formation being the usual marching formation of "fours" cut in two. Should an alarm be sounded the troops can quickly conceal themselves each side of a road, if they are marching at the side of it, and they are far more likely to escape detection than if they had to scamper noisily from the thoroughfare itself. When advancing over country at night, troops, when ever possible, choose the direction of their attack, so that they march with the moon behind them.

ARMENIANS EXTINCT?

Latest Turkish Atrocities Show Deliberate Fiendish Plan

A letter written by a man in Constantinople to Anourin Williams, a member of the British Parliament, describes the terrible plight of the Armenians. "The misery of our people was never greater. We now know with certainty that the Armenians have been deported in a body from all towns and villages in Cilicia to the desert regions south of Aleppo. The refugees have to traverse on foot distances requiring marches of from one to two (or even more) months before they can arrive at the remote point of the desert assigned to them as their dwelling place, which is bound to become their tomb. We learn, besides, that the roads and the Euphrates are strewn with corpses of the exiles—and those who survive are doomed to certain death, since they will find neither houses, work, nor food in the desert.

"It is a plan to exterminate the whole Armenian people, quite quietly. It is another kind of massacre, one of a more terrible nature. Do not forget that all men of from 20 to 45 years of age are at the front. Those of from 45 to 50 work for the military transports. As to those who have paid the regulation tax for exemption for military service, they have either been exiled or imprisoned under some pretext or another. Hence there remains only the aged and women and children to exile. These unfortunate people have to pass through districts which were reputed dangerous even in times of peace and where there was great risk of being robbed.

"Courts-martial operate everywhere without cessation. Twelve Armenians were hanged at Cæsarea on the charge of having obeyed instructions which they had received from a meeting secretly held at Bucharest by the Trochak and Henchak Societies. In addition to this hanging 32 persons were condemned at Cæsarea to penalties varying from 10 to 15 years of penal servitude. These are for the most part law abiding merchants.

"On the other hand, many have fallen from blows from clubs. Thirteen Armenians were killed on their way from Chabine Karahissa to Sivas. Not a house has been left without search, nor have the bishops' houses, the churches, and the schools. Hundreds of women, young girls and even children thrown in the prisons. The churches and convents have been pillaged, defiled and destroyed. The villages around Van and Bitis have been pillaged, and their inhabitants put to the sword. All the inhabitants of Hara-Hissar were pitilessly massacred, with the exception of a few children who are said to have escaped miraculously."

THE BLACK WATCH

The Black Watch, represents the regiments of the old Forty-second and Seventy-third Royal Highlanders, which in turn represented independent companies from Whig clans, raised between 1715 and 1745 to keep the peace of the Highlands. Each company wore the tartan of its commander, and most of these tartans such as that of the Campbells and Munroes, were of a dark character. Thus these companies gained the name of (in Gaelic "Freiceadun Dubh," or Black Watch, as opposed to the "Leidman Diarag," or Red Soldiers. The title, "Royal Highlanders," was bestowed in 1758, and at that date, no clan having a prior claim to give a tartan to the whole, a new dark tartan was expressly designed, which has since been peculiar to the regiment. Like all British regiments the honors gained were won in far sundered places and embrace Martinique, Corunna, Waterloo, Alma, Sebastopol, Lucknow, Ashanti, Tel-el-Kebir, Egypt, and Paardeburg, South Africa. Many of these battles were fought against foes which are now not merely friends, but comrades in arms, as witness Waterloo, Sebastopol, Lucknow, and, latest of all, Paardeburg.

CANNIBALS ARE HERE! TURKS FEARED MAORIS

An officer of the New Zealand contingent writes: "At Gallipoli a group of men were sitting round the entrance to a dug-out. In their midst squatted a Greek interpreter translating into very bad English some of the news contained in a copy of the Constantinople newspaper Tanin. The article said: "Information is still lacking as to the composition of the enemy's forces, but it appears from indications received from Europe that they must consist chiefly of black men from Africa and Australia. Thus the Straits for the first time in history have had to endure attack by cannibals." No wonder the listening Australians and New Zealanders laughed uproariously. The British force at Gallipoli had been strengthened by the arrival of the Maori contingent, direct descendants of most chivalrous and warlike ancestors, to whom the poaka-roa, or "long pig," as a human joint was termed, was a much esteemed delicacy. Nowadays the Maori, instead of fattening his slaves, spends his time, if he is ambitious, in getting his M.A. degree or in passing his accountancy examinations.

A Splendid Race

These men who landed at Gaba Tepe are the first Polynesian troops to be brought overseas to fight for the Mother Country, and having the spirit of their ancestors, do it well. Back in the Maori wars their forebear warriors were besieged by British troops. The 65th Regiment, it was, sat down around the fortress gates and prepared to starve out the men inside the pah. The hikite peep, as the Maoris called the besieging regiment, ran out of water first, and the situation was getting serious when the palisade gates of the pah opened and a line of brown figures carrying gourds filled with water approached the British trenches. Fearing a ruse the colonel of the 65th ordered his men to stand to arms, but the chief leading the water-bearers smiled. He made a courteous speech, in which he said naively that both parties hitherto had been enjoying themselves, and it would be a pity if so small a matter as lack of water should put a stop to what was really a most pleasant siege. Such a thing was unthinkable. There was abundance of water in the pah for both besieged and besiegers. With further complimentary references he took his leave, and the thirsty hikite peep watched the brown backs for a minute or two in amazement and then buried their faces in the cool gourds. The next morning the pah was empty, and the garrison had walked out a back way through what had looked like an impassable swamp. Only a few old women were left to shout and make a noise during the night.

While Moslems Shivered

Now the Maori fights with us, and he has exchanged his old Tower musket for the Mark II. Star L. E., with which he is a phenomenal shot. The Maoris started to dig themselves in, and made their bivouacs in an old watercourse on the left flank. Then the Paksha (white man) General came along and addressed them, and afterwards occurred a scene that has no counterpart in the weird and varied annals of the Dardanelles. The Maoris, privates and officers, lined up. With protruding tongues and a rhythmical slapping of hands on thighs and cheats, with a deep concerted "a a ah," ending abruptly, they began the Maori haka, the war dance. Shrill and high the leader intoned the solo parts, and the chorus crashed out. As the dancers became more animated the beat of their feet echoed through the gullies of Gallipoli. The leader now declaimed fiercely, now his voice sank to an eerie whisper, still perfectly audible, and as he crouched low to the ground so the men behind him posed. Suddenly, after a concerted crash of voices, the chant ended with a sibilant hiss, a stamp of the right foot, and the detonation of palms slapping the hard ground.

A hundred yards away in the Turkish trenches perplexed Moslems listened to this blood-curdling serenade, and one of them in explanation produced his copy of the Koran. Ominous nods and headshakings followed its reading. "For the first time in history the Straits have had to endure attack by cannibals." And the leader of the haka, a full-blooded Maori, wrote M.A., LL.D., after his name, and spoke better English than many a white man.

AUTUMN WILL HAVE ITS OFFICIAL INAUGURAL TO-NIGHT, SAYS ALMANAC

When The Autumnal Equinox Sounds The Parting Knell For The Good Old Summertime—Can Look Forward to "Indian Summer"

The melancholy days have come" almost—for the almanac sets the official inaugural for tonight, when the Autumn equinox sounds the parting knell for the good old Summertime. Tradition associates with this period the equinoctial storms, which our grandfathers believed to be due to the sun's crossing of the equator. This theory has been discredited by modern science, which asserts that the sun and the equator are alike guiltless of any convulsions of the elements which may occur at this period.

It is a fact, however, that the period of the Autumnal equinox has often been marked by destructive storms, and to-day marks the centenary of what was for decades referred to in New England as the "Great Storm." Beginning on September 23rd, 1815, it raged through the following day. Its ravages were felt from Nova Scotia to New Jersey, but it was severest along the southern New England coast where the storm worked terrible havoc. At Providence the tide rose so high as to engulf part of the town. All the vessels in the harbour, with one or two exceptions, were carried far into the town, and when the tide suddenly ebbed it left many ships high and dry. The bowsprit of one vessel was driven into the third story of a building, and another ship was sandwiched in beside a church and another building. Thirty-five craft in all were swept up into the city. The storm reached its height in the vicinity of Providence, although it was severe elsewhere, and so great was the velocity of the wind that the rain was salty as far inland as Worcester.

The coming of Autumn to the Northern hemisphere means the arrival of Spring in South America, South Africa, Australia and other lands of the equator, where since June Winter has reigned as king. The coming of the Autumnal equinox has also a military significance, for in the northern part of Russia the transition from Summer to Winter occupies but a brief period, and one follows quickly upon the heels of the other, without that balmy period of "Indian Summer" which characterizes the Autumnal season in North America.

KEEPERS NOW GO UNARMED.

One Effect of Prison Reforms, Warden Osborne Asserts

"The system of self-government instituted at Sing Sing," Mr. Osborne said, "has proved a boon not only to the prisoners but to officials as well. The keepers no longer need to go about armed and in constant fear of their lives. Only the other day the principal keeper had aside the loaded club the principal keeper at Sing Sing has carried since time immemorial.

"When the last man made his successful escape from Sing Sing a group of other prisoners applied to me for the privilege of joining in the hunt for him, and I left fifteen of them go. The newspapers had much to say about the fact that one man had got away, but nothing about the fact that fifteen other prisoners stayed out all night in the search for him, and that every one of them came back."

One Day's Activities of A Man's Busy Life

Some insight with the activities of a busy man's life was gleaned yesterday from what was accomplished in one day by the member for West Peterborough in the Ontario Legislature Mr. Geo. A. Gillespie.

In the early hours of the morning, after going through routine office work at the Peterborough Creamery, Mr. Gillespie attended the monthly meeting of the Peterborough Cheese Board, where he took the entire offerings of 2015 cheeses. At one o'clock he was in Lakefield in his official capacity as judge of the Dairy section of the Lakefield Fair, where he closed up his awards. An hour later he made a spirited and patriotic address to the crowds at the Fair on the Patriotic Fund, closing with an earnest appeal for their support of that fund. About 4 p.m. he started out to inspect his cheese in five different factory districts, in the accomplishment of which it was necessary to cover a distance of twenty-five miles. After inspecting in these five factories, and arranging for the delivery of the cheese at railway stations, Mr. Gillespie reached Peterborough as the town clock was striking 7 p.m.

Wanted— Twenty recruits from Peterborough before the end of the week for the 80th Battalion. The city must not allow the country to show us up.

Officer, in volunteer camp, to recruit—Now in the event of a fire breaking out, what are you to do?

Recruit—Run and find you, sir.

"Right. And if I'm not found, what then?"

Woman Inoculates Herself With Deadliest Strain of Gangrene Bacilli A Heroic Act For Science

Her Faith in the Injection is Justified and She Has Recovered—Was Working in The Pathological Laboratories of The American Ambulance

PARIS, Sept. 22.—Mary Davis, a young English woman who has been working in the pathological laboratories of the American ambulance since January, has just performed an act of heroism as great as any record upon the battlefield, an act for which few precedents exist. Her work has been the examination of bacteria from the wounded arriving at the ambulances, and assisting in the experiments with animals to determine their virulence, work for which her studies in the Pasteur Institute in Paris had fully qualified her.

Her duties in the last few months were chiefly directed towards the study of gaseous gangrene. She had seen many examples of the horrible result of this infection, and had observed the invariably fatal course of the disease in animals inoculated with the bacilli. She watched and assisted in the experiments in which guinea pigs were inoculated with gangrene bacilli. She had become convinced of the efficacy of injection and had concluded that the experiments on small animals had given all the results of which they were capable, and that the time had come for an experiment on a normal human body, but not one from the battlefield, fatigued and wounded, and possibly infected by other bacilli.

Well aware that her plan would be prevented if it became known, she determined, without a word to anyone, to risk her life in an attempt to demonstrate the efficacy of the treatment which she was convinced would cure the victims of this dread disease.

Deliberate Preparations.

Her preparations deliberately and completely made, she waited until she was about to leave for a holiday, so that her absence would not disturb the work in the laboratory. She chose the deadliest strain of bacilli in the laboratory, obtained from the latest fatal case, of which two drops of culture suffices to kill a guinea pig. Then she inoculated herself in a manner most certain to produce the disease in animals injecting 50 times the amount used to kill a guinea pig, making one injection deep into the muscles of her thigh, the other just beneath the skin.

Two hours later she quietly came to the laboratory and asked to be treated in the same manner as animals under experiment.

The consternation caused by her announcement among the medical staff may be easily realized. Gangrene is so rare in civil life that it is practically negligible, but since the war the dramatic rapidity and the horribleness of its effects make it more dreaded than any other form of disease, even tetanus, which the war has produced.

Injections with a quinine solution were made at once at the points where she had inoculated the deadly bacilli. She was sent to the nearest hospital for observations and further treatment. Quinine injections were given a second time. Symptoms of a slight degree of infection developed within 24 hours, but they subsided without any operation becoming necessary. She is now completely recovered.

The young heroine who is not yet thirty, will be the first to regret that the story of her act has become known. She is a hard and conscientious worker, absorbed by her duties and absolutely free from any impulsive tendencies or the wish for publicity, her sole interest in the dangerous experiment having been its value as a test of the efficacy of a certain form of treatment. She has since defended her action, saying that experiments with microbes are just as justifiable as those with new types of aeroplanes or with the anti-gas respirator. She took as calm and scientific interest in her own treatment as if she were one of the laboratory guinea pigs.

Calmly Described Symptoms.

She calmly described the symptoms and pointed out how they compared with those observed in an animal's leg, the stiffness of the leg muscles being the same as watched in an injected animal.

Dr. Kennedy Taylor, of the University of Minnesota pathologist at the American Ambulance, who has been directing the researches with the quinine treatment of gaseous gangrene, told the Mail and Empire correspondent that while no one could feel higher admiration for the young woman's readiness to risk her life for the cause of science than himself, the scientific value of the experiment must not be over estimated.

"There are too many unknown factors," he stated, "to warrant any inference to be drawn in any case that recovery in this case was the direct result of the treatment," he exclaimed. "However it forms an important addition to the results already obtained by the experiments with guinea pigs."

200 by the end of the week. It is up to the city. The boys from the country are responding to the call. Join the 80th.

War Notes

The liner Dwinsk, which sailed from New York a few days ago for Archangel, Russia, carried 8,000 tons of aeroplanes, autotrucks, locomotives, ammunition, etc.

The number of enlistments to the Italian army form Sicily has occasioned pitiable distress among the women and children of the island. Four cents a day is allowed a mother of a family, and two cents for each child over four.

The United States Commission for relief in Belgium has spent $80,000,000 for relief in Belgium during the past ten months. In addition to the supplies sent to Belgium the Commission has, since the 1st of April last, been feeding the destitute people of the German-occupied territory of France. These French sufferers number more than 2,500,000. More than 90,000,000 pounds of supplies have been sent to that part of France. Also about 10,000 tons of food has been donated to relief work in the Grand Duchy of Luxemburg.

War has brought such a commercial boom to Archangel, Russia's northern-most port, that it seems to be becoming a sort of Arctic Circle New York. Henry D. Baker, United States Commercial Attache at Petrograd, who has made a visit to Archangel, reports that one hundred warehouses and thirty piers have been built there during the last few months, and that huge quantities of freight are continually passing through on their way to other points in Russia.

Artillerymen with a battery of 30-centimeter mortars on the Isonzo line held a celebration recently on the occasion of the firing of 25 the mortars. The same mortar is stated to have been one of those which helped to reduce the fortifications of Namur and Antwerp.

The German Army and Navy Departments recently announced that they have provided sufficient wooden gloves, fur coats, and ear protectors for another Winter campaign.

One thousand eight hundred parcels, traveling from Germay by mail to addresses in Spain and Portugal, via the Scandinavian countries and England, have been siezed by the French authorities at Dieppe.

Ambassador Morgenthau, the American representative at Constantinople is now acting for eight nations. He recently added the diplomatic interests of Russia, Italy, and Montenegro to his list.

A ministerial order has been issued in Paris permitting the export of wine from France to her allies and to the United States.

The total loss of Prussian troops alone reach 1,740,836, according to statistics compiled in Amsterdam.

Thirty thousand priests are stated to be fighting in the French armies. They are in the trenches fighting shoulder to shoulder with the other men. The casualty list among the clerical soldiers is a long one.

The Russian harvest is stated to be far above the average of any of the years from 1909 to 1914, inclusive. The estimates indicate that when the cutting is completed, in a few weeks' time, the yield will be about 2,000,000,000 bushels, taking all the crops together. The Winter-sown wheat has been harvested as well as a large proportion of the Spring-sown crops. It is expected that there will be 450,000,000 bushels of grain available for export.

The French have inaugurated a new method of blocking the German air scouts. The French machines patrol a given section of the German line at a height of 2,000 metres and two more at a height of 3,000 metres, the latter flying in the opposite direction from the former. If a German scout tries to get through he is attacked simultaneously by the nearest two Frenchmen, one above and the second below. If the two are insufficient to stop him others join in the fight.

The functions of the City Government at Warsaw are being discharged by a committee of citizens. The committee recently voted to raise a loan of $2,500,000. Application has been made to the German Civil Governor for permission to obtain from Cracow schoolbooks published in Polish for use in the Warsaw schools. The German military and civil authorities are now installed in the Russian Government buildings. General von Beseler, conqueror of Antwerp and Novo Georgievsk, has been selected as Governor General of the occupied provinces of Poland and Russia.

Fifteen hundred reservists sailed for Naples a few days ago from Jersey City on the Italian liner Dante Alighieri, and among them was G. B. Mezzi, President of the Mezzi Silk Company of New York, who is a Lieutenant of the Fifth Alpine Regiment. He was accompanied by his wife and three children.

Second Division Glad To Get To The Front----Reviewed By The King Before Their Departure

LONDON, Sept. 23.—"Well, I guess we're off at last," remarked a Canadian soldier yesterday as he marched away with his battalion from Shorncliffe camp to be reviewed by his Majesty the King and Lord Kitchener. His words were echoed by many others, and among all the troops participating in the great spectacle was an air of satisfaction because the occasion heralded an immediate departure for the front. This particular soldier, in common with so many of his comrades in the second contingent, had enlisted for overseas service nearly a year ago, and was growing very tired of routine training. They all knew that they were not going off on a picnic, but the prospect of really getting into the midst of things at "the front" gave them a curious sense of excitement and elation that made every man square his shoulders and step out with the steady measured tread that marks the trained soldiers in perfect physical condition. The King was delighted with the appearance of the division.

Aside from the significance as the Royal farewell to Canada's second contingent the review was much the same as those of other occasions. The complete second division was drawn up on the open, gently rolling Downs of Beachborough Park close to the Queen's Canadian Hospital, and it made an imposing sight. The sky was overcast with heavy gray clouds, and a chilly wind blew from the north-west, but fortunately it did not rain.

The King on Horseback.

Accompanied by Lord Kitchener and several distinguished staff officials, his Majesty arrived about 9 o'clock in a special train and rode to Beachborough on his fine charger. The King is an excellent horseman, and enjoys nothing more than a good ride. As the Royal party reached the reviewing point the massed bands of the division struck up the National Anthem and his Majesty was introduced to the officers of the headquarters staff. He then, after taking the Royal salute, rode up and down the long lines of troops chatting with commanding officers and generally taking a keen interest in the appearance of all ranks. The inspection over, there was the usual march past, and his Majesty rode off to the accompaniment of round after round of ringing cheers from over 20,000 throats. The road back to Shorncliffe station was lined with troops of the Canadian training division, who came to the Royal salute as the King and his party passed.

The review was attended by hundreds of visitors, many of whom had come down especially to participate in the farewell to Canada's second army. The event was kept more or less of a secret, but the news spread fairly rapidly in the neighbourhood of Folkestone and Shorncliffe, and the streets along the route from Shorncliffe to Beachborough were lined with many civilians as well as the soldiers. His Majesty was given a warm welcome. General Steele, General MacDougall and several other Canadian staff officers accompanied him to the station. Lord Kitchener, as well as the King, was pleased with the fine appearance and bearing of the troops, and warmly congratulated the officers commanding.

Preparations for the departure of the second division have been proceeding apace for days. Quartermasters are working overtime to see that every man has every article of kit in good order, regimental transport is being outfitted with new harness and waggons when necessary, officers are disposing of their surplus belongings—they are only allowed to take 35 pounds of baggage over and above what they are able to carry themselves—and there is an air of great activity over the whole camp. The divisional transport has been improved by the addition of a fleet of big new motor trucks, while the field hospitals and other medical units have been brought up to their proper establishment by the addition of several dozen fine new motor ambulances. These arrived only a day or two ago. Arrangement has also been made at the training depot for reserve battalions that will furnish reinforcements to units of the second division. The destination of the troops is still an official secret, but there appears to be little doubt now that they are going to France.

And so at last after many weary months of hard and exacting work under conditions so entirely different from anything in the experience of the majority of them, this splendidly-trained secret citizen army of Canada, an army even more representative of the great Dominion than was the first, is moving off to Flanders. With them go the best wishes of the King of England and the prayers of thousands of relatives across the ocean. But, above all, they carry with them the confidence of Britain's King, Britain's greatest general, and of the people of Canada. It is only necessary to watch them marching by, to know that never was such confidence placed in another body of men.

THIS SCHOOL GIRL HAD BAD FAINTING SPELLS

Was Weak and Run Down. But Dr. Chase's Nerve Food Made Complete Cure

The most critical time in a girl's life comes during the school age, when she is impelled by rivalry to put forth her best efforts in studying for examinations. At the time she should have healthful outdoor exercise and abundance of fresh air, to keep the blood pure and rich, she is confined to her studies. Is it any wonder that she becomes run down in health and suffers from headaches, indigestion, loss of appetite and spells of weakness or fainting?

The case described in this letter is a good illustration and you can read here the splendid results of using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food to help through this critical period.

"While attending school my daughter became weak and very much run down. She was frequently troubled with bad fainting spells, and nothing we tried seemed to do her any good. We were advised to try Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and did so with the most satisfactory results. I am pleased to tell you that after using five boxes of the Nerve Food she was completely cured, and has no return of the faint ing spells."

This statement is certified to by Mr. Hamilton Houston, Justice of the Peace.

The reason Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is so effective in cases of this kind is because it is extraordinary blood-forming qualities. By creating an abundance of rich, red blood it strengthens the action of the heart, revitalizes the exhausted nerves and builds up the system in every way.

The appetite is restored, digestion improves, you rest and sleep well, and the new vigour and energy is felt in every organ of the human body. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is doing wonderful work for men, women and children whose systems have become weak and run down. 50 cents a box, 6 for $2.50, all dealers or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

LARGE ATTENDANCE AT THE LAKEFIELD EXHIBITION

Fair Was Bigger and Better Than Ever—Exhibits Were Well Up to Standard—The Racing Card—Partial List of Prize Winners

LAKEFIELD, Sept. 23—Yesterday was a banner day for the annual exhibition of the Lakefield Agricultural Society. The weather was ideal and from the opening of the fair until the close, nothing transpired to mar the success the directors had hoped for. When six o'clock came a large and apparently satisfied congregation of people vacated the Fair Grounds for another year, confident that the directors had equalled if not exceeded all previous efforts to make this year's exhibition one of the best on record. Mr. W. Sherin, Secretary-Treasurer, was one of the busiest men on the grounds, barring possibly some of the members of the midway fraternity, who exercised their energies in another direction. The sudden death on Tuesday of Mr. A. J. Treanum, one of the directors of the Society, added a sombre touch to the completed work. For some weeks past the deceased and other members of the Board have worked indefatigably to bring about the result that was achieved yesterday. As was stated in yesterday's issue the late Mr. Trennum was stricken with heart failure just as he had completed rolling the race track. He succumbed within a few minutes.

The Band.

The Lakefield Band contributed an excellent repertoire of music including a number of patriotic airs, which supplemented the efforts of Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P., and Mr. G. A. Gillespie, M.P., who made a couple of stirring patriotic addresses.

The exhibits which were numerous were well up to standard. The stock attracted a large share of attention, also the grain and fruit exhibits. The latter constituting striking testimony to the productivity of the soil in and around the Lakefield district

The Racing.

The racing was one of the features of the Fair. A large crowd witnessed three well contested races. The track was inclined to be a little slow and some difficulty was experienced in getting the horses away. This part of the performance was in charge of Mr. Harry Winch, who handled the bell to the apparent satisfaction of all concerned. The free-for-all brought out three starters. "Susie Hall," owned by Dr. Johnston, of Peterborough, took three straight heats. The summary:

Susie Hal	1	1	1
Phil Ha Ha	2	2	2

2.35 Class.

There were four entrants in the 2.35 class, which provided an exciting finish between "Dr. Johnston" of Port Hope, and Ora Medium, owned by F. Montgomery of Peterborough. The summary:

Dr. Johnston	1	1	1
Ora Medium	2	2	2
Borbon E.	3	3	3
Little Myrtle	4	4	4

Green Race.

Jim Shell	2	1	1
Minnie B.	3	3	3

The Dog Race.

The dog race provided a barrel of fun for the spectators. There were two contestants. "Chum," owned by Arthur Webster, and "Glady," owned by Geo. Walton. The latter was introduced to the crowd after the first named canine had completed a heat on his own account. The former won in easy fashion. Walton's dog was a strong contender for second place and when last heard of was still in the running.

PROMINENT EXHIBITS

While there were a number of out door and indoor exhibits at the Lakefield Fair deserving of special notice there was an evident lack of enterprise on the part of the merchants of Lakefield and the varied industrial interests of the village, in encouraging their annual Exhibition. It is to be hoped that on another occasion, there will be a better manifestation of interest in strengthening the hands of the Fair directors, who have shown such good wisdom in their efforts to improve the Society's growth and progress.

GRAFTON & CO.'S "CLASSY" DISPLAY.

That was what was called the attractive exhibit of men's approval shown at the Fair by the popular clothing house of Peterborough, Messrs. Grafton & Co., Limited. It was certainly "classy" in several respects. The goods shown were such as appealed to the discriminating dresser, for they were looked over and over, and closely inspected, not only for their artistic lines, fine proportions, and excellent material, but to the moderate cost, as revealed by the price tickets. The oftener that Grafton & Co. make a public display of this class of clothing, the more widespread does their reputation become as an authority on "what men should wear."

In this display was featured some fashionable examples of the trend of the styles for fall and winter wear. In the centre of the exhibit was shown a smart looking young man's suit after the English model. It was made of fine blue serge of smooth texture, with the fashionable short coat, about 29 or 30 inches long, small sleeves, and wide, thick lapel, and ticketed at $18.00. This was a type of the newest out for smart dressers this season. Other suit specials were shown at $8.50, $10, $12, $14 and $16, which in point of quality, value and fashionable fabrics will be appreciated by those who admire a well dressed, manly figure.

These chilly evenings and mornings, reminding men of their overcoat needs, gave a special interest to the new shapes and makes of overcoats shown in Grafton's exhibit. Comfortable top coats at $10 and up to $16 were on view in heavy warmth-giving fabrics. Boys' and children's cute and attractive suits were also shown.

A two-piece khaki coloured outfit labeled at $2.00, and a khaki overcoat at $3.50 being samples of the values and snappy effects. The samples of boys' military clothing were much admired for their smart proportions and the marked low cost proved that a house that can produce an article at the lowest cost can sell it at the lowest price.

This exhibit was mainly intended to serve as an illustration of the correct styles and prices of clothing carried in Grafton & Co.'s large branch store in Peterborough, where under its careful, systematic and methodical management, the business has been growing larger and larger year by year. For the past twenty-three years Grafton & Co. have offered these special prizes at this Fair, for the best three teams of general purpose horses, the horses, waggon and harness to be considered in awarding the prize. The names of the winners of these prizes will be found in the list of awards in another column.

Many compliments were bestowed on the very attractive appearance of this exhibit. These in charge had secured a prominent location at the entrance to the western gate, where a striking effect was made in a large open tent, decorated with flags, bunting and coloured placards.

THE FORD CAR AND THE FARMER

At this Fair a good opportunity was afforded to see the new Ford car for 1916 in all its beauties, with $60 clipped off last year's price.

"Ford cars are low in price but they are not cheap," as the way it was put to the son of a Harvey farmer at the Lakefield Fair yesterday. There is a wonderful difference between low cost and cheapness. There is no economy in cheapness, but low cost can be quite consistent with quality. The Ford has been demonstrating in this way the truth of this in price and why it is NOT cheap.

It was with such good [illegible] successful Peterborough Sales Agent for the Ford, Mr. Jos. J. Duffus, and his associate, convinced the farmer that the Ford is the car that gives most for the least money.

The farmer is a shrewd motor car buyer. When the farmer buys a motor car he has to see about it," says Mr. Duffus. He doesn't take any thing on say so. And he particularly searches for the hidden quality. He has been operating his farm machinery by gasoline engine and is familiar with the principle and operation of motors. He has before him at all times the thought that he must have a car that will take him there and back. In most cases when he plans buying a car he has been giving the subject thought for a year or so and reading up on it.

The Ford was well looked over at Lakefield. All its parts were in re-

CANOE SWAMPED AND THE OCCUPANT HAD WET EXPERIENCE

Two Keene Young Men Had an Exciting Time—News of the Village

KEENE, Sept. 23—Last Thursday afternoon two of the young men of the village had rather an exciting experience while out canoeing. While paddling down the river they were overtaken by a friend in a motor boat who invited them for a sail. They paddled up beside the boat and one of the occupants got safely aboard while the other was less fortunate, the canoe getting swamped. He was soon rescued. After getting in the boat he was asked to disrobe and have his clothes on the canoe top of the boat to dry which he proceeded to do. Wrapping himself in a blanket and sitting in the bottom of the boat for a pleasant, but hilly, sail around the lake we are pleased to state the young man is none the worse for his experience.

Voice of The People

Dear Mr. Editor,—Kindly allow me space in your valuable paper to speak to some of the ladies of Peterborough.

Red Cross Work.

I heard it said there were ladies in Peterborough that were not working in some way for this cause. It seems hard to believe, as there is so much to do, and needs everybody that has two hands. Some perhaps think they cannot do anything. I know quite well they can, for some of the things are very simple. For instance, hemming a kerchief. A small child could do that, and there are thousands wanted. Some of the things that are needed are night shirts, bed socks, slippers, socks, wristlets, helmets, scarfs, and many other things are needed now—at once.

When the war is over and meetings are called and the soldiers stand there and thank with all their hearts the ladies of Peterborough for comforts they have so willingly supplied to them while at the front, could you sit and listen with a clear conscience and happy heart, if you had not done anything. Don't make any excuses. If you want to do something and don't know who to approach, go to church next Sunday and ask your minister's wife and she will be delighted to put you in the way and see that you get something. If you cannot attend any society or meeting, do something at home. Ask your friend for a small donation. That will be doing something if you cannot sew or knit. Wind somebody's yarn and give them more time to knit; do something. We are not only working for the soldiers, but for something higher and whatever happens, let it be said of you, "She hath done what she could." Make a big effort, then, and help, and remember "a friend in need is a friend indeed." Thanking you, dear sir, I am

Yours sincerely,
A Helper.

Protest Against Germans' Removal of Tracks to Poland.

HAVRE, Sept. 21—The Belgian Government has protested to neutral States against the action of the German administration in tearing up and transporting to Poland the tracks of the Belgian railroads.

The protest is based on an article of the Fourth Hague Convention, which stipulates that the occupation of invaded territory shall constitute only on occupation de facto.

Removal of the railroads, the note contends, will make much more difficult the transaction of business by a large portion of the population of Belgium.

Russian Vilna Army Group Said to Have Escaped Enemy

PETROGRAD, Sept. 22—I am able to state definitely that the Vilna army group has successfully extricated itself from the difficulties of envelopment on three sides by the enemy. After violent combats for the crossing of the middle Vilya, the Russians retreated from Vilna towards Oshmina, fighting on their flanks and front successfully that the enemy was compelled to fall back from the Novo Vilesk-Molodetchnovo line.

After entering Vilna the enemy evidently extended along the front of the 30 miles to the station of Finnkow, the territory to the south of this still being held by the Russians. The successful action of the Russians south of Dvinsk at the village of Vidsy may prove a serious threat to the German rear operating on both sides of the railway to Novo Seventziany and Glubokoe. It is expected that Germany, having gained Vilna at the cost of colossal losses, will continue to drive a wedge in between the Pripet marshes and the Dvinsk region simultaneously conducting a deep turning move on the Dvina line and developing an advance from the Sbonim region.

The position on the southern front continues brilliant and the strategic defeat inflicted by Gen. Ivanoff on four German armies on this front completely frustrated their plan for an invasion of South Russia, with Kiev as the objective. This success is a great blow to Mackenzen and comes at the very moment when most needed. The Russian success will produce an excellent effect on the spirit of the retreating western and northern armies.

ALLIED AVIATORS DAMAGE NAVAL BASE AT BURGES

AMSTERDAM, Sept. 23—Allied aviators bombarded the German naval and military base at Bruges Sunday and Monday night, doing heavy damage.

Reports reaching here to-day said that a German factory was destroyed.

FIRE DOES MUCH DAMAGE

MONTREAL, P.Q., Sept. 23—Fire this morning caused about $50,000 damage to the Princess Theatre.

"The best gift you can send to the boys at the front is more men to help them along." Lt.-Col. Johnston Join the 80th to-day

Blockade of Park St. By Sewer Work Is Necessary

Monaghan Council Made Enquiry About Complete Obstruction of Highway Near Exhibition Grounds —Other Details of Board of Works Meeting.

COST OF BONACORD BRIDGE

At a meeting of the Board of Works last night Mr. Israel Payne asked for a sewer connection to a house he owns on Lock street outside the city's limits. He stated that he was a considerable ratepayer and, if it were possible to secure this privilege, would be greatly accommodated.

Ald. Green replied that there was no legislative sanction providing a sewer connection to property outside the city.

Ald. Weir—If they get the city privileges at township taxes they may be all the longer joining the city.

Mr. Payne replied that there was no danger on that score.

Ald. Evans—There might be others who would want it.

Mr. Payne—There is this difference. I am paying taxes in the city and have been for many years. Otherwise I would not ask for this accommodation.

Ald. Green stated that there would be no possibility of the city doing anything this fall or winter. Advice on the legality of the request will be first secured from the city solicitor and forwarded to Mr. Payne.

The City Clerk told the Board that there had already been two requests similar to this.

Ald. Saunders did not think it exactly right that no distinction was made in favour of city taxpayers and moved, seconded by Ald. Evans, that the City Solicitor's advice on the point in question be obtained.

A "friendly note" was received from the North Monaghan Council through Peck, Kerr and McElderry referring to the complete blockade of Park street south of the Exhibition grounds in consequence of the construction of the new trunk sewer. It was never contemplated, they wrote, that traffic would be entirely obstructed.

Ald. Green said he had told Reeve McIntosh that it was a physical impossibility to put in that sewer without using the entire street. In fact more space would be welcome to the workmen if it were available.

Ald. Evans, that the letter be received.

Ald. Dobbin moved, seconded by Ald. Edgar moved in amendment, seconded by Ald. Saunders, that the Clerk forward a reply to the township that the street would not be blocked more than absolutely necessary.

The motion carried.

City Engineer Parsons asked the Board whether it was intended to build the Bonacord street bridge by contract or day labour.

Moved by Mayor Buller, seconded by Ald. Duffus, that the work be done by day labour.—Carried.

Ald. Stratton suggested that in view of the high tax rate and the high borrowing rate it might be advisable to postpone the work until next year.

Mayor Buller, Ald. Edgar and Ald. Saunders chorused the reply that there would be no difference then.

Ald. Stratton—There might be. The present rate of interest is 6 per cent.

Ald. Green replied to a casual question that most of the work done by the Board this year had been considerably below the estimates.

Mayor Buller—In other words you kept the estimates high enough to be always below them.

Ald. Green—No, I had nothing to do with forming the estimates.

Ald. Dobbin suggested that some of this construction work might be done during the winter in return for charitable disbursements.

Cost of Filling.

On motion of Mayor Buller, seconded by Ald. Evans, the original estimate for the Bonacord street bridge was increased from $2,913 to $3,250 to include the cost of filling the approaches.

Mayor Buller said that this work might not cost anything if the ashes collected by the garbage contractors could be obtained.

Ald. Duffus inquired about the present use of such ashes.

Ald. Green said that he had needed some last winter and had bought a load from the collectors.

Ald. Duffus considered that ashes used as fillers was too valuable a material to be overlooked by the city.

Ald. Dobbin advised the close examination of the garbage collecting contract next year.

Valuable ashes are being wasted at the incinerator, Ald. Edgar observed, and no effort is being made to utilize them. They could be used as fertilizer.

Ald. Green, replying to Ald. Duffus, stated that the ashes collected did not belong to the city, hence there could be no direction given in regard to their disposal. He also added that when they were used to fill up several sunken places the citizens demanded "that the nuisance be abated."

Ald. Stratton—Why were they wasted in the past.

Ald. Green—There was no place to put them.

This concluded the argument about the ashes and few of the aldermen showed an knowledge of the duties or privileges of the garbage collectors regarding the disposal of the ashes they collect.

Refund Half Bill.

The roots of a maple tree worked through the joints of a sewer connection to Mrs. L. Spry's house on Stewart street. The cost of repair work was $48.70 and as part of it was outside the street line, Ald. Duffus and Ald. Saunders moved that the city pay half the cost of the work.

This opened the question of setting forth a policy to regulate cases of a similar nature. Mr. Parsons stated that usually householders having a blocked sewer seek the difficulty within the street line and not finding it, they uncover the connection out to the break and of course encroach on city property. The trench is refilled without the engineer being notified and he is unable to determine the cost of the work.

The proposed by-law will be aimed at this method of procedure.

Moved by Ald. Saunders, seconded by Ald Stratton, that a walk be constructed on the west side of Thomas street.

Speakers Appeal To Fair Crowd

Parliamentary Representatives For West Peterboro Deliver Patriotic Addresses at The Lakefield Fair

LAKEFIELD, Sept. 23—A feature of the fair which was accounted for yesterday, was a couple of patriotic addresses. The speakers were Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P., and Mr. G. A. Gillespie, M.P.P. They addressed a large crowd from the judges' stand.

"Things are in a bad way," said Mr. J. H. Burnham, with considerable emphasis. He went on to review conditions as they existed today, and the probability of the Balkan States becoming involved in the world war. The British people are loyal, and would fight to the last ditch. The speaker volunteered to enlist, but was informed that he was a little too old. He was willing to do anything if only carry water.

Continuing Mr. Burnham said: Enormous sacrifices are being made by the British Empire. We are ready to do our duty in this crisis. I beseech of you who are eligible to come forward and enlist. We have sent upwards of 50,000 men across the seas, and inside of three months we hope to have 500,000.

Fight or Pay.

Mr. G. A. Gillespie, M.P.P., who followed Mr. Burnham, directed his remarks to those who must of necessity, remain at home, and the opportunity they had of doing their share by monetary contributions. It was a case of fight or pay. The money subscribed last year to the Canadian Patriotic Fund was nearly expended, and more would be required, if the good work of caring for the dependents of those who are at the front, is to continue. The administration of the fund has been accomplished with a minimum of cost. A small sum had been expended for clerical work, but this was offset by the interest paid by the bank for money deposited. Cheese factories had not been slow to contribute to the fund, and he hoped a ready response would be made in event of an additional fund being raised.

TWO BOYS WERE COMMITTED FOR TRIAL

Prisoners Will Remain In The County Gaol In The Meantime.

HAVELOCK, Sept. 23—The two boys who burglarized the store of Mr. Isaac a few days ago appeared before Magistrates Joyce and Kindred of Havelock, and upon being charged with the theft, pleaded guilty, and were committed for trial at Peterborough, to which city they were taken by Constable McNichol.

The boys, who blamed the "movies" as the inspiration for their thefts, were laden down with a long list of plunder which they had obtained, they said, by burglarizing a butcher shop in Norwood, a harware store in Tweed, and by pilfering the contents of a gum machine in front of McMaster's store in the latter town.

The prisoners proved to be two youngsters from Tweed aged 13 and 16 years.

They were busily engaged in decking themselves out in new clothes when Messrs. Isaac and Thomas, who sleep in the rear of the store, awoke to the knowledge that their property was being purloined. The two boys were speedily captured. Constable McNichol notified, and the youthful desperadoes led away to the cells.

Everybody is doing it now—joining the 80th Battalion — the detachment whose commanding officer can say that there is not a black mark against one of his command.

returns by which every cent received is followed to the time it leaves the country. Mr. Jones congratulated the members and arranged for a complete detailed statement to be sent to him.

He replied to a question that the money has to be sent to the principal contractors, Martins, Limited, who in turn pay it to Tuckett's. Under this method there can be no suspicion raised in regard to payments and the original simplicity of details is maintained. The principal fact is that Canadian manufactured tobacco is going to the Tommies and through the Overseas Club Fund more tobacco can be purchased for 25c than for 75c of even $1.00, though the ordinary channels.

BANK CLEARINGS

The bank clearings for the week ending September 23rd totalled $346,401 a decrease from the previous week of $20,905. The same week last month the clearings were $367,202, while for the same week last year the clearings were $440,821.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES

A reception to Mr. and Mrs. Roper will be held in the Association Parlours tomorrow evening at 8 o'clock, which will be under the auspices of the Board of Directors and the Ladies' Auxiliary. A cordial invitation is extended to the public to be present and meet Mr. and Mrs. Roper. Members of the Ladies' Auxiliary, Mothers' Club, Board of Directors and the committees are urged to be present.

We have just received a number of letters from members of the Y who are on active service. Among them is one from Wm. Hamilton and Allin Sharpe of Shorncliffe, Eng., and from Mel. Birdall of Kingston. The Y. Honour Roll now includes nearly 700 members who have enlisted. The boys are very good to write and we are always glad to receive news from our boys at the front.

The contract for the heating and plumbing in connection with the alterations being made to the Y.M.C.A. building, has been awarded to George Brenton. The electric wiring contract has been awarded to Alexander and Miller. These men are installing the necessary fixtures and have a force of competent workmen engaged in the building. James Rose, who has the general contract, has been rushing the work in the past week and now has the partitions for 11 small rooms set up in what was the large hall. The work of adjusting the space in the basement is now under way. The iron column which will support the south side of the building is now being placed in position. The Wm. Hamilton Co. are overhauling the boiler putting in new flues and grate sections, also rebricking the fire backs and placing the old boiler in as good a condition as possible.

According to the contract the work must be completed by November 15th, although it is thought the worst part of the mess will be over by the middle of October, and the several lines of activities will be in full swing by that time.

MUNITION ORDERS TO SWISS

GENEVA, Sept. 21—Accompanied by a commission of British experts, the British Minister at Berne recently visited the watch factories at Locle after which a large order was given for the manufacture of munitions there.

The Italian Government has given a similar order, amounting to several million pounds sterling, to watchmakers at Chaux-de-Fonds, near Neuchatel.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

Varsity Withdraws From Intercollegiate Sport Until The End of The War

TORONTO, Sept 23.—There is momentous news from the athletic field today. Varsity has withdrawn from all intercollegiate sport this term. This decision was reached at a meeting of the Varsity athletic directorate held last night. This decision spells the disruption of the Intercollegiate Rugby Union, the Intercollegiate Hockey Association, the Intercollegiate Basketball Association, the Intercollegiate Football Association, and kills Intercollegiate competition in tennis and track and field athletics. Its effect upon rugby looms large upon the horizon just now, for rugby and hockey are the two college sports which the public follows.

Varsity's intention of withdrawing from intercollegiate sport was telephoned by the secretary of the athletic directorate, A. T. Reed, to Howard Melville, secretary of the McGill Association, last night, and the Montreal body will meet to-day to make its official decision in the matter. There can be no other result than the suspension of intercollegiate rugby and all other sports this fall, for Queen's Athletic Association has already announced its wish to withdraw though, to satisfy the other colleges, they would produce a rugby team if they decided to play out the schedule.

"The athletic directorate was unanimously of the opinion that in the present state of affairs, it would be best to withdraw from all inter collegiate competition," said Secretary Reed to-day. "All the athletics that the student body requires will be furnished through inter-faculty competition."

"Will senior rugby players and hockey players be prohibited from playing on inter-faculty teams?" Secretary Reed was asked.

"I do not fancy that there will be any difficulty in this regard," was the reply. "Out of 23 senior rugby players 17 have already enlisted, and several more are preparing to take out commissions. Of 24 hockey players on our three champion teams, 18 have enlisted, while over half of last year's track team are with the colours."

"How about students who desire to play hockey or rugby with outside teams?"

"Well! While I do not desire to express any decided opinion on the matter, I do not think that the athletic directorate will act arbitrarily in the matter. Each man must make his application for permission to play as usual, and each case will be decided on its merits."

DROPPING OF SPORTS IS STRONGLY ADVOCATED

The Toronto Mail and Empire says: It is announced that the University of Toronto will not be represented in intercollegiate football this season, and it is expected that Queen's and McGill also will withdraw from sports while the war continues. This is an example that might well be followed by other sporting and athletic organizations. While the fate of Canada and the Empire is in the balance and tens of thousands of Canadians are laying down their lives in France and Flanders, we who remain at home, ought, out of decency, to show ourselves conscious of the tremendous issues that are at stake, and ought not to diffuse our interests and our energies upon amusements and sports that add nothing to the fighting strength of the nation. Our thoughts ought to be fixed upon the war. We ought to be taxing ourselves, to do something in this the greatest struggle the world has ever seen, to show that we are worthy of the heritage that has been handed down to us by our fathers, and the sacrifices now being made for us by our brothers. This is a time essentially when we should put away from us childish things. Confident though we are in the ultimate triumph of our cause, our country is now a house of mourning, and will be in deeper black before this war is ended. At such a time it is almost an indecency for thousands of athletic young Canadian men to be straining their muscles in play, and a greater indecency for tens of thousands of others to be looking on at them.

No Canadian who pretends to any acquaintance with the events of the past year can think or speak of Canadian athletes and sportsmen without mentally taking off his hat to them. They have answered their country's call in greater numbers, perhaps, than any other class of the community. It is said that practically all of last year's Varsity team has enlisted. And to mention but one other organization, it may be said that the Argonauts had set a record in enlistment that would be a credit to an English rowing club. Those sportsmen and athletes who have gone to the front or are going, and those who believe that out of respect for them their comrades who remain at home should not indulge in their amusements as freely as though the country were not at war, represent the true sportsman's instinct; not those who light-headedly shout "Business and our sporting schedules as usual."

AQUATIC BATTERY IS UNDER WAY IN TORNTO

Toronto, September 23.—The fond hope of sundry paddlers, oarsmen and sailors that an "aquatic battery" for the 34th, be organized, was practically realized at a meeting held at the Toronto Canoe Club. Major R. T. Massey addressed the boys and every one present enlisted. They will be examined to-night and will leave for Kingston on October 4th. They will join the 34th battery and drafts will be made at various times to keep the aquatic section at full strength.

There are many well known paddlers amongst those who will enlist. The Rooney Brothers of Halifax, who had reached Toronto, on a 3,000 mile canoe trip from Chatham, N.B., to Port Arthur have abandoned their trip and will join the battery. They were at the meeting last night. Knowlson, this year's Toronto Canoe Club champion is another who will do his "bit."

Following are those who signed last night:

W. N. Knowlson, H. H. Wallace of Lindsay, G. D. Creighton, W. H. Reid, C. W. Rooney of Halifax, R. J. Boynton, V. M. Knowlson, W. Hutchinson, A. Cochrane, A. C. Lang, of Montreal, who finished third in the 200-mile canoe race; H. M. Lumbers, G. S. Hooney, of Halifax, C. G. Armstrong, C. K. Douglas, C. G. Gibson, G. M. McWhinney, H. M. Brown, R. B. Jamieson of Hamilton, F. N. Wilson. Of the 19 men who signed last night, 17 are 6 feet or over.

Up to date the strong play by Toronto Canoe Club men has been the Flying Squadron. So far the T.C.C. has provided seven aviators.

The formation of an infantry regiment of Canadian athletes, all picked men, is on the tapis.

grade Canadian Field Artillery, tells of his meeting Fred Reed and Fred Cole, "somewhere in France," and a number of other Peterborough boys, all well.

Capt Fee also makes the remark that they are in for another winter in the trenches. He is stationed at a chateau, built in 1604, amidst lovely scenery. This letter from the Captain was just an acknowledgment for a packet of dainties received, and therefore did not contain much more "war news."

Captain F. J. Carew, paymaster of the 80th Battalion, paid an official visit to the armouries to-day.

Sergt. Orme Cavanah, of the 33rd Battery, C.F.A., C.E.F., Barriefield, is home on leave. He is one of the draft selected to go overseas in a short time.

The physical drill squad and the band of the 80th battalion, may attend the Lindsay exhibition to-morrow.

The Bartenders and Brewery Workers are turning over the proceeds of their Labour Day Excursion ($45 in all) to buying tobacco for the Peterborough soldier boys at the front. Many a Peterborough lad will be delighted with a gift from the fund.

The 80th Battalion had 170 on the roll this morning. At least a dozen more have been accepted but have not yet reported for duty, and there are a number in the hospital who will be taken on in a short time.

Stock Markets

In the opinion of the leading bullion dealers of New York the improvement that has recently taken place in the market for bar silver will make further progress. What will help to pave the way to this end, they assert, is the favorable prospect of a re-adjustment of the sterling exchange situation in the early future.

All authorities agree in stating that when hostilities abroad cease the white metal will gradually replace the paper currency now circulating, necessitating large purchases of silver. They also explain that the arts will demand large supplies.

Germans Hold Canadian Pacific

German holders of common stock of the Canadian Pacific Railway represent about $14,000,000, or 5.88 per cent. of the $280,000,000 common stock of the company, according to a compilation supplied by Sir Thomas Shaughnessy, Chairman of the road, to the Monetary Times. In January, 1911, according to these figures, Germany held 15 per cent. of the total common stock then outstanding. Between 1911 and the outbreak of the war German holdings rose to 40 per cent. Within three days after the war broke out this figure had dropped to the present holding of 5.88 per cent. Great Britain holds 62.00 per cent., Canada 13.64 per cent., France 5.00 per cent., the United States 10.20 per cent., and all other countries combined 2.13 per cent. It is noticeable that the French holdings were reduced with the beginning of the war from 15 per cent. to a figure just a little above the present holdings of Germany. There are now a total of 40,465 common stockholders, compared with 24,000 in 1911. The capital stock has increased $80,000,000 since 1911.

STEEL REPORTS.

A U.S. steel manufacturer who has been prominent in steel exports says that the successful conclusion of the British-French loan will be followed by heavy export orders for American steel.

"There are foreign inquiries in the market," said he, "for upwards of 500,000 tons of steel, in lots ranging from 10,000 to 100,000 tons. This business will all go on the books of American steel companies if a big credit is established. These inquiries do not involve munitions but bars billets, rails, pig iron and other forms of steel. September and October should be big months for the steel companies in new business booked."

U. S. DOLLAR IN CHILE.

New York exchange has taken the place of London exchange for Chilean nitrate sales, according to a report just received by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Department of Commerce, at Washington. Consul-General Kenna at Valparaiso announces the sale to an American firm of 4,000 tons of nitrate with payment by drafts on New York for $155,000. However he adds that since there is no American bank in Chile, much of the benefit of the tendency to establish dollar exchange must be lost, as this type of exchange is only temporarily favoured by foreign banks.

American banking opportunities in South America are being given special attention by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce. Its investigator, Mr. Lough, has just returned from there, and his book describing these opportunities is now in press.

DEPOSITING THEIR GOLD.

Paris—The French public is now turning in gold to the Bank of France in exchange for paper money at the rate of $12,000,000 weekly.

AIR BRAKE ACTIVITY.

New York.—New York Air Brake is now machining 2,000 shells and 5,000 cartridge cases a day. The company's contract calls for deliveries beginning next month, during which 25,000 shells are to be shipped. Recent production is more than double the required rate of output.

MAXWELL MOTORS.

New York—One of the reasons for the strength of the shares of the Maxwell Motor Co. is that the plan for paying back dividends on the first preferred stock is making considerable headway. The Maxwell Motor Co. established a new high record in shipments of cars in August and the shipments in September are likely to exceed those of the preceding month.

FAILURES DECREASING

London—The report of the Inspector-General in bankruptcy for the year ended December 31, 1914, states that the number of failures in England and Wales for the year shows a large falling off, being the smallest since the Bankruptcy Act of 1883. During the first seven months of the year receivership orders were made in 2,167 cases, and in the last five months only 800. While the number of failures has decreased, the liabilities have substantially increased.

LOAN FOR MANITOBA.

WINNIPEG.—Despite the unusual conditions in the money markets of the east, the provincial treasurer of Manitoba, Hon. Edward Brown, has arranged for a loan of $1,000,000 as an overdraft from a Canadian bank. Mr. Brown has returned from the east where during an absence of over a week, he made the necessary arrangements. This money is required to carry on work on the new Parliament Buildings, and represents the estimate as to what will be required until the end of 1916.

The Sun—Further foreign selling was reported in the industrial list but the general market was steady, and while irregular changes were shown at the close the predominant aspect of quoted values was one of strength.

The New York Post—Foreign selling of Union Pacific, Erie, Southern Pacific, N. Y. Central, Northern Pacific and Atchison common indicated a scarcity of stock here.

"The Wall Street Journal—The stock market shows a reactionary tendency. The technical position is said to be not as strong as it was.

Commercial—An advance is expected in the rails as soon as they reflect the improvement in business.

The American—Speculation in the "War stocks" is stimulated by the developments of the past few days.

A Discovery.
A merchant in a Canadian city once made a discovery. He had purchased some goods that did not turn out as he thought they would. Instead of advertising "Enormous Bargains" he simply said, "I bought them to sell at $10.00, but they are not worth it; in fact I cannot recommend them at all, but you will find them worth $4.00." He sold them all and made some new customers, who were convinced of his sincerity.
Nothing new about it. Truth is as old as the hills and he simply told the truth. He discovered that honesty is the best policy, and fortunately very many advertisers are making the same discovery.

WILDEST OF "BLUE DEVILS"

The Chasseurs Will Die Rather Than Surrender and Will Fight to the Last

Private's Fight With Twenty of the Germans

He Leaped Into a Trench Occupied by Twenty Huns and Killed the Lot

Yesterday (written two weeks ago) was a held day at the Ambulance Sud Africaine. Three of our wounded received the war medal, having been previously mentioned in despatches. Two of them were Chasseurs Alpine, the so-called "Blue Devil," the terror and the nightmare of the German in the Vosges and Alsace.

It is an ordinary occurrence for Chasseurs to distinguish themselves, but seldom has one man accomplished so much single handed, as did Pte. Courtin, of the 53rd, now the proud possessor of the Legion of Honor and the daring of his corps.

Before the war Courtin lived at Bethune. Thirty-three years ago, a short, thick set reservist, he was by trade a vannier, that is a basket maker. Modest and retiring, no one ever knew of his remarkable fighting qualities until he joined the Alpine Chasseurs. He then became a Blue Devil, the wildest and most determined of them all.

One dark night on sentry duty he became a hero. The night was a disturbed one. From one end to the trench to the other the Germans kept up an incessant rattle of rifle fire, interrupted here and there by the louder crash and roaring report of a hand grenade; more irritating still to overstrained nerves was a machine gun, which persisted in playing its deadly tattoo on the parapet.

Courtin was "fed up." This terrible din had been going on for four nights with but little cessation during the day. The company was worn out with incessant fighting, and from his post of observation Courtin could see the men huddled together, some standing, some half crouching, sleeping in batches, one eye always open. "This cannot go on. It must be stopped somehow," said Courtin. Just sixty yards ahead he vaguely distinguished the German saphead and its barbedwire defences at each flare of the guns. His mind was made up. To roll out of his hole and lie flat on the ground was the work of a moment. Then, gun in hand, like an Indian, with all the cunning and patience of a bush-ranger stalking his game, he crawled silently towards the enemy.

Feigning Death.

Stopping at intervals, feigning death when the darkness of the night became less friendly and the rifle fire too concentrated, he at last reached the barbed-wire entanglement. How he wriggled through their meshes without harm he does not remember, but he landed safely on the trench parapet. His time had come! With one wild whoop—the whoop of the "Blue Devil" the Boches knew so well and feared so much—he was at them! His hand by a lucky shot closed at once on the muzzle of the machine-gun; pushing it aside he bayoneted on the spot the two gunners. Then followed the most glorious and bloodiest of scrimmages. Twenty German square-heads flew at him, but the deadly Rosaile (his bayonet) was at her best. In one grand tussle she accounted for every one of them, clearing the whole saphead of its occupants.

Wonderful to relate, Courtin escaped with only a slight wound in his arm. Well pleased with himself, he retraced his steps, dragging after him the captured machine-gun and gravely resumed his guard. The company slept soundly and peacefully until the morning.

Courtin is now in the hospital. His wound took a turn for the worse, mainly due to his carelessness in not reporting himself at once; but philosophically he has settled down again to a peaceful life and whiles away the weary hours of the day by making baskets once more, pretty little baskets of all shapes and sizes, of which he easily disposes among his friends. Nobody knew him to be the great man that he is until a laconic "order of the day" from his chief, conveying the beloved decoration, revealed his exploit. It ran thus: "He turned aside an enemy machine gun, seizing it by the barrel, and killing two of those who were serving the gun. He then leaped into a trench occupied by twenty Germans, killing nearly all of them with rifle and bayonet. Slightly wounded in the arm, he did not stop fighting. He only went to the doctor when ordered to do so next day by his captain. Signed,

"Langle de Cary."

The Blue Devils.

Such a mixture of bravery, dash, heroism, and modesty makes up the Blue Devils, the Chasseurs Alpine de France. No wonder their deeds are becoming legendary. Everywhere in the Vosges and Alsace when a battalion passed the men take off their hats, while the women throw kisses and flowers and the children look on with awe. "Silence! The Blue Devils are passing," and with them—wrapped up in a golden fringes of the Tricolor which a neat little blue figure, wearing a tam o' shanter cocked on the side of the head, proudly bears at the head of the troop—files past all the glory, all the spirit of chivalry, of sacrifice, of endurance which animated and made great the France of old.

The "esprit de corps" among the Blue Devils is very strong. Men and officers know one another well, and have the completest faith in one another. Some corps indeed have such a reputation that they have become almost as exclusive as the most exclusive of London clubs, only the bravest of the braves and those who have shown initiative, extraordinary pluck, and endurance being allowed to join their ranks.

Discipline is Draconian, yet the officer is a father to his men and shares all difficulties and dangers with them. Always ahead of his troop, he courts either death or victory. The motto of the corps which each man swears to observe is "The Blue Devils will die rather than surrender and will fight to the last."

MEN WERE ACQUITTED

Theft Charge Against Two Local Men Was Not Proven

Charles and James Healey, were acquitted of a charge of theft in this morning's Police Court. The complamant was Charles Scrixer, who alleged that the two men removed from his premises a quantity of harness and a number of other articles too nugierous to mention. Crown Attorney Hatton conducted the case for the Crown, while Mr. J. A. New, of the firm of Gordon and Widdifield appeared for the defendants.

CANADIAN WOUNDED ARE WELL LOOKED AFTER

Mrs. A. Mongour has received the following letter in regard to her son, Pte. Chas. Mongour, of the 57th detachment 22nd Battalion, who was wounded in June last.

Dear Mrs. Mongour,—I quite intended writing you several weeks ago, but Charlie was moved from the hospital and I couldn't find out where he had gone until a fortnight ago. You will I am sure be glad to know that he has been and is still at a beautiful convalescent home amongst the picturesque Malvern Hills. The grounds are lovely and all the convalescent soldiers are treated as if they were royal guests. Of course at the hospital the food was plain though good, and of course the authorities did not provide luxuries (except cigarettes), but the visitors who went twice a week always took cakes, fruit, chocolates, eggs, etc.

At the convalescent home it is quite different. Charlie tells me they have practically everything they want. The ladies who live in Malvern call with their motor cars and take the men for drives and frequently take them back to their own homes for tea, but the men are so happy in the Home that in spite of the warm welcome awaiting them in the ladies' houses, they usually prefer to come back 'home,' as they call it, so this I think speaks for itself.

I think Charlie will be at Malvern for several weeks longer. The wound, which was rather a bad one, half-way between the left knee and thigh, has healed splendidly but is hasty, for the right use of it so this will probably account for further absence from you. I am sure you will be welcome news to you and I only wish I could assure you of his speedy return to Canada.

I think it is beyond doubt that all your anxiety on Charlie's account is over but I don't believe the authorities will allow him to meet again, would probably mean his being kept on England where he is perfectly safe—a home defence in case of an invasion.

I must hardly tell you how glad I am to tell you of a Tommy's safety and anxiety, as he has been terrific. He pleases us all, the matron who is very sweet and who have dear brave wounded boys over here that Pte. Charlie is getting carefully nursed back to health and strength again and that once they get to the convalescent home stage, they have what they more than deserve, a right, royal home, so don't worry, will you?

With kindest regards,

Yours sincerely,
F. ROBBIS.

P.S.—One of the days a cab at Malvern stove Charlie and his friends to Stratford-on-Avon, Shakespeare's birth place and showed them all over Shake-peare's house, and different places of interest in connection with the great poet. Needless to say it was a great event, which won't soon be forgotten, but this was only one of their many enjoyable outings.

WEDDING BELLS

STEWART—BENNETT.

The marriage of Miss Myrtle Edna Bennett, daughter of Mrs. E. J. Bennett, 529 King Street, and Mr. George Campbell Stewart of Smith Township, was solemnized last evening at seven o'clock, at the home of the bride. Rev. R. G. Peever, B.D., of George Street Church, officiating. The bride and groom were unattended. Only the immediate relatives and friends were present. After the ceremony a dainty supper was served, after which Mr. and Mrs. Stewart left on the nine o'clock G.T.R. train for a honeymoon trip to Western points. On their return Mr. and Mrs. Stewart will reside in Smith.

McCULLOCH—MOORE.

A very pretty wedding took place Saturday, September 18th, at one o'clock in George street Methodist church, when Miss Elmira V. Moore, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Moore, Peterborough, and Dr. Charles D. McCulloch, only son of Mr. and Mrs. Alexander McCulloch, Oakwood avenue, Toronto, were united in marriage. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. R. G. Peever in the presence of a large number of invited guests. Promptly at one o'clock to the strains of the wedding march, played by Mr. J. H. Renwick, the bridegroom and Dr. J. W. H. Butt of Toronto, who acted as best man, took their places before the flower bedecked altar. Next followed the bridal procession, led by the ushers, Mr. J. Bedard of Winn and Dr. J. B. Brown of Toronto. The bridesmaid was Miss Viola McCulloch, sister of the groom, who looked charming in a gown of pink silk crepe de chine with an overdress of flowered nunon and black velvet picture hat. She wore the groom's gift, which consisted of a gold necklace with amethyst drop, and carried a bouquet of pink roses. The bride, who was supported by her father, was beautifully gowned in duchess satin, with overdress of Brussels net, and wearing the conventional embroidered net and wreath of orange blossoms. The bridegroom's gift was a pearl pendant with amethyst drop.

During the signing of the register Mrs. J. H. Renwick sang "Oh Fair, Oh Sweet and Holy." Afterwards a reception was held at the home of the bride's parents, 677 Aylmer street, where the many friends of the bride and bridegroom extended congratulations. A buffet luncheon was served. The bride's table was beautifully decorated with pale pink and white asters and bows of white satin ribbon. Some seventy guests drank to the toast of the bride, which was proposed by the Rev. F. G. Stotesbury, brother-in-law of the groom, and responded to by the latter. The toast to the King was proposed by Mr. McLellie McCarrol and responded to by the Rev. R. G. Peever in the usual manner.

Telegrams of congratulation were received from Toronto and Erie. The bride's popularity was attested to by the numerous gifts received, among them being remembrances from her graduating class now in France, and a number of substantial cheques. The groom's gift to the ushers were tie pins to the soloist a hat pin, to the organist a tie pin, and to the groomsman gold cuff links.

"Fact," said the lecturer, "is essential to good entertaining. I once dined at a house where the hostess had no tact. Opposite me sat a modest, quiet man.

Suddenly he turned as red as a lobster and fell into a fit of coughing on hearing his hostess say to her husband:

"How inconsiderate you are, Charlie. You must look after Mr. Blank better. He's helping himself to everything."

Russians Capture Many Prisoners, Guns and Ammunition

Press of Allies Say Balkan Situation is Serious

RUSSIANS ON OFFENSIVE GERMANS FORCED TO FLEE

PETROGRAD, Sept. 24.—In the southeastern theatre, the Russians are again on the offensive and driving the enemy westward on a 150-mile front. Large captures of guns and ammunition are being made.

"On the River Eckapu, southeast of Riga, near Stounge, the Germans were forced to flee, abandoning grenades, cartridges and utensils," said the official statement. "In the region of Atkala stubborn fighting is going on. Neugut village has repeatedly changed hands in the last few hours.

"Near Smorgon, 45 miles southeast of Vilna and near Guwana, east of Lida, violent fighting continues.

"Northeast of the fortress of Dubno Russian forces have occupied Woinitsy on the left bank of the Ikwa River, capturing 28 officers and 1,400 men and three maxims.

"In the region of Dworets, southwest of Kremenec, our forces occupied a height and took prisoners, two officers and 100 men.

"In the region north of Zaleszczyki, we drove the enemy from the villages of Worwolintse and Ghinkowtse. Our cavalry pursued the fleeing Austrians, killing and taking prisoners. Our troops, in their pursuit, finally arrived at Proussy where they captured additional prisoners and men."

FRESH TROOPS LANDED ON THE PENINSULA

ATHENS, Sept. 24.—100,000 fresh troops have landed at the Gallipoli Peninsula to reinforce the Allies. Heavy bombardment by warships on the forts to-day opened the way for further advance which is expected immediately. Turkish defenses were battered to pieces in many cases. Casualties were very heavy.

ROME, Sept. 24.—It was semi-officially denied yesterday that the Allies have asked Bulgaria for explanations.

Quarter Million Germans Were Lost at Vilna

Petrograd Regards Withdrawal From That Section Complete—Enemy's Losses Enormous

PETROGRAD, Sept. 24.— via London.—The Russian military authorities regard the withdrawal from the very difficult position near Vilna, which for a time seriously menaced a large army, as virtually completed. They assert the Germans have lost 250,000 men in their recent operations in this region.

According to the latest information received here, the line now runs from Osmiana to Smorgon, which is on the left bank of the Viliya, west of Tileika. From Smorgon the line extends to Lebedevo, protecting the Molodechno Railway junction. Thence it parallels the Vilna-Lida Railway, crossing the Lida-Molodechno Railway, and extending across the Gasda River at a point 18 miles east of Lida. The line then runs to Novlny, Molchad, Milovidy, to the east of Lake Vygonovski, and eastward along the ginski Canal to Lyscha and the junction of the Jasiolda River with the Wina, and east of Pinsk. The remainder of the line is unchanged.

Russian officers admit that the new front in the Vilna region is warped and interrupted in places.

The region to the east of Licna and south of Molodechno is intersected by a multitude of rivulets. These are embarrassing the German advance, necessitating a detour northward, and consequently co-operation between the German group in the vicinity and Vilna and that near Lida will be difficult.

The Russians expect that the Germans contemplate a race for crossings of the Beresina River, particularly at Borissov, 38 miles northeast of Minsk, where Napoleon came to grief in 1812.

The Red Cross hospitals evacuated Vilna in good order. Two local hospitals with 360 wounded, remained in the city, it being impossible to move them.

NEW WARSHIP SOON TO SAIL

Officers of the Cunard Orduna reported yesterday that the superdreadnought Barham, a sister ship of the Queen Elizabeth and Warspite, whose keel was laid in 1913, soon would be commissioned and leave for the Dardanelles. The Barham is fitting out at Liverpool, and it is expected will be ready in six weeks.

In telling of the war-time activities of well-known ships the Orduna's officers said that the Cunarder Aquitania had been painted white, converted into a hospital ship, and had just Liverpool for the Dardanelles to bring home the wounded soldiers, and the White Star liner Olympic, which had been laid up at Belfast since last October, also was being fitted out as a hospital ship in Aquitania. The liners can carry about 7,000 soldiers each and make the voyage in five days. The Cunarder Mauretania is carrying troops to the Dardanelles.

WAR TAXES SWITZERLAND

Government Spends $28,000,000 for Mobilization and Faces a Deficit.

PARIS, Sept 23—Switzerland's expenses for mobilization up to Sept. 1 were $28,000,000. President Motta made this announcement in a speech to-day to the National Council of the Swiss Confederation, as reported by the correspondent at Berne of the Havas Agency. The President said that if the war should continue ten months longer the nation's mobilization expenses would reach $80,000,000.

Switzerland faces a net deficit of $80,000,000 at the end of three years. It is expected this will necessitate the creation of new financial resources, such as a tobacco monopoly, in addition to the revenue derived from the war tax and the increase of postal and telephone taxes.

CENSOR'S VEIL DRAWN OVER BALKAN SITUATION

Scarcely A Hint of What is Going on in Bulgarian, Greek and Rumanian Capitals Reached London—Gravity of Situation is Apparent.

LONDON, Sept. 24.—The censor's veil was drawn closely over the Balkans to-day. Scarcely a hint of what is going on in Bulgaria, Greek and Rumanian capitals reached London during the night. This fact alone increased belief here that when the curtain is lifted, Czar Ferdinand will be discovered at the head of the Bulgarian armies, ready to strike.

The Press of all Allied capitals is talking of the gravity of the situation. A Petrograd despatch to-day said that the Russian Press expresses no surprise at the Bulgarian mobilization order and regards the situation as most serious.

The Bulgarian legation to-day was unable to confirm the report that a mobilization order had suddenly been withdrawn. This rumour only increased the perplexity here as to Ferdinand's real purpose.

Bulgaria The Centre of Ceaseless German Intrigue in Balkans Ever Since The War Broke Out

LONDON, Sept. 24.—The Daily News says: "Bulgaria has been the centre of ceaseless German intrigue in the Balkans ever since the war broke out, and latterly, especially the Kaiser had lavished flattery on Ferdinand. In August, Prince Hohenlohe bore an autograph from his Imperial Master to the Czar of the Bulgarians, in which the Kaiser remarked he regarded the Bulgarian nation as the most vigorous of all the Balkan races, and wished to strengthen his friendship with it. As recently as the past week end the Duke of Mecklenburg, the German Emperor's envoy in the Balkans, had an audience with Ferdinand, to whom he presented the Iron Cross of the first class.

RUMANIA PRO-GERMAN.

"According to an unconfirmed message of German origin from Copenhagen and Paris, the Duke, on his way back to Vienna, also had a long interview with the King of Rumania on board the Royal yacht Brilia, on the Danube.

"The reason of Germany's cultivation of Bulgaria's friendship is sufficiently explained in an article by Theodore Wolff, in The Berlin Tageblatt last month. Bulgaria is the road by which, once the opposition of Rumania and Serbia is removed, Germany can send the needed munitions to the Turks at the Dardanelles.

"German sentiment toward Bulgaria took the practical form this year of substantial instalments of a loan of $20,000,000, concluded between the Balkan State and a group of German bankers before the outbreak of the war, in return for important economic concessions. It was repeatedly protested, however, that no political or military engagement were contracted with the loan.

TURKEY SUPPORTS INTRIGUE.

"The German intrigue has been supported by Turkey, which, as is now well known, concluded an agreement whereby Bulgaria obtains the important concession of 65 square miles of territory, including the railway station Adrianople and the re-adjustment of the Karagatch frontier line.

"Radoslavoff, the Bulgarian Premier, lately declared to an interviewer that this country was prepared to enter into the war so as to receive guarantees that by her action she would obtain the restoration of portions of Macedonia lost after the second Balkan war. Following this declaration, it has become officially known that the entente powers had made representations to Serbia who, in the interests of the Allied cause, took a conciliatory attitude. Proposals were also made in notes to the Bulgarian Government itself. These it is understood included pledges that the entente would obtain consent of the Serbs, Greeks and Rumanians to concessions already suggested. The last reply to the Bulgarian Government to this series of representations was delivered on September 14, having, according to an Athens message, been delayed as long as possible.

German Submarine Fleet Nearly Gone—Eighty Per Cent. Destroyed

LONDON, Sept 24. Among other matters discussed in the House of Commons recently was the administration of the Press Bureau. Mr Hogge complained that the country was kept in ignorance and had to get the news of the British fleet by way of New York. He added, as one of the facts which he could not understand, why the Government concealed that "since the outbreak of the war we have sunk 55 German submarines. "Everybody knows this. I have mentioned it in speeches, yet the press is not allowed to publish it."

LOSS IS 80 PER CENT.?

Providence, R I Sept 23. The Providence Journal says this morning:

The reason why the German Government has consented to change its submarine methods is because more than 80 per cent of its submarines have been destroyed and its under-sea warfare brought to complete failure within the past two months.

It is positively known that since April 1 the following boats have been destroyed: U-9, U-15, U-16, U-18, U-23, U-23, U-24, U-5, U-2, U-7, U-4, besides four unnumbered boats of what is known as the Augsberg two-cycle motor type, and three of the Nuremburg motor type, which apparently have carried no numerical designation whatever.

These boats mostly were destroyed by the great iron nets placed in the paths of the submarines by the British.

The operations under the present method have lasted over a period of four months, and this would have been brought to a successful completion many weeks ago if the British naval authorities had realized that some of the mechanical contrivances made use of were not fit for the work.

Sixty-seven Since May

Sixty-seven German submarines, 22 of which are declared to have been of the newest and latest construction, have been sunk and the crews destroyed by the British navy since the 5th day of May. It is stated that on positive authority that the full capacity of the German shipyards for the defence boats is not more than three a month, but that even if Germany were able to replace her submarines as fast as they had been destroyed the most grave situation the faces in regard to this method of warfare is the actual destruction of the morale of the officers and crews of such vessels.

Sent Twelve Miles For Witness

Doctors Find That Lillian May Lindsay Died From Septic Peritonitis

BAVELOCK Sept. 23 The doctors who conducted the post mortem upon the remains of Lillian May Lindsay whose death occurred at Centre Dummer under peculiar circumstances, gave the cause of death as septic peritonitis, which is a form of blood poisoning. A number of witnesses were heard at the inquest this afternoon and at 4 o'clock it was found necessary to send twelve miles for one witness.

To Regain Lost Flesh After Wasting Illness

QUICK RECOVERY OF WEIGHT BY STEADY

People who having pulled through a siege of sickness find themselves much run down and underweight naturally desire to recover their lost flesh as soon as possible. With return of normal appetite they eat heartily but it should be remembered that it is not so much what or how much you eat but how much fat making nourishment your blood absorbs that will determine how quickly lost flesh and weight will return.

The process of flesh and weight recovery can usually be greatly hastened by taking with every meal a single nugget tablet. Sargol is a careful combination of several re-agent assimilative agents of highest value and mixing with the digesting food it aids to separate all its flesh and fat making elements and prepare these in a form which the blood can readily absorb and carry throughout your body. Reported gains of from ten to twenty five pounds in a month are by no means infrequent yet its action is entirely natural and harmless. Sargol is sold by all leading druggists everywhere on a positive guarantee of weight increase or money back as found in every large package so that it is a very simple matter.

DEATH WAS RESULT OF FOUL PLAY BY UNKNOWN PARTY

The finding of the jury following the inquest at Havelock yesterday as to the death of Lillian May Lindsay, the fourteen year old daughter of Sanford Lindsay of Centre Dummer near Catton Stoney Lake who passed away a week ago to-day was to the effect that her death was due to some unknown parties or parties and that the case should be further investigated.

The adjourned inquest was opened at one o'clock before Coroner Kendred in the town hall Crown Attorney Hutton conducted the investigation assisted by Detective Boyd of the Provincial department. Mr G S Gordon appeared on behalf of the parents of the girl.

Coagulen.

Coagulen is the invention of the great Swiss surgeon, Professor Kocher. It is in the form of a powder which, before use, is mixed with water. Applied to a wound, it almost instantly coagulates the blood and stops the bleeding, whether external or internal. It shortens surgical operations and makes them less dangerous. The French medical headquarters speak most highly of coagulen. It will, no doubt, come into general use in all surgical operations.

One German King in the Field.

Of the four German kings, the Kaiser (king of Prussia) is the only one actively assisting in the field the kings of Bavaria, Wurtemberg and Saxony remaining at home. Quite a number of princes and dukes have been wounded; one is a prisoner of war—the prince of Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen, who was on the Emden; and among the killed are at least six princes—two of Lippe, two of Meiningen, and one each of Waldeck, Reuss, and Hesse.

Kaiser Will Lose Heavily.

Judged from a purely business standpoint, the Kaiser stands to lose a lot over this war. For instance he owns some sixty residences in different parts of Germany, and no fewer than ninety private cars. These bring him in about $2,000,000 a year. One way and another Germany judged as a going concern means about $10,000,000 a year to its overlord. This is just about four times the sum total of King George's income.

"But I am used to gold," said she. The bell on the machine tinkled

She Was Smiling Down Upon Us.

"What do I do now?" He made the shift and the space for her.

"Go right ahead," said he. She scrumbled the whole alphabet across the neat sheet, but he didn't seem to mind.

"Isn't it jolly, Mr. Smart? If Mr. Poopendyke should ever leave you I may be able to take his place as your secretary."

I bowed very low. "You may be quite sure, countess, that I shall dismiss Mr. Poopendyke the instant you apply for his job."

"And I shall most cheerfully abdicate," said he. Silly ass!

I couldn't help thinking how infinitely more attractive and perilous she would be as a typist than the excellent young woman who had married the jeweler's clerk and what an improvement on Poopendyke!

"I came down to inquire when you would like to go exploring for buried treasure, Mr. Smart," she said after the cylinder had slipped back with a bang that almost startled her out of her pretty boots and caused her to give up typewriting then and there forevermore.

"Never put off till tomorrow what you can do today," quoted I glibly.

She looked herself over. "If you knew how many times this gown had to be put off till tomorrow, you wouldn't ask me to ruin it the second time I've had it on my back."

"It is an uncommonly attractive gown," said I.

"Shall we set tomorrow for the treasure quest?"

"Tomorrow is Sunday."

"Can you think of a better way to kill it?"

"Yes, you might have me down here for an old fashioned midday dinner."

"Capital! Why not stay for supper, too?"

"It would be too much like spending a day with relatives," she said. "We'll go treasure hunting on Monday. I haven't the faintest notion where to look, but that shouldn't make any difference. No one else ever had. By the way, Mr. Smart, I have a bone to pick with you. Have you seen yesterday's papers? Well, in one of them there is a long account of my—of Mr. Pless' visit to your castle, and a lengthy interview in which you are quoted as saying that he is one of your dearest friends and a much maligned man who deserves the sympathy of every law abiding citizen in the land."

"An abominable lie!" I cried indignantly.

"Another paper says that your fortune has been placed at his disposal in the fight he is making against the criminally rich Americans. In this particular article you are quoted as saying that I am a dreadful person and not fit to have the custody of a child."

"Good Lord!" I gasped helplessly.

"You also expect to do everything in your power to interest the administration at Washington in his behalf."

"Well, of all the— Oh, I say, countess, you don't believe a word of all this, do you?"

She regarded me pensively. "You have said some very mean, unkind things to me."

"If I thought you believed"— I began desperately, but her sudden smile relieved me of the necessity of jumping into the river. "By Jove, I shall write to these miserable sheets, denying every word they've printed. And what's more, I'll bring an action for damages against all of 'em. Why, it is positively atrocious! The whole world will think I despise you and"— I stopped very abruptly in great confusion.

"And—you don't?" she queried, with real seriousness in her voice. "You don't despise me?"

"Certainly not!" I cried vehemently Turning to Poopendyke, I said: "Mr. Poopendyke, will you at once prepare a complete and emphatic denial of every word they have printed about me, and I'll send it to all the American correspondents in Europe. We'll cable it ourselves to the United States. I shan't rest until I am set straight in the eyes of my fellow countrymen The whole world shall know, countess, that I am for you first, last and all the time. It shall know"—

"But you don't know who I am, Mr. Smart," she broke in, her cheeks very warm and rosy. "How can you publicly espouse the cause of one whose name you refuse to have mentioned in your presence?"

I dismissed her question with a wave of the hand. "Poopendyke can supply the name after I have signed the statement. I give him carte blanche. The name has nothing to do with the case so far as I am concerned. Write it, Fred, and make it strong."

She came up to me and held out her hand. "I knew you would do it," she said softly. "Thanks."

She not only came for dinner with us on Sunday, but made the dressing for my alligator pear salad. We were besieged by the usual crowd of Sunday sightseers, who came clamoring at our stanch, re-enforced gates and anathematized me soundly for refusing admission. One bourgeoise party of fifteen refused to leave the plaza until their return fares on the ferry barge were paid, stoutly maintaining that they had come over in good faith and wouldn't leave until I had reimbursed them to the extent of 50 hellers apiece, ferry fare. I sent Britton out with the money. He returned with the rather disquieting news that he had recognized two of Mr. Pless' secret agents in the mob.

"I wonder if he suspects that I am here," said the countess, paling perceptibly when I mentioned the presence of the two men.

I did not sleep well that night. The presence of the two detectives outside my gates was not to be taken too lightly.

CHAPTER XIV.

I Am Invited to Spend Money.

SHORTLY after 9 o'clock the next morning a sly faced man in overalls accosted me in the hall.

"I beg your pardon, Mr. Smart," he said in fairly good English. "May I have a word with you? I have a message from Mr. Pless. I am an agent of the secret service. Yesterday I failed to gain admission as a visitor, today I come as a laborer."

"Is it necessary for Mr. Pless to resort to a subterfuge of this character in order to get a message to me?" I demanded indignantly.

"It was not necessary yesterday, but it is today," said he. He leaned closer and lowered his voice. "Our every movement is being watched by the countess' detectives. We are obliged to resort to trickery to throw them off the scent. Mr. Pless has read what you had to say in the newspapers, and he is too grateful, sir, to subject you to unnecessary annoyance at the hands of her agents. He would have you to meet him secretly tonight at the Hemp hotel across the river. It is most important that you should do so and that you should exercise great caution. I am to take your reply back to him."

For an instant I was fairly stupefied. Then I experienced a feeling of relief so vast that he must have seen the gleam of triumph in my eyes. The trick was mine, after all.

"You may tell Mr. Pless that I shall be there at 9," said I. The agent departed. When he was safely out of the room I explained the situation to Poopendyke and then made my way through the secret panels to the countess' rooms.

She was ready for the subterranean journey in quest of treasure attired in a neat walking skirt, with her bonny hair encased in a swimming cap as a guard against cobwebs.

"Then you don't intend to send out the statements?" she cried in disappointment. "You are going to let every one think you are his friend and not mine?"

I stood over her, trying my best to scowl. "You know better than that. You know I—I am as loyal as—as can be. Hang it all!" I burst out impetuously. "I'm not unmanned for a minute that I want to hand you over to that infernal rascal now that I've come to—that is to say, now that we're such ripping good friends?"

She looked up at me very pathetically at first. Then her expression changed swiftly to one of wonder and the most penetrating inquiry. Slowly a flush crept into her cheeks, and her eyes wavered.

"I—I think I can trust you to—to do the right thing by me," she said, descending to a banality in her confusion.

I held out my hand. She laid hers in it rather timidly, almost as if she was afraid of me. "I shall not fail you," said I without the faintest intention to be heroic, but immediately conscious of having used an expression so trite that my cheek flamed with humiliation.

For some unaccountable reason she arose hastily from the chair and walked to the window. A similar reason no doubt held me rooted rather safely to the spot on which I stood. I have a vague recollection of feeling dizzy and rather short of breath. My heart was acting queerly.

"Why do you suppose he wants to see you?" she asked after a moment, turning toward me again. She was as calm as a summer breeze. All trace of nervousness had left her.

"I can't even supply a guess."

"You must be very, very tactful," she said uneasily. "I know him so well. He is very cunning."

"You may trust me implicitly to do the right thing," said I beamingly. "And now what do you say to our trip to the bottom of the castle?"

She shook her head. "Not with the house full of spies, my dear friend. We'll save that for another day. A rainy day perhaps. I feel like having all the sunshine I can get today. Tonight I shall be gloomy and very lonely. I shall take Rosemary and Jinko out upon the top of the tower and play all day in the sun."

I had an idea. "I am sure I should enjoy a little sunshine myself. May I come too?"

She looked me straight in the eye. There was a touch of dignity in her voice when she spoke.

"Not today, Mr. Smart."

I found Mr. Pless at the Hemp at 9 o'clock. He welcomed me with great warmth. He called me "dear old fellow" and shook hands with me with more heartiness than I had thought him capable of expressing. A smallish old gentleman was with him. I was informed that he was one of the greatest lawyers and advocates in Vienna, and Mr. Pless' personal adviser in the "unfortunate controversy."

"So you knew who I was all the time I was at Schloss Rothheofen," said Mr. Pless, smiling amiably. "I was trying to maintain my incognito so that you might not be distressed, Mr. Smart, by having in your home such a notorious character as I am supposed to be. I confess it was rather shabby in me, but I hold your excellent friends responsible for the trick."

"It is rather difficult to keep a secret with women about," said I evasively.

"But never difficult to construct one," said Mr. Schymansky, winking. I think Schymansky was the name.

"By the way," said I, "I have had no word from our mutual friends. Have you seen them?"

Mr. Pless stiffened. His face grew perceptibly older.

"I regret to inform you, Mr. Smart, that our relations are not quite as friendly as they once were. I have reason to suspect that Mr. Smith has been working against me for the past two or three days, to such an extent, I may say, that the ambassador now declines to advise your government to grant us certain privileges we had hoped to secure without trouble. In short, we have just heard that he will not ask the United States to consider anything in the shape of an extradition if the countess is apprehended in her own country.

"I fancy you are wondering why I sent for you, Mr. Smart," said Mr. Pless.

"I am."

FOR TRADE WAR ON GERMANY

ROME, Sept. 20.—The Italo-French economic congress, which has been meeting during the past four days at Cernobbio, concluded its sessions last evening. The question of a customs tariff between the two countries was fully discussed while a sub-committee was appointed to deal with the question of railway communication.

The French and Latin League of Turin made a report on German trade in Italy with a view to facilitating the work of driving out German trade at the conclusion of the war.

It was suggested that Belgium should be invited to join the conference and that later England should also co-operate, so that at the end of the war the allies might find themselves as compact and as united in trade as on the battlefield.

To talk in public, to think in solitude, to read, and to hear, to inquire and answer inquiries, is the business of a scholar.—Johnson.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

When Day Is Done.

By W. F. BRYAN.

Copyrighted, 1913, by M. M. Cunningham.

Somewhere at the other end of the room a gong clanged out its harsh, brazen note, and soon the hum of industry and the clatter of machinery gave way to the chatter of tongues as the operatives shut off the power from their machines.

As they gathered about the inspection desk to turn in their day's work the great shafts overhead ceased their whirring and the sharp tune they had sung all day ended in a descending scale as the momentum died out. The day's work was done.

Now the girls were hurrying toward the wash room, a screened compartment, supplied with an iron sink, cakes of yellow soap cut to convenient size and a few roller towels of coarse cotton cloth. There was room for but a dozen at the sink, and, urged by the waiting line, the girls cut the ablutions scant and perfunctory.

"IS IT REALLY YOU, JACK?" SHE ASKED WONDERINGLY.

finery they descended in the elevator to the street, where the men employees were waiting for the favored few.

Ida Clark hurriedly rinsed her hands and slipped on her worn, dark skirt and frayed jacket. It was growing too warm for a coat, but she could not afford a new waist just now, and there were patches in the elbows of the old one. The jacket was at least whole save on the edges, which now defied further binding.

For more than a year she had followed the regular factory routine, yet she had never become accustomed to this rush and turmoil of the streets when the mountainous buildings suddenly disgorged their hordes of workers into the narrow canyons below.

The hurrying armies, fighting their way east, west, north and south, terrified her, and as she found herself caught in the tide bound for her home she gave a little sigh of relief.

It would be all right until the corner was reached, when the cross current of humanity again would be encountered. She still dreaded the impact of the human tide. She thought of the quiet country lanes of home and how the sun was now slanting across the fields, just turning green under the warming sun.

Hers had been great hopes when she had left the country for the city. She had planned to study shorthand and typewriting while she supported herself at lighter clerical work. But there had been no office vacancies, and her fast vanishing funds had forced her to have recourse to the factory, where her back was soon wrenched and strained and her fingers twisted and tired from handling the heavy material she forced through the speeding machines.

It was vastly different from the machine sewing at home, for the factory exacted the utmost work from each machine, human or iron, while a sharp eyed forewoman prowled up and down the aisle ready to pounce upon any one who faltered.

Ida's hands were too stiff to hold a pencil after the day's work was done, and the dreams of advancement had to be forgotten in the necessity of the moment; but, though her muscles ached and her eyes seemed to burn in their sockets, she would not give up.

She would not go back to Carsonville and confess failure.

She blushed as she thought of what going back meant. She had come to the city because Jack Deering had scoffed at the idea of her earning her own way.

Some unfortunate twist of his words had given Ida the belief that he offered himself only because she was left alone in the world, because of pity for her condition. She was too proud to admit her love when he did not confess his own affection.

Deering, looking only on the practical side of the matter, had never dreamed that he had been refused because of her belief that he did not love her. He had supposed that of course she knew how dearly he cared for her, and he had not thought it necessary to tell the oft told tale. So he had allowed her to go.

Ida had not lost her fresh coloring in spite of her hardships, and to the fear of the great masses of men and women homeward bound was added the dread of an encounter with one of the human brutes who presume their attentions will be welcome to factory girls because they dress well.

More than once she had felt a hand placed familiarly upon her arm or had hurried on to escape the running fire of talk from a man who had dropped into step beside her and had persisted until a policeman came in sight.

Tonight Ida was frankly homesick. There was something in the breath of spring, tainted though it was by the reek of pavements and the noisome smoke of the city.

Back in the old days, when home was a home and not a hole in the wall, when she trod green earth and not the hard stones of the pavement, this was the hour she liked the best, when the day was done and the evening shadows changed into the purple night.

It was not often that Ida let herself get homesick, for those who would work by day must not cry all the night, but with this subtle suggestion of home in the air and in the sky the tears welled into her eyes.

The dreaded crossing, with its roar of traffic and its rush of humanity, was passed successfully, and Ida did not notice that a man turned out of the counter current and hurried after her as rapidly as he was able.

Not until a hand closed upon her arm did she realize that she had been followed. She wrenched herself loose and hurried ahead, but a second time the hand fell upon her arm, and she turned with a little cry.

"Please let me go," she said, while the tears blinded her eyes.

"Not much," was the triumphant answer. "I've spent too much time looking for you to let you go now that I have found you."

With a quick movement of her hand Ida dashed the tears from her eyes and looked up into the laughing face. It was not a handsome face. The sun had burned the skin to a deep brown, and the brow was wrinkled by lines of care, while the high cheek bones and the hollows of the cheeks gave to the face a ruggedness redeemed only by the kindly smile of the sensitive mouth and the twinkle in the clear gray eyes, but to Ida it was the face in all the world she most desired to see.

"Is it really you, Jack," she asked wonderingly, "or is it some dream?"

"I guess it's me, unless I've been changed in the last half hour," declared Deering as he smiled down into the upturned face and his eyes filled with pity as he noted the signs of care that marked it. "I've been looking all over for you. You never wrote back home, and I just couldn't stand it any longer. I left Jethro to do the plowing and planting, and I came down to look for you. It was a hard job, but I found you."

"And now that you've seen me I suppose that you'll be content and go back to the planting," suggested Ida.

"If you'll come with me," agreed Deering. "If you won't, I'll settle down here, for I love you too much, dear, to let you run away from me again."

"You love me?" she asked wonderingly.

"Of course," was the prompt response. "There isn't a man, woman or child in Carsonville that doesn't know that."

"You never told me," she reminded. "You wanted to marry me because I needed some one to take care of me."

"Did I have to tell you that?" he asked in astonishment. "I supposed you knew."

"A woman likes to be told," explained Ida. "The next time you ask a woman to marry you begin by telling her that you love her, not by explaining that you want to keep her out of the poorhouse."

"I love you," said Deering promptly. "Now will you marry me? We can be married tonight and start for home by the midnight train. That will get us in tomorrow just as the day is done."

"As the day is done?" sighed Ida happily.

For her the nightmare day of privation was done, and a purple twilight of peace was at hand. The spring breeze was still tainted with the reek of foul pavements, but for her it was blowing across the apple blossoms of the orchards at home.

PERSONAL.

St. Catharines, Ont.—"Two years ago I was in a very nervous, generally run-down condition, so that I awoke in the morning more tired than when I retired. The doctors thought I had heart trouble and treated me for it but I got no benefit. I heard of Dr. Pierce's remedies through a friend who had been to your Invalids' Hotel for an operation (which proved entirely successful) and I at once got the 'Favorite Prescription.' I took three bottles altogether and at the end of three weeks I felt entirely cured and have been well and strong since, without a single bad spell. I stopped taking it about three months ago and am glad to tell any one how splendidly your medicine has healed me."—Mrs. JOHN LEWIN, 53 Niagara St., St. Catharines, Ont.

The mighty restorative power of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription speedily causes all womanly troubles to disappear and brings back health and strength to nervous, irritable and exhausted women.

It is a wonderful prescription prepared only from nature's roots and herbs with no alcohol to falsely stimulate and no narcotic to wreck the nerves. It banishes pain, headache, backache, low spirits, hot flashes, worry and sleeplessness surely and without loss of time.

Says He'll Pay That Ten Dollar Bill When He Comes Across It.

"Now, look here, Thompson," remarked Bloom, "it is six months since you borrowed that ten dollar bill from me."

"Seven," corrected Thompson gravely.

"Well, then, seven months," snorted Bloom. "And you promised to give it back to me in a week—promised faithfully to return it me in seven days instead of months."

"I know it," answered Thompson sadly, drawing a memorandum book from his pocket. "That bill was marked No. 672,929. I made this memo, and then I spent the money. Since then I've been trying to recover it."

"But," shouted Bloom, "any other would do as well."

"No," responded Thompson, shaking his head. "I'm a man of my word. When you gave me the bill I said, 'I will return this to you,' and I meant it. Bloom, old man, just as soon as I come across No. 672,929 I'll see that you get it, for I am not the one to go back on my promise."—Harper's Weekly.

WAR AND PERSONALITY

The most striking feature of the present war is not the influence of one personality, but rather the splendid courage and heroism, both in fighting and bearing suffering, which has been manifested among the rank and file of our soldiers, so that these qualities are become not singular but commonplace. The fear that our race had grown degenerate and unresponsive is now gloriously negatived, and by, in many cases, what was deemed the most unlikely material. Professor Patrick Geddes, Britain's greatest sociologist, speaking in London, said: "Most dramatic of all to me in my own everyday life and experience in Edinburgh has been the rapid change of the deteriorating loafer into a strong upright man. This refers to the large numbers of Edinburgh men of the poor class who have enlisted. Few have suffered more heavily than Scottish regiments; few have done more to cover themselves with imperishable glory.

BRITISH SCIENTISTS ARE AMONG THE BEST

Our Military Inventors Have Led Where Germans Copied—Let Brains be Mobilized

The British Empire is mobilising its industries for the manufacture of shells. When shall we mobilize our scientists? asks a British writer. The urgency of this question is emphasized by the news that the French Academy of Science is in the closest possible touch with the French army. Officers inform the academy of new needs as they arise and submit questions for solution. Thus in present conditions wire entanglements are usually removed by a very clumsy process—using high-explosive shell to tear down their supports. It might be possible to devise some more effective scientific means of achieving this end. The present idea is to meet poisonous gas by the issue of respirators. It would be better and quite as practicable to neutralize the asphyxiating gas with some other gas or vapor. To give an example, chlorine fumes would be rendered harmless by soda solution sprayed. In place of choking vapor there would be a snowfall of a solid viscous substance, chloride of sodium, or common salt.

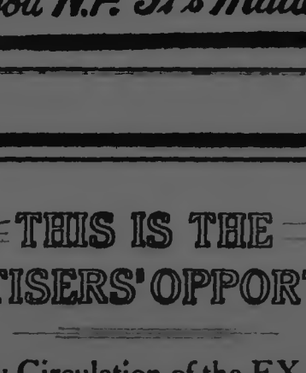
Science Decides

The war is more and more becoming a matter of science. German scientists have given various kinds of asphyxiating gases and bombs charged with formaline and other choking fumes. They have turned out high explosives in gigantic quantities and of relative stability. When the allied blockade interfered with the supply of nitrates—and nitric acid is an essential ingredient in every explosive—the German chemists produced their plant by which nitrogen was extracted from the air.

There is an ill-founded idea that the British are inferior to the Germans in scientific acquirements and inventiveness. This has been much exploited by the Huns, but it is sheer nonsense. One of the most famous American millionaires states that he has made an immense fortune out of British brains and declares that the British are greater inventors than all other nations. Sir William Ramsay recently showed that the most remarkable chemical inventions of the last few years were the achievements of Englishmen.

We Show and Huns Learn

The British army was the first in Europe to be equipped with the machine gun and to grasp its value. Having done this it stood still and was content with a tiny allowance of these guns. The Germans ordered just before the war 50,000 machine guns. The result is that they are often able to hold their trenches with machine guns worked by half a dozen men, whereas we are compelled to offer the German high explosive shells a splendid target of many splendid lives. Britain led the world in the adoption of the Dreadnought type, and here again the Germans merely copied us. The one real German invention is the Zeppelin, and to this a reply could long since have been discovered.



A BRITISH DOG OF WAR

"Trench" Sack

The latest complaint to get a name of its own in this war of surgical surprises is "trench back." Many cases are under treatment at Brighton, Eng. They come almost invariably from the trenches. Usually the injury is caused by sandbags or masses of earth hurled on the men's backs by bursting shells. Some patients have been so seriously injured that they have to be carried on stretchers. Fortunately, a rapid and effective cure has been found, and quite helpless men have recovered after a short course of treatment.

Sikhs Are India's Leaders

Mr. C. H. Payne (late of the Bhopal State Service) gives us a small volume of immediate interest in "A Short History of the Sikhs." It begins with Baba Nanak, born in 1469. It was Nanak who gave his disciples the name of "Sikh," which means "disciple." A copy of the Sikh Scriptures is still carried at the head of every Sikh regiment. The greatest Sikh leader was the military despot, Ranjit Singh (born in 1780), who never wore a royal head-dress and never used a throne. In his talent for military organization Ranjit Singh ranks first among Indian leaders, and as Mr. Payne observes, "his conquest of the Punjab was an achievement of which Napoleon himself might have been proud."

There are now in the service of the Government 30,000 Sikh troops, who constiute the flower of the Indian army. The Sikh soldier is hardy, good-tempered, patient under privations, and obedient to discipline, while his courage is such that he never knows when he is beaten.

Served 21 Years in Sing Sing Is Now Free At The Age Of Eighty-Six Years

George Weston Cram, veteran of the Mexican, the Civil and Indian wars, left Sing Sing yesterday, after serving twenty-one years for the murder of his wife. After a short stay in New York the old man—he is now eighty-six—plans to motor to California, where he will work quartz mines in which he has had an interest since his incarceration.

That and prison reform he expects will be his work for the years that may remain to him.

By George W. Cram.

It is wonderful to be free after all these years—but my pardon was no surprise. I looked for it from the time I completed my twentieth year. That is the life sentence of to-day. Mine was severer than that, only Governor Morton commuted me. In those twenty-one years I have seen many hanges in Sing Sing. I have seen it changed from a hell hole into a place where men are treated as human beings. The change is for the better. I personally know six or seven men in the prison, men who have served several sentences, who will never enter another prison, except perhaps as visitors, once they leave. Osborne has done it.

Take the one man now in Sing Sing that was there when I entered—Jack Barry. Jack has had six sentences there—he is serving life on the instalment plan. He is a fine fellow, a man who would never have any trouble if Mr. Osborne had been in charge of Sing Sing when Barry first went in there. If the Osborne system was in operation then, Jack Barry would never have gone back for a second dose. The first would have cured him.

Old System Wrong, He Says.

The old system was wrong, dead wrong. Why, I have seen twenty-five to thirty men hung up by the wrists twenty-four hours at a time waiting for a chance to be put into the cooler cells dark as a pit—and then have a bit of bread and two gills of water a day to live on. Two gills does not sound very badly, does it? Well, take the ordinary napkin ring; fill it with water, and you have pretty near it, not quite, a gill. That does not sound so well. I never had that experience; I never had a complaint against me while I was there, but I knew what was going on. I could not say anything.

You cannot make men better by pounding the life and spirit out of them. Treat them as humans and they will respond.

Only last night two of my neighbours, burglars, if you please—one of them had done seventeen jobs before they caught him—talked it all over with men in my room. They are convinced that being crooked don't pay. They will go straight when they come out. In the old days a man went out feeling sore at the whole world, and looking to get square with it and everybody in it. Now a man knows how they feel, for I have talked with them and I had their confidence—goes out feeling that after all the only person to blame for his trouble was himself; that it's a pretty good old world, and that if he looks out for himself he wont have any trouble. They did not feel that way in the old days.

Jobs Planned in Prison.

In the old days the boys planned many a job in prison. Other prisoners knew it; every one knew it in a general way. There's nothing like that there now. If a man has a job in mind — and perhaps some of them have—he keeps it to himself. Let the boys in there know that a man is planning to do something that is likely to bring him back, and he will hear about it. The fear of doing for those that are behind, of giving the enemies of reform a handle to knock with, independent of everything else, is going to help keep some men straight that otherwise might be tempted to go wrong.

I would rather talk prison reform than do anything else except play with my little great-great-grandaughter. You see I know it from the inside.

The new system is a good thing for the guards. Most of the guards there now are good men for the job. Most of the other kind have gone. There are fine men among those guards—Fred Berner, now the P.K., and Mr. Halbin, his assistant. You'll not find Mr. Berner staying in the prison or the village all the time. Like Commandtion hall to. Pete Commandatore was actually afraid to leave up there—he came to New York but twice. He was more a prisoner than any man within the walls. He was a just man but a hard man, severe, one of the old school. He was as much on the guards as he was on us. He could not help it, for it was its training.

There is not a man in the prison but would do anything for Berner. He's a disciplinarian, all right, but he does not have to get results with a club. If occasion required he probably could be as hard as any one, but they don't just arise. He was there when I went there—just started in as a guard. For the sake of the men who are there and who are to go there, I hope he will stay there twenty more years.

Three Weeks in Death House.

I do not remember going to Sing Sing. I do not remember my crime, my stay in the Tombs, my sentence or anything. I was in the death-house three weeks before I woke up and found out what had happened me and where I was. About that much longer Governor Morton gave me my life on Judge Ingraham's recommendation. What I cannot understand is why, if that judge thought me insane, I was not sent to Matteawan.

My health in prison until lately has been good. I have been sick but eight days in seventeen years. Now I am feeling fine again. I wanted to leave the prison last night at 9 o'clock, so as to escape all notoriety and that sort of thing, but I could not leave when Mr. Osborne wired from his home that he wished to see me. I could not run away from so good a friend as that. So this morning I left with Father Cashin, and here I am.

I suppose folks wonder what I did on my first day out. Just as I did before; stayed right here in the house. I had no desire to run around. I would rather play with the baby, the greatest little baby in the world. She's only sixteen months, and the only one of my grand-children to have seen me in prison. I stopped my folks coming when Warden Addison Johnson had that screen put up in the visitors' room and cages built. He asked me once why my folks did not come. I told him because I did not want them to see me caged up like a monkey.

Not Going Sightseeing.

That's another thing Mr. Osborne has done away with. Foolish thing it was, too. If a prisoner wanted guns or knives or dope there were better ways of getting them than from friends who might visit.

New York is changed, but I expected that. I have no desire to go sightseeing. In a few weeks, as soon as I get my affairs here in good shape, I am going west, back to California, where I went in '49. I have some good quartz properties up in the mountains.

London People Treat Zeppelins Like Fireworks

TORONTO, Sept. 24. Englishmen do not take the conscription agitation very seriously, according to Mr. Sigmund Samuel, who has just arrived at the Queen's Hotel from London, England. This is mostly on account of the fact that most of the men, particularly in the influential classes, have gone to the front already. "It will be a great feather in the cap of Great Britain if she can get through this war without the necessity of abandoning her ideals of voluntary service," said he.

Mr. Samuel, who lived in Toronto until a year and a half ago, has been tremendously impressed with the underlying quiet determination of the character of the inhabitants of the Old Land. "It is a tremendous thing for another country to undertake to oppose them." He spoke of the absolute determination of the people to conclude the war victoriously.

Germany Throttled.

Germany is at the zenith of her power. Great Britain will not have people I hope for a year or two. Men are the most abundant of the supplies of war. Germany is throttled. Though she took all Europe, she could not get outside the confines of the ocean. We always have the opportunity of a flanking movement."

Britain has done much for the Jews, what are you doing for Britain? So ran a poster published in the east end of London. "There was no need," said Mr. Samuel. "The Jews are doing more, in proportion, than any other section of the community. Over 16,000 declared Jews have gone to the front. At a meeting in the synagogue on the Jewish New Year, of all the young men in the congregation there was not one who was not in khaki."

The indomitable nature of the British people had been demonstrated in the recent Zeppelin raids when, instead of being terrorized by them, the people had treated them almost with levity, as fireworks.

Hatred of Germany.

"J.D." in the "Scottish-American" offers this parable to illuminate the chief motive of Germany's hatred of Britain: "A man lived with his two sons, one of whom was an idiot. The normal son, Jock, fell ill and died. Immediately after the death the father hastened to the backyard to inform the other son. 'Jimmy,' said he, 'Jock's dead.' 'Dead, is he?' replied the poor idiot, as he hurriedly made for the house, 'Jock deid! By . I'll hae his knife.'"

The Best Treatment For Constipation

The Experience of One Who Knows and Places Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills First

It is not difficult to secure a medicine that will effect movement of the bowels. To cure Constipation and the complications which arise from it is another matter.

Constipation of the bowels is usually preceded by torpid action of the liver. Hence it follows that if Constipation is to be cured the liver must be set right. And here lies the secret of the success of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. They awaken the action of the liver and insure a good flow of bile, which is nature's cathartic. The liver, kidneys and bowels are invigorated and regulated, and the troubles with the digestive system disappear.

Mr. H. M. Bell, Innisfail, Alta., writes: "For some considerable time I have been using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, which I have obtained through your firm. I suppose during my life I have used nearly all the best-known pills, as I have been subject to biles. A friend recommended Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, and I can honestly say that of all the pills I have tried nothing has suited me better—no griping—action always insured, and fine for the kidneys. This is how I have found them after a thorough test, and you may use this statement if you like."

This letter should convince you of the merits of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, but there is nothing like personal experience. If you do not feel like risking 25 cents for a box, write to us for a free sample box, mentioning where you saw this advertisement. THREE TURKISH TRANSPORTS ARE SUNK

GREECE IS GOING TO MOBILIZE HER ARMIES

THREE MORE TURKISH TRANSPORTS HAVE BEEN SUNK BY THE ALLIES

Allied Aviator Accounted For One And British Submarine Accounted For Two More---Allied Artillery on The Western Front Continues to Hammer The German Positions to Pieces.

RUSSIANS SCORE BRILLIANT VICTORIES

PARIS, Sept. 24.—Three more Turkish transports have been sunk by the Allied forces at the Dardanelles, it was officially announced this afternoon.

A British submarine sank two Turkish transports in Ak Bechi Bay under enormous difficulties.

There has been a lull in infantry actions at the Dardanelles, for the past few weeks, it was officially stated.

"The Turkish artillery has been capricious," said the official communique.

"Sometimes the Turks seem to lack ammunition. At other times they fire with maximum rapidity, though they do little damage. Turkish aeroplanes have been very inactive, and the Allies just the reverse."

PARIS, Sept. 24. — The Allies' batteries seriously damaged German works all night artillery battle around Arras, the War Office stated this afternoon.

Another furious artillery engagement occurred around Roye and Quenneveres, where the Germans used asphyxiating shells, but without result.

Near Bretencourt, a strong German patrol detachment attempted to storm the French advance positions, but was driven back, suffering heavy losses.

The French have poured in a heavy cannonade upon the German works in the Champagne and Argonne for 24 hours, wrecking trenches, blockhouses and enemy encampments.

German workmen attempting to repair the damage done by the previous bombardments were dispersed.

Several German attacks in Lorraine, west of Manhof and north of Bures, were repulsed.

NEW YORK, Sept. 24.—The Anglo-French loan is to-day nearer the final stage than is officially admitted. This was asserted to-day by a financier who has played an important part in discussions since the arrival of the financial commissioners.

Two important points in the loan are now understood to be decided on. One is that the amount will not exceed half a billion dollars. The other is that Russia will not officially be a signer of the agreement.

Another "informal conference" is scheduled for to-day. It is said New York bankers will attend this meeting.

PETROGRAD, Sept. 24.—Brilliant victories at both ends of the long battle front were claimed in official despatches to the War Office to-day.

Gen. Rusaky has beaten back with heavy losses the German forces who attempted to approach the Dwina River, 25 miles south of Riga.

Gen. Ivanoff has captured four villages from the Austrians, taking more than 1,500 prisoners.

BERLIN ADMITS LOSSES.

BERLIN, Sept. 24.—The War Office admitted that strong Russian attacks have forced Gen. Mackensen to retreat behind Oginski Canal, temporarily, abandoning his attempts to reach the Vilna-Rovno railway. The Russians are attempting to envelope Mackensen's flanks.

In the fighting for Dvinsk, the Slavs also gained temporary success, capturing several German cannon. The Teutons immediately counter-attacked northeast of Smielin, taking 1,000 prisoners.

TORONTO, Sept. 24.—The Anglicans in Canada are "enthusiastically loyal" to the King and Empire. This was declared by the General Synod to-day in a resolution fathered by Archdeacon Paterson-Smyth, Montreal, and Dean Schofield, Victoria. The resolution was received with enthusiastic singing, led by Dean Starr, Kings, of the National Anthem, minus the famous second verse.

Archdeacon Paterson-Smyth in speaking to his resolution, made himself the authority for the statement that at least seventy per cent. of the Canadian troops now on active service are members of the Church of England.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 24.—The British horse transport ship Anglo Columbia, from Montreal to England, was torpedoed by a German submarine off Fastnet at 9:30 this morning.

The crew had ample time to take to the boats. There were six Americans among the crew. No lives were lost.

OVER 1,700 CANADIAN WORKERS HAVE BEEN PLACED IN ENGLAND

LONDON, Sept 23.—G. N. Barnes, M.P., has given an emphatic contradiction of the statement appearing in the current issue of John Bull that many hundreds of Canadians had been induced to throw up their jobs as skilled mechanics and come to England, only to be told by the authorities that they knew nothing about it, with the result that the Canadians are stranded.

"Not a single man was induced to abandon his job," said Mr. Barnes, "but in the few cases where they did so voluntarily it was with the full consent of their employers. On the other hand, if the men were employed on useful work, we advised them that they were doing as patriotic service as if they were in England."

Mr. Barnes stated that he secured 1,780 mechanics in Canada, nearly all of whom have been placed in England with the exception of some moulders for whom there was no demand, but the latter were being sent back. Any difficulty in using the labour brought over was merely temporary. Mr. Barnes admitted that the complaints of Canadians in regard to separation allowances were well founded. No promise had been made by the Government on this point, but he was trying to secure separation allowance, the same as are given to London workmen sent to the provincial centres.

Sir George Perley stated that he was not aware there had been any bad treatment of these Canadian workmen, though one or two individuals had grievances. He stated that if any well founded grievance came before him he would bring the matter before the Board of Trade.

Will Crooks, M.P., said that he had seen a number of Canadian mechanics at Tyneside, from whom he had heard no complaints, though some desired to be transferred to London.

THE EMPIRE'S WEALTH

In 1912 the British Empire and her allies produced in gold $272,255,000 while the Teutonic allies produced $2,-130,500. It serves to remind us that the British Empire has an inexhaustible store of wealth.—London Advertiser.

80TH BATTALION TO MOUNT GUARDS AT THE ARMORIES

Local Soldiers Are Being Initiated in a New Phase of The Soldiers' Life—First March Out of The Week This Afternoon.

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

The men of the local detachment of the 80th Battalion are to have their first experience in another phase of the soldier life to-morrow, i.e., guard-mounting. Beginning at 12:30 o'clock to-morrow noon, a guard will be mounted at the Armouries and from now on there will be a guard day and night. The first guard is to be furnished by the physical drill squad, who were drilled this morning in the formalities attendant upon this part of a soldier's duty.

The local detachment had their first march-out of the week this afternoon and made a fine showing in their new uniforms. The band of the 80th, headed the parade, playing the new patriotic march "We'll Never Let the Old Flag Fall" in fine style.

Much to the delight of the men of the local detachment of the 80th Battalion, a consignment of service caps arrived this morning, and are being issued. The local soldier lads now have tunics, trousers, boots and caps, and will present a much smarter appearance on parade and on the street than they did in their fatigue uniforms.

The bugle band of the 59th Battalion passed through Peterborough last evening en route for Lindsay, where they are to take part in the Lindsay Exhibition to-day and to-morrow. A number of Peterborough boys are in the band, including Corp. Elliott, formerly of the 57th Regiment Bugle Band. The party entertained the people at the G. T. R. Station last evening with some lively airs.

Toronto News: There is hardly a day passes that the list of athletics who are enlisting for the front is not augmented by several of the best known stars in the different branches of sport. Yesterday Bert Janes, the clever goaler of last year's Peterboro O.H.A. hockey team, joined the ranks of the Sportsman's Battery at Hamilton. George Adams, the long-distance runner from St. Catharines, who held the ten mile Canadian record from 1907 to 1912, has also enlisted. Adams finished second in the fifteen-mile road race in Montreal in 1907.

The mother who is holding her son back now will find her mistake sooner or later. Let him join the 80th Battalion and go with as fine a behaved body of men as can be found in Canada.

Campbellford Raises $10,000 2 Day's Campaign

Considerable Sum Over Amount Aimed at Was Raised—Response Was General.

CAMPBELLFORD, Ont., Sept. 24.—A two days' campaign to raise $10,000 for the Canadian Patriotic Fund, and the Canadian Red Cross Society was successful beyond expectations. A considerable amount over the sum aimed at was raised. This was the first canvass for funds, and the response was general. Campbellford has a population of about 3,000.

No Appeal For Battalion Fund Only For Band

Peterborough city and district contributed nearly $5,000 to the Regimental Fund of the 59th Battalion, a regiment with not more than one hundred Peterborough boys in its ranks. Now The Examiner is appealing for support for the 80th Battalion Band, a Peterborough organization which will accompany a unit that already includes 175 men from Peterborough and the surrounding districts. The 80th Band is not asking for $5,000—one-quarter of that sum will supply all that is needed. Surely there should be no difficulty in raising that amount, but so far the response is very slow. The public should understand that the Government has forbidden the soliciting of regimental funds—all necessities such as field kitchens, etc., will henceforth be supplied by the Government. There will be no more appeals for funds of that kind. But bands are not on the same footing. Although Kipling says "the band is the soul of the regiment," the Government does not supply band instruments. These must come from the people of Peterborough, or from some other municipality in the division. We have supplied the bandmaster and the band—let us make the job complete. The Examiner will take charge of all donations.

FURTHER ENQUIRY TO BE MADE INTO DEATH OF GIRL

Considerable Evidence Heard at Havelock To-day in Regard to The Demise Under Suspicious Circumstances of Fourteen Year Old Dummer Girl---Died From Septic Peritonitis.

"We, the undersigned jurymen, came to the conclusion that Lily May Lindsay came to her death by foul play, caused by some unknown person or persons, and that the case should be further inquired into."

The foregoing verdict was rendered by a Coroner's Jury at an inquest that was held yesterday afternoon in Havelock, to investigate the death of Lillian May Lindsay, the 14-year-old daughter of Sandford Lindsay, who resides in Dummer, near Clarina, Stoney Lake. The girl's death occurred under very suspicious circumstances which may yet develop into a very serious charge against one or possibly more persons. The preliminary inquest was held on Saturday last death having occurred on Friday. The adjourned hearing was opened in the town hall, yesterday afternoon, before Coroner Dr. H. C. Kindred. Crown Attorney Hatton conducted the investigation, assisted by Detective Boyd of the Provincial Police.

Mr. G. N. Gordon was present on behalf of Mr. and Mrs. Lindsay, parents of the deceased. The hearing was closed to the public, only the officials, witnesses, and the press were allowed to be present.

Was Common Knowledge.

The first witness called was Mrs. Wm. Seen, a neighbour of the Lindsay's. She told of the dead girl telling her that she was in trouble and did not want her parents to know about it. The condition of the girl, witness declared, was common knowledge and gossip in the community and was quite evident from her appearance. Juryman Jos. Dwyer and the witness clashed over a statement. Dwyer said he had heard her make about some Penny Royal pills the girl was supposed to have taken, and Mrs. Seen left the box volunteering the opinion that the "poor girl had been duped" to death.

Doctors Consulted.

Dr. Munro of Warsaw told of being consulted by the girl's mother in August last, and prescribing a common remedy for a cold under certain conditions to young girls. He had never seen the deceased.

Dr. Sutton of Norwood, who had been called in just before the girl's demise, told of the serious condition from septic poisoning he had found his patient in, and of the means he took to afford her relief. The mother he said, had admitted to him that the girl had been in trouble, and that a young man by the name of Young was responsible for her trouble. He swore that his patient had said while under the anaesthetic "Oh, papa take your hands away."

Result of Post Mortem.

Dr. Hobkirdt of town, gave the report of the post mortem, stating, in brief, that the girl had died from an abortion caused by some kind of an instrument, which had caused serious injury.

Mrs. Lindsay, the mother of the deceased girl, swore positively that she knew nothing of the girl's condition until the premature parturition took place, and that her daughter had told her on her death bed that the cause of her trouble was a young man named Eddie Young, who had visited the Lindsay home for a day or two, in July last. Witness didn't know where Young was now, but he had told them he was going to Tweed. She denied Dr. Sutton's evidence as to the girl's remark while under chloroform. The pills referred to above, had been taken by her, and had been procured by her husband from a druggist in Norwood.

The Father's Evidence.

Sanford Lindsay, the father, in his evidence, corroborated his wife's story as to Young being the cause of his daughter's trouble. The deceased had never taken any medicine except some liniment that he knew of. He could not recollect buying pills for his wife at Norwood, nor did he recognize the box they came in.

Mrs. Frank Newall of Methuen another neighbour, and an elderly lady, told of the dead girl coming to her, and complaining that she thought she was in trouble, and that it was her father's fault. Just before her death the girl told the witness that it was her father who was to blame for her trouble.

It rests with Crown Attorney Hatton as to what further action, if any, is to be taken in the matter.

Following are names of the jurymen: Wm. Hubble, foreman; Frank Cullerty, Thos. Colby, J. H. Loyd, Henry Puffer, S. Wallbridge, C. Emery, Thos. Curtis, C. Hall and Jas. Dwyer.

A Charge of Murder.

That a charge of murder will be preferred against some person as a result of the inquest that was held in Havelock, yesterday, to investigate the death of Lillian May Lindsay, is practically a foregone conclusion. The nature of the verdict rendered by the jury leaves the authorities no other alternative but to prosecute the investigation and, if possible, bring the guilty person or persons to justice. It is understood that the authorities are in possession of sufficient evidence to justify an arrest at any time. The case is in the hands of the Provincial police, who are operating in conjunction with County Crown Attorney Hatton.

The case is one of the most of its kind and it is safe to say that the criminal history of Peterborough county never contained anything worse—if not what foul play was the cause of the girl's death, and the person upon whom suspicion falls, was referred to at the hearing. In some respects the case is similar to that which was recorded in Peterborough some months ago, and which resulted in the death of three persons.

GREEK ARMY IS TO MOBILIZE NOW

SHOT BY GUN HE HAD PREPARED AS A THIEF TRAP

Mr. Sydney Garrett of Otonabee Seriously Injured When He Thoughtlessly Walked Into This Trap Set For Chicken Thieves.

IN ST. JOSEPH'S HOSPITAL

On Wednesday night Mr. Sydney Garrett, who resides in Otonabee, north of the Burnham property, loaded and set a gun in his hen-house so arranging it that the opening of the door would pull the trigger, and discharge a shell of buck-shot through the entrance. The trap was really set for prowling chicken thieves who by their thefts, had exhausted the Garrett patience and prompted the preparation of a warm reception for the next visitors, or as a signal of their return.

Thursday morning Mr. Garrett followed his usual routine, and after chatting with the family, went out to the henhouse to feed the fowl. He opened the door and thereby pulled the trigger of the gun which was aimed directly at him. He received the buckshot in the lower abdomen, and is now in St. Joseph's Hospital with injuries which, it was stated this morning, may prove serious. Dr. Anys, who is attending him, stated that eight shots had entered Mr. Garrett's abdomen, and although he was resting easily this morning the exact nature of the wounds could not be learned until an operation was performed. If some of them have pierced the bowels the seriousness of the condition might become notable as creased by possible developments. Some of the shots caused other injuries in the region of the groin.

The Hospital reported this morning that Mr. Garrett was resting easily. He is the father of Private Stanley Garrett of the 2nd Battalion, who was injured at St. Julien.

WERE FINED 2 DOLLARS EACH

Three Drunks Appeared in This Morning's Police Court

A Finlander and two members of the Overseas Expeditionary Force occupied the front row of the police court dock this morning, Acting Magistrate Rush imposed a fine of two dollar in each case. All but one member of the trio pleaded guilty. The outlier went into the witness box and sought to contradict the evidence of the police. He explained that he was attempting to get his friend home when the police passed him under arrest for being drunk and disorderly. One of the men used his spurs on the officer, so the witness alleged. Magistrate Rush was severe in his condemnation of the two men. He said they should be an example to others and not disgrace the King's uniform, as they had done.

Gust. Tolf, the Finlander, was unable to speak English. He appeared to be somewhat dazed. Magistrate Rush imposed a fine of $2.

Despatches State That Premier Venezelos Will Ask King Constantine to Sign The Decrees at 4 O'clock To-day.

BULGARS LEAVE PARIS

Special to The Examiner.

PARIS, Sept. 24.— Greece has decided to mobilize armies, according to Athens dispatches received here to-day.

A decision was reached at the cabinet meeting yesterday the dispatch said. It was not stated when the mobilization decree will be promulgated.

LONDON, Sept. 24.—Premier Venizelos will ask King Constantine to sign a decree, declaring a general mobilitazion of the Greek armies at four o'clock this afternoon, according to an exchange telegram despatch from Athens.

The news that mobilization order calling twenty classes to the colours had been decided upon, was flashed through the city earlier in the day, and the second announcement that general mobilization orders were issued increased the tension.

Venizelos has summoned the leaders of all political parties to a conference to be held this evening.

His object is to solidify all elements behind the government in meeting the crisis.

Doings at Monthly Meeting I. O. D. E.

The regular monthly meeting of the 57th Chapter was held at the Armouries on Thursday afternoon. The Vice-Regent occupied the chair.

It was decided to give up, for the winter, the afternoon tea usually enjoyed at these meetings.

Tickets for the picture presented to the Chapter by Mr. K. G. Lech, will be sold at once, and the picture will be on exhibition in the window of the L. B. Clegg Furniture Co's. store, George Street.

A committee was appointed to visit at present who may be in hospital here. Letters have been sent to sick and overseas members.

The Visiting Committee reported 23 visits since last meeting, and Mrs. Mills reported 47 visits during the summer months.

The Knitting Committee reported 60 pairs of socks on hand. It was decided to have one more supply of socks made up with the assistance of the Ladies' Auxiliary of Barriefield Camp. 16 pairs from Peterborough and 10 pairs from Lakefield were to be sent to the Barriefield Camp. Letters of thanks from Lt. Hancock for 50 pairs of socks sent last year to the Barriefield camp, and Barriefield camp for cheque of $5 for wool, was gratefully received from Mrs. John Wood.

The 57th Chapter expect to open a Tea Room once a week, after the 1st of November. Notice of [illegible] later date.

A motion was carried [illegible] the Chapter to send [illegible] for Christmas, as far as possible, to all men who have enlisted from Peterborough.

The Chapter has sent 770 pairs of socks to Peterborough men since last March.

"Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unsurpassed."

FRIDAY, SEPT. 24, 1915

MAKE IT 200.

No young man need feel ashamed to be seen in the ranks of such a fine body of upstanding lads as the recruits of the 80th Battalion. It is a mistake, perhaps, except as a matter of definition, to call them recruits; for they swing through the streets to the inspiring music of the new band, with the soldierly stride and bearing of veterans—almost while the 80th boys can be praised for their appearance, their greatest claim to distinction and praise is concealed under the new nicely fitting khaki tunics—in their sound, and loyal, and courageous hearts. Any young man who does not feel a thrill of pride, or an impulse to enlistment by a sight of the marching lads of the 80th, has something wrong with his heart, or his head, or both. If one out of the ten of the young men in Peterborough could pluck up the courage to take the first step we should have the strength of the 80th Battalion brought up to the mark set for Saturday night, 200.

CHRISTMAS AND THE SOLDIERS.

Christmas is three months away. It is rather early to enjoin Christmas shopping betimes; but it is none too early to enjoin and consider measures for remembering the Canadian family circle now in the trenches or training camps overseas, at the great Christmas festival. The 57th Chapter of the Daughters of the Empire are, as we might expect from their thoughtful interest, considering the matter. The idea is a splendid one, and should appeal with especial force to all of us. With proper effort, proper organization, every single Peterborough soldier could, as he should be, be remembered. It can easily be done if there is general response to so laudable a call. "Merry Christmas" may be a far different cry in the trenches than it is in our happy homes, and in our peaceful streets; it will have a more meaning and welcome ring, in our soldier boys' ears, if it goes with material remembrances, which will have their value infinitely appreciated by their being from HOME. It is not too early to begin thinking and doing something worth while in this direction.

RED CROSS WORK.

A "Helper" in last night's Examiner issued an appeal for greater interest by women in Red Cross work. While one may not add to the force of the appeal coming from one who knows the need, additional emphasis may be placed on the importance of the work. The soldiers who have gone to the battle front have a hard enough time with the toil of the trenches, with the deprivation of the comforts—the well spread table in comfortable surroundings, the comfortable bed under a sound roof—when everything goes well; when he is untouched by shot or shell, or by illness. But when wounds come, when sickness comes, his needs multiply and he adds immeasurably to the sacrifices he is making for—us. We need to do more thinking, and to add more doing to more thinking. One would have thought that, from the visible activities of our women they were nearly all enlisted in some form of Red Cross work; but "Helper" shows us that this is not the case. The situation should be remedied; and it seems that all that is needed to enlist all our women is more direct individual appeal. If our women were more generally impressed with the urgent need of comforts and relief for our sick and wounded soldiers they would, with women's natural tenderness of heart, with her finer feelings and her larger sympathies, have only to be told, to have their hands, as their hearts already are, enlisted in work. If there is as much discrepancy in the count of women that do, and do not do, Red Cross work, as there is in the men of our city that do, and do not enlist, there is a very great number of women that should be brought into useful connection with the beautiful activities of the Red Cross work.

THE DURATION OF PARLIAMENT.

The Examiner has received the following communication:

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Sir,—Your efforts to persuade your exchanges against an election are worthy of all praise. In last night's issue you say:

"The Weekly Sun says 'the party papers are playing an entertaining farce about the elections.' It declares that they know very well that there is no possibility of deferring an election beyond the time set by the constitution. This may be technically correct, but is there no way to extend the life of parliament if national and imperial interests demand such a thing on, October 7th, 1916? There may be no constitutional power."

The Weekly Sun is a Liberal journal. Its attempt to discourage the idea you urge surprises me. If the Canadian Parliament asks the Imperial Parliament's permission the Canadian parliamentary term can be extended. We are consequently in a different position from that of the Imperial Parliament. That parliament can allow us to extend our term on the application and consent of the Canadian Parliament, or without it, if the provinces unanimously consent. If the Borden Government is compelled to go to the country next year, or after the next session of parliament, one-half of our energies will be consumed in a needless contest. It is nothing less than a crime to refuse to extend our parliamentary term in this crisis.

A few months ago I wrote to the Colonial Office regarding this question, and Mr. Bonar Law's reply leaves no doubt in my mind that the "Constitution" can be suspended so long as the people do not rise against it.

J. H. BURNHAM.

Our correspondent's communication shows that there is a possible way to avoid the crime of a war-time election. We need only to measure up to the spirit of the saying, "where there is a will, there's a way." It is a mistake to say that the Sun is a Liberal journal, in a party sense. It is liberal in a far-wider sense; it is a free lance; and it is hoped that in the position it takes it does not represent the Liberal thought or, what is equivalent, the patriotic spirit of our people. No one that has the real interests of Canada and the Empire at heart, will throw a straw in the way of the people of Canada being left free to throw their whole souls into the work of fighting the menace of our freedom. We cannot, of course, speak for the Liberal party's policy in a specific case of difficult decision; but we can be morally certain and confident, that the Liberal party of this country with a robust faith and trust in the wisdom and public spirit of its leader, will not hesitate to follow the way he shows. He has declared his adhesion to the principle of subordinating party warfare to the warfare of liberty. He is a man of his word, and we can feel confident that when the occasion comes he will take the patriotic course, the best course, in the interests of the country and the Empire. He may even be willing to sacrifice much of minor import to considerations of the greater good. At the same time we must not use too much loose phraseology. The extension of the life of parliament, from day to day, so to speak, is something far different from extending — duplicating—the life of parliament for a term — five years. There is no human probability that such an extension will be necessary, if it were wise, when an extension from session to session would serve every purpose. Any extension will be only justified by the emergency of war conditions. Once that passes we should, with extension from session to session, be in a position to return to the normal political condition, which would demand the holding of the deferred general election as promptly as possible.

ELEGY IN A COUNTRY DAIRY.

The curfew tolls the knell of parting day,
The lowing kine have all been milked, and, lo!
The milkman, pumpward, plods his weary way
To get the necessary H 2 O.—Montreal Herald-Telegraph.

IF HE WILL PLAY THE PART.

Let Sir Robert Borden play the part, not of an uncertain party leader, but of the real Prime Minister of Canada, and let him take this whole war situation as seriously as he knows it to be, and the Liberals of Canada will join their Chief, by whom they have been pledged, in giving him devoted and loyal service until the war is over and the victory is won.—Globe.

JOB FOR THE CROWN PRINCE.

Of course, if the Crown Prince is really suffering from mental aberration his services need not necessarily be lost to Germany. There is always room for him in the foreign office.—Exchange.

GERMAN CONQUEST OF THE U. S.

The situation appears to be this, that an invading German army corps in mufti, scattered at various strategical points, armed with pens, purses, and incendiary matches, is attempting the surreptitious conquest of the United States.—Toronto Star.

HOW BRITAIN BEARS AND PROVIDES FOR HER FINANCIAL LOAD

Mr. McKenna's budget will give financiers, statesmen, and taxpayers generally, something to think about for a long time to come. The Chancellor stated that the revenue for the current year would be about $1,320,000,000, the expenditure $7,950,000,000, and the dead weight of the debt at the end of the year would be $11,000,000,000. The Government is spending now, in ordinary and war expenditure, $25,000,000 a day, and the indications are that this expenditure will tend to increase rather than to decrease for a considerable period. It would be hard to devise any budget in such conditions that would arouse enthusiasm among the people who have to pay the piper; but Mr. McKenna grasped his nettle like a man. He proposes to add 40 per cent. to the income tax, and to assess it upon all incomes of $650 per annum or more. He will increase the duty on sugar $2.24 per hundredweight (or a penny a pound), and add 50 per cent. to the duties on tea, coffee, chicory, tobacco, dried fruits and other things, and 100 per cent on patent medicines. Half-penny postage is to be abolished, and a tax of thirty-three and a third per cent. is to be levied on a number of imported articles; there is also to be a special tax on increased incomes and war profits, which in most cases will mean the same thing. As he puts it, "fiscal theories must go by the board."

Unfortunately it does not follow that fiscal conditions will therefore go by the board. The limitations to the possibility of increasing revenue by increasing taxation are not matters of theory, but of fact. Then it must be remembered that the question raised by the existing abnormal financial conditions (not in the United Kingdom only) is something more than a fiscal question. When the war is over, and Germany is once more in the market of the world, the economic strain may be greater than ever. All the nations, neutral as well as belligerent, will start the peace era badly handicapped by heavy financial obligations, business demoralization, and the paramount necessity of the world ever again being at the mercy of the Huns, either from a military or an economic point of view. The Germans cannot complain if the nations take precautions to prevent the continuance of the German monopolies in defensive and industrial necessities.

This may or may not become a fiscal question; in any case it must not be forgotten that some of the most important industries now monopolized by Germany are dependent upon cheap raw material as well as cheap labour. This is particularly true of the chemical industries. For the sake of illustration, let us take alcohol (only for illustration, and only denatured alcohol!) which is essential to many manufactures. It is conceivable that an increase in the duty on alcohol might considerably increase the direct revenue from the importation of that article. But it is also conceivable that the Government would raise more revenue from alcohol, indirectly, by putting it on the free list. The Canadian Section of the Society of Chemical Industry has been urging this reform, and has pointed out that the cost of ether as an anaesthetic would be prohibitive without the use of alcohol; that most of the chloroform is made from it, and that without it such articles as vinegar, flavouring extracts, perfumes, photographic films, plates and paper, and synthetic dyes could not be produced. It is also of the first importance in manufacturing certain explosives, such as nitro-cellulose or gun-cotton. From an industrial point of view there is more in free alcohol for manufacturing purposes than there is in a direct tax on the spirit of any amount.

These questions are of great interest to Canada (which, unlike Great Britain, does not enjoy free denatured alcohol) because we are confronted with similar financial and industrial conditions. Our burden of debt will not be proportionately so great, and our recuperative power will be infinitely greater; but very soon we shall have to meet a condition which will call for financial genius to deal with. The permanent recovery of Canada is entirely a question of increased productiveness and government and individual economy. There is no sense in waiting for peace to be declared before maturing our economic policy. New industries, especially chemical ones, and the development of old ones are evidently the first need of the Dominion; and there is reason to fear that the powers that be know no more about these things to-day than they did before the war — and everyone now knows that that knowledge was not enough to hurt anybody. We were promised a Royal Commission for investigating purposes, but it has not materialized yet, and when it does there is danger that there may be more politics than business in it.—Montreal Telegraph Herald.

She Has the Fad.

Darling, I am growing old,
For I feel rheumatic twinges
In my fingers as I fold
Each upon the other; hinges
Creaking in my elbows warn me
That gay youth's about to scorn me.

Darling, I am growing old;
Ripe red roses bloom no longer
On my pallid cheeks; some bold,
Dauntless hand has carved out stronger
Lines upon my forehead pale,
Where massage and cold cream fail.

Darling, I am growing old;
Waltz and twostep do not please me.
Now it takes a wit to hold
My attention and release me
From the sleepy spell that binds me,
And of coming age reminds me.

Darling, am I growing old?
Can't I find something to try on
This plump form new lines to mould,
And old age to quite slip by on?
Exercise, they say, with diet
Will work wonders; think I'll try it.

Contrary to the Rules.

"Bertha, will you love me always? Will you think of me every moment of the day and dream of me by night? Will my name be engraved on your heart like a shoe sign on a billboard? Will you carry my image with you in your mind while you are doing the housework, peeling potatoes or doing up your back hair? My darling, I plead for all of your time. Do I ask too much?"

As he spoke these passionate words John Pendergaster took her soft, clinging hand in his ham-like fin and stroked it a few times while he waited for her answer.

"Dear John," said the beautiful young thing at last, a smile lighting up her face and disclosing the four dollar filling in her front teeth, "you know I love you, but do you realize what you have asked? I should just love to do that better than anything I can think of right now, but woe is me. I am a member of the union, and by its rules we are forbidden to love a man for more than eight hours a day."

Douglas Hallam Honored.

Lieut. Hallam is recuperating in London, having been five times wounded and suffering from sickness.

He came to England with the first Canadian contingent, and exchanged into the naval service. He is the only Canadian yet serving in the Dardanelles.

Lieut. Hallam is a son of the late Ald. John Hallam. He is a graduate of Upper Canada College, and began his newspaper work on The Toronto Daily Star.

Wonderful Paraffin.

Paraffin was at first a useless by-product of the oil refineries, but has now a thousand uses. Besides the use of paraffin for candles, 2,000,000 blocks of refined paraffin are sold every year for an infinity of purposes. A liberal arrangement with a chewing gum maker gave him the foundation for a million dollar fortune. Paraffin was applied to Cleopatra's needle in Central park, New York, when the surface of the obelisk began to scale off, and it stopped it. Stone fronts of houses are protected the same way, an application every three or four years being sufficient to prevent disintegration. Paraffin is made into colored crayons, which will stick on glass as well as paper. Paraffin is used in laundries to whiten the clothes and in polishing the surface of starched pieces. It is used for sealing canned fruits or anything put up in bottles by home folks, manufacturers, druggists or chemists. It is used generally as a substitute for beeswax, tallow and sealing wax and for insulating wires.

Making Men.

They took him from a counter,
His face was thin and old.
He shivered in the slightest draught
And frequently caught cold.
They took him from a counter
And gallantly he went;
They let him sleep on icy boards
Beneath an icy tent.
Sometimes of course he shivered.
His feet were often damp,
But drills and marches hardened him.
He grew to like the camp.
He had no cause to sniffle.
To cough or sneeze or choke.
He did not shrink from wintry gales
And draughts became a joke.
They took him from a counter,
They fed him wondrous well.
They Swedish exercised him in
A way no tongue can tell.
They kept him in the open air,
No longer does he sigh
For he has gained some thirty pounds
Since early in July.

Story of a Preacher.

Bill Nye used to tell this story of the late Myron W. Reed of Denver: Reed was a bright and original preacher and many curious people came to hear him. Once a man from the Gunnison country arrived at his church rather late Sunday morning while Reed was making a low but earnest prayer. "Louder," yelled the late comer. Mr. Reed ceased his prayer for a moment, looked at the gentleman from over the range, and said. "My friend, I wasn't speaking to you; I was addressing God."

WAR IS BETWEEN CHRIST AND SATAN, WRITES SIR OLIVER LODGE

Says Allies Are Fighting in a Holy Cause—New Book By Eminent Savant Has Created a Stir in London

LONDON, Sept. Aug. 24.—The new book written by Sir Oliver Lodge on the present war has created quite a stir. It is a small volume entitled "The War and After," and contains a strong denunciation of the Germans and their methods and aims. The writer is convinced that this is the war between good and evil, between Christ and the devil. He does not doubt for a minute the ultimate victory of the allies, because, he says, they are the servants of Christ and are fighting for a righteous cause. He states this simple faith without any qualifications or apology. It is, he says, a war against principalities and powers of spiritual wickedness in high places. "I myself," he adds, "believe in assistance from on high." In this connection he says:

"We, unworthy, are agents of higher powers in this conflict. We are genuinely and consciously fighting for the right. We have no other object than to keep humanity from falling below the state it has so far attained, and sinking back into the mire of animal materialism and brute force. We stand against the powers of evil, one of them champions of Christendom, resisting decadence, and upholding spiritual faith. That is our strength and may be our salvation.

"There is no false pride in this statement, and there need be no false modesty. The day of trial has shown us both our faults and our virtues. Lamentably deficient in wisdom as we are, we do as a nation earnestly long for the triumph of the good.

Ideas of the People.

Heroism, virtue and strength of character really do appeal to us, and arouse not perfunctory, but genuine enthusiasm. . . . We have a sense of personal honor, and have a healthy horror of gratuitous cruelty and savage revenge. . . . Virtue victorious and vice vanquished is what really appeals to the heart of the people."

Sir Oliver Lodge has no hesitation whatever in loudly praising German achievements. As a philosopher he has a very keen appreciation of the German teachers of the days before the Prussian domination. "Prussia," he says, "has gained her power over Germany because she is more utterly worldly than any other nation. We and the French have been worldly enough, but we have always known that there was another world. Prussia has never known that, or, rather, the world for her, if it exists at all, is just the same as this one except that it is more favorable to Prussia. And the Germans, different, wavering and credulous in matters of the world, have been overawed by her narrow certainty. They saw that the Prussians, had gained power, and they went to Prussia to learn the secret of it.

"The kulture of this new Germany is the antithesis of culture.

"Civilization without morality, with no wide outlook, no elevation of purpose, no loftiness of soul, no perception of beauty, no veneration of recognition of anything higher than the State—it is blank atheism. Organization as an end in itself, devoid of religion and with all the culture of life ignored—it is like the old soulless political economy based on omitted—it is the old temptation of Genesis, 'Ye shall be as gods.'"

War Itself Not Always Evil.

Sir Oliver writes as a Christian, and as a Christian he scorns the doctrine of non-intervention and passivity.

War is not always opposed to Christianity. There are worse evils than death. It is Christian to make a stand for right. Good-will on the negative side is not enough; there comes a time when activity is necessary and when anything else is unChristain and inhuman. . . . Active interference is required when an enemy tries to trample on a friend. At that stage we now are—and, thank God, we have responded.

"To have sat still and have done nothing would have been to 'deny our Master'.

"There was not a trace of pacifist non-resistance on His part save in respect of personal injuries. He was not one to wash His hands when the innocent was unjustly accused, or when confronted with the power of Satan. No, the typical pacifist was Pilate.

"When a nation behaves as the German nation has behaved we are justified in sharing with the highest a blaze of righteous anger, and we are summoned to the activities which accompany such anger. Wherever tyranny and vice are rampant, virtue means protest and strenuous activity. As the sword of the Lord and in the power of His might we must slay and extirpate the evil men who are responsible for the outrage to humanity and who have dragged the nation down till they approve them.

"Shall I not visit these things? saith the Lord shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this?"

A WORD TO OUR PATRONS IN PETERBOROUGH

It is a well known fact that this war has caused havoc in the tailoring trade especially those firms who import their goods from the Old Country, notwithstanding this, however, the GLOBE TAILORING CO. through their buying agents in HUDDERSFIELD, ENGLAND, secured huge orders for delivery August 1st and although some of these goods are a little late in arriving, nevertheless, we have received a fair amount of these shipments. This places us in a position to still supply our Well-Known Suits and Overcoats at the same price of $14 CUSTOM MADE-TO-MEASURE.

Our finances not being tied up in Real Estate, we were able to pay cash for the majority of these goods and therefore our price REMAINS AS BEFORE. PANAMA CANAL'S EFFECT IN CANADA

Some Rates To Coast Must Be Reduced.

Problem is Largely One of Meeting Commercial Competition on West Coast between Eastern Manufacturers in States Who are Directly Benefited and Those of Eastern Canada—Case Not Clear Cut Because of Small Business and Unsettled State of Ocean Traffic and Charges.

The Panama Canal has been in operation for one year. Despite the fact that the conditions during that period have been abnormal as regards business and transportation, the outstanding fact remains that such has been the divergence of freight traffic to the all-water route in the coast to coast routing that several of the big American railroads, notably the Southern Pacific and the Santa Fe, are demanding the right to reduce the overland charges in order to maintain their existence. Although the canal is an American undertaking and the position of Canada far to the north largely disposes of Canadian interest therein, the shortening of the water route to British Columbia from around the Horn to through the Great Cut has had a certain effect upon competitive rates between the Pacific Coast and Eastern Canada. In this problem Canadian railroads—the Railway Commission, the Government and the Manufacturers' Association, are vitally interested and developments are being closely watched.

Adjustment of certain freight rates for transcontinental business is likely to be the method adopted to meet the issue, but there have been suggestions of routing through New York to American lines or the established of a subsidized Canadian service form Montreal.

Accoridng to W. R. MacInnes, freight traffic manager of the Cana-Pacific, who has been following closely the effects of the Panama short-cut on Canadian traffic, the problem is one of commerce rather than of transportation. And being a problem of commerce it has to be studied largely from a theoretical standpoint in view of the commercial conditions which have prevailed during the period since the opening of the canal. By this Mr. MacInnes means that the effect of the war has been such upon the volume of traffic between Eastern Canada and British Columbia and so great has been the disorganization of ocean services and ocean rates that it is impossible to work definitely from the actual returns.

Meeting Competition.

Explaining the theory of commercial competition as the important problem, MacInnes went to his map of North America, and if the reader will do the same he will better understand the explanation. Setting down as a basis that the question largely involved was of marketing certain Canada in British Columbia and certain products of the Pacific province in the East, it was pointed out that in the manufacturing belt of the North Eastern States and in Ontario and Quebec there are certain similar products for which there is a competitive market in British Columbia. Now if the Panama route has the effect of permitting the American manufacturer to ship his products by water down the Atlantic coast and up the Pacific and pay his duty at the coast ports of entry and make more favourable prices than in the past, it becomes a direct question of reducing the Canadian over-land charge so as to meet this condition.

Taking the Eastern and Western Canadian markets as the ends of a horseshoe, the water route might be illustrated by the shoe itself and a direct line between the calks would represent the over-land. If by the opening of the canal the rates on the long route are reduced, then those of the shorter route must come down also. It is not just a question of traffic for the railroad, but a problem of commerce to preserve the British Columbia market to the Canadian manufacturers.

Rates Will Be Adjusted.

Although, as stated, the conditions which have prevailed since the opening of the canal have been such that the transportation problem arising therefrom so far as Canada is concerned have hardly taken concrete form, they have not been neglected. The railroads and the manufacturers. The Post is informed, have been working together and have been keeping their cases before the Railway Commission. The railroads explained to the manufacturers that if there were reduced rates made on certain commodities to British Columbia, they must be taken as exceptions to the general schedule and regarded without bearing upon the tariffs to the prairie sections. Already some slight adjustments have been made and it is taken that there will be further changes when the situation takes definite form and the railroads and manufacturers can bring proof that American interests have gained an advantage on the Pacific coast. This can be done in theory based on tariff rates, but actual business is disorganized. One rather important adjustment which has been made effects the movement of canned salmon from British Columbia to the East, especially export consignments. This is to overcome the all-water advantage.

One effect of the canal route will undoubtedly be that, as regards certain heavy products, Eastern Canadian manufacturers will have to regard an export market and be prepared to meet the keenest kind of competition. There have been certain commodities which there has been a cheaper rate to Vancouver than to Calgary, although the consignment went through the latter city and then over the costly mountain section to the coast. The number of goods in this class and the extent of the through advantage are likely to be increased by Panama transportation.

Other Solutions of Problem.

The opinion in railroad circles is that the problem will be solved largely by reduced transcontinental freight tariffs, not of great significance in relation to the traffic as a whole but still sufficient to meet commercial competition. But this is not the only solution which has been suggested. The Post learns that at Ottawa there have been at least two other proposals made. One of these that the Government open a Customs office at the port of New York and that Canadian manufactures be shipped by rail to that point and then by boat by the canal to British Columbia; the other that the Government subsidize a line of steamers from Montreal to Vancouver to work through the Panama cut.

From a national business standpoint it would not appear that either of these schemes is likely to be adopted. In the first place, Canada has more railroads that her present development requires, and in the second place the Government itself has a large interest in some of those systems. It has been generally recognized that the railroads are one of the big burdens being carried by Canada to-day, and it would go out of its way to establish new routes under the prevailing industrial conditions, unless it were proven that the railways were not able or prepared to meet competition.

Situation in United States.

Reviewing the year's operation of the canal from the American standpoint, the New York Journal of Commerce states that three important things have been accomplished. There has been a development in all water transcontinental traffic in many unable to move by all-rail or mixed water and rail lines, particularly lumber. Prosperity has come to a number of Panama Canal steamship lines by doubling the volume of coast to coast cargoes offered them for transportation. Normal traffic has been diverted to the all-water lines to such an extent that the railroad companies are struggling to continue in competition by making general reductions in their all-rail transcontinental as well as mixed water and rail rates.—The Financial Post of Canada—Sept. 18, 1915.

Airmen Dropped Bombs on Stuttgart

Berlin, Sept. 22.—An official statement issued here to-day says:

"Enemy airmen with German marks on their aeroplanes appeared at 8.45 o'clock this morning over Stuttgart, dropping bombs on the town, killing four persons and wounding a number of soldiers and civilians. The material damage was quite unimportant. The airmen were fired at by our anti-aircraft troops and disappeared in a southern direction at 8.50 o'clock.

"Owing to the fact that shortly after 7.45 o'clock the military authorities were informed of approaching German airmen, the population could only be warned when it was comparatively late.

"A German airman arrived over Stuttgart at 9.30 o'clock. He was fired at from below for a short time until he was recognized as a German airman. He landed unhurt near the town."

URIC ACID SUFFERING.

Uric acid is an accumulation of poison which finds lodgment in the system when the kidneys fail to remove it from the blood. In the kidneys and bladder it forms stones, in the joints and muscles it causes rheumatism. In any case the pain and suffering is almost beyond human endurance. Uric acid is promptly removed from the system when the kidneys are kept healthy and active by using Dr. Hamer's Kidney-Liver Pills.

In War Times.

Tramp—Please, mum, I'm a Belgian refugee.

Lady—Are you? Mention a town in Belgium.

Tramp (cogitating a moment)—I would, mum, but they have all been destroyed.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

"Going one bright winter day I had for caddie a boy who didn't know me. An unfortunate stroke landed me in a clump of high grass.

"My, my!" I said. "What am I to do now?"

"See that tree?" said the boy, pointing to a tall tree a mile away. "Walk straight for that."

I did so, and, fortunately, my ball started up near the tree. I looked and rolled right on to the green.

"How far now, boy?" I said.

"Oh, you're on your own now," he answered. "I've got my strength and confidence, what a par 4 can do!"

The Ministers Wife.

A Presbyterian minister, in one of our leading pulpits, says the Presbyterian Witness, "at Harvest Home, prayed earnestly for "all the wounded and widows among our congregation." On reaching home his good wife took him to task for his petitions for the wounded "among our own men." Next Sabbath, action on the hint from his wife he bravely attempted to broaden the scope of his petition, and was overcome in his application for "all of the fellows who had been wounded on both sides." It is understood that his wife has made no further attempts to criticize the phraseology of the later prayer.

What He Was Told.

A proud mother told her son he was to be photographed. Arriving at the studio the child suddenly began to cry uproariously. It was impossible to keep him in the chair. For an hour he filled the place with his howls and yells, running wildly about the room. "But, Jonny," said the mother, "the gentleman isn't going to hurt you! Just sit and keep still for a moment, and it will be all over before you know it!" "Yes," exclaimed the young terrorist, his tears, "yes, I know. That's what you told me at the dentist's!"

At a village concert the favorite soprano, before she commenced to sing, apologized for her cold. Then she began:

Assuming that Greece and Rumania will enter the war on the side of the allies if Bulgaria joins the Austro-Germans, the allied forces, on paper, would by reinforced by nearly one million troops and the Austro-Germans by 720,000. Greece's forces are widely scattered and Greece probably would be slow in mobilizing.

Eloquent Sermon by Former Rector at St. Luke's Harvest Festival

Rev. F. J. Sawers, M. A., of Cobourg Delivered Discourse at Annual Thanksgiving Service at St. Luke's Last Evening

Amid an environment of beautiful flowers and symbols of the harvest, fruit, grain and vegetables, the congregation of St. Luke's church, Ashburnham, assembled for their annual Harvest Thanksgiving service last evening. The church never looked prettier than it did on this occasion. The Chancel was resplendent with a wealth of richly hued flowers, while all about the edifice evidences of a bountiful harvest were tastefully arranged. The music was of a bright and inspiring character, the people entering into the singing and responses with a spirit that bespoke truly, thankful hearts for the many blessings that they as citizens of a great Dominion, were privileged to enjoy, at this time when other countries are experiencing oppression and devastation.

The preacher for the festival was the former rector of the parish, Rev. F. J. Sawers, M.A., of Cobourg, whose sermon was an eloquent discourse, significant of the times and setting forth causes for thankfulness to God, even at this critical stage in the nation's history. Other clergy present were Rev. R. B. Grobb, rector of All Saints' church and Rev. Jas. Price of St. George's. On behalf of the congregation, Rev. Mr. White extended a welcome to the visiting clergy and particularly Rev. Mr. Sawers, who was so well remembered and so well loved by the people of St. Luke's.

The Sermon.

Rev. Mr. Sawers referred to the great pleasure he felt in being invited to open with the people of St. Luke's on the occasion of their annual Harvest Thanks giving. He referred to the deep admiration and esteem, he and his wife held for his former parishioners and he trusted that the splendid progress that had always characterized this congregation, may continue with the same zeal and effectiveness.

The former rector chose for his text the words of the twenty-sixth verse of the sixteenth chapter of St. Matthew's Gospel, "What shall it profit a man if he gains the whole world and loses his own soul?"

"Never a time in your life nor in mine, nor in our memory, have we celebrated a harvest festival at such a critical period in the world's history," began the speaker. "It is so that a year ago we engaged in this struggle, but it is doubtful if any of us then realized the momentousness of the conflict or the far-reaching effect of its frightfulness. Many wonderful disclosures have been made in that time. Surprise fills our souls at the horrors perpetrated by a nation to look upon as the home of science, music and art. It has out-turked even the Turk in horrible things. What possible military advantage could be achieved by such barbarity as the killing of little children in recent Zeppelin raids?"

A short while ago the Bishop of London preached a wonderful sermon from the steps of St. Paul's Cathedral, on the text, "What shall a man profit if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" He showed how Belgium out of the chaos of her land had found her soul, how France who was slipping into atheism before the war, was now filling her churches and cathedrals at every service. Nations may seemingly gain everything and lose their souls, and may on the other hand lose all and gain their souls.

"Has England found her soul?" asked the preacher. "Up to the present, one is forced to believe that she has not altogether. In England there is that dreadful curse of intemperance that is so hindering the work of the munition factories. Lloyd George has said that England is fighting three enemies, Germany, Austria and strong drink, and the greatest of all was the latter.

But thank God there was a greater and a nobler side to England. The talk of the decadence of the race, and the passing of chivalry has been proved by the war to be of nought. When the call came, men were as ready as ever to die for their country. The Empire has never been so united as it is at this time.

There are many things to be thankful for. It is true that the harvest in some parts has not been so great, but the great wheat areas of the west have shown a bountiful yield. Compare Canada with poor down-trodden Belgium and we have great cause for gratitude to God. We ought to be thankful for the splendid young Canadians who have answered the call to arms. Never in our history have we been prouder of Canada."

The speaker concluded his sermon with an application of his text to individual life, showing how our personal relations with God counted more than the gain of many riches.

During the offertory the Choir sang the anthem, "Clap your hands all ye people," with a solo, sung in splendid force, by Mr. W. A. Greenslade.

Sergt. McHeard of Peterboo Is Responsible For The Discipline at Luton House

LONDON, Sept. 9.—"Nearly all our cases are nerve cases," remarked a Canadian medical officer, "and especially in the Ypres survivors there is a certain look in the eyes which it is difficult to banish." The doctor went on to say that long after the wounds were healed these men needed massage treatment and rest, combined with social intercourse and pleasant surroundings such as to make them forget not only the field of battle, but the military life. For this reason he preferred a hospital which had nurses on its staff, and which was on a small scale. This idea is being followed to some extent by the establishment of small convalescent homes, which act as auxiliaries to such large institutions as those at Bromley (Kent) and Monkshorton, near Shornciffe.

The convalescent home recently established at Luton House, Selling, near Canterbury, by Mrs. Sandford Fleming, is one of these auxiliaries, and though the work done is on a limited scale as compared with bigger establishments, it is of special value for that very reason, inasmuch as it is essentially a home and not an institution.

Luton House is a country residence in one of the prettiest parts of Kent, stands in its own grounds, and the windows overlook well-trimmed lawns, tennis, croquet and bowling lawns, all of which are used by the patients for recreation. The men live in the house, and beyond being amenable to the sergeant in charge for good behaviour, they are free from military rules of camp life.

Besides Mrs. Fleming and Miss Lewis (secretary) there is a staff consisting of Sister Francis, Sister Wallace, and Nurse Pipes and Nurse Dickey (the two latter V. A. D. nurses). In the first month, just completed, there were 73 patients registered, and already additional accommodation is being provided by the taking over of a cottage next door. This will be known as the Josephine Boucrt Ward, and will be equipped by money from New York contributors. Miss A. E. Redpath of Montreal, now residing in England, has kindly loaned a Talbot landaulette car, and Miss Blackett, of Dover, has also donated a car to the hospital, the vehicles being very necessary to keep in touch with Monkshorton and Canterbury.

The presence of the Canadians is much appreciated in a small village such as Selling. They make a difference to the congregation at the parish church on Sunday mornings, and can be relied upon to lend a hand for any good work. The hop-pickers were just arriving by train from London when the correspondent reached Selling recently. Local ladies had provided a refreshment for the East-end of London visitors, and several Canadian soldiers were busy helping both to hand out refreshments and to preserve discipline. The "Squire" was good enough to show Sergt. McHeard, Sergt. Volkert and the correspondent over the hop fields and the arrangements made for the annual invasion. There were practically no able-bodied men; but there were numerous women with families of small children. Huts after the style of a military camp were provided with hampers of rations. The visitors were invited to sample some pickles and paid, but pleaded just having taken a meal.

Peterborough Man in Charge.

Sergt. McHeard of the 2nd Battalion, Peterborough, Ont., has taken charge of discipline at Luton House. He went through the South African War, and was knocked out at Ypres on the 23rd of April. Besides being "gassed" he was buried in a "Jack Johnson" hole for some hours, being wounded in the thigh with shrapnel. Sergt. W. C. Volkert, R.M.R., 14th Montreal Royals, was also wounded at the same time, and while in the hospital at Cardiff, told an interesting story. He is still suffering from scratches. Sergt. Volkert has sent to the Walker Hardware Company the battered remnants of a fountain pen, a pencil case and a whistle which were in his left breast pocket. Fortunately these articles caused the bullet to deflect aside, probably averting a fatal shot. Lance-Corp. Jack Ash, 14th battalion, Chatham, Ont., was with his regiment in the mid-June action at Givenchy. He was shot in the left knee and has been in the hospital at Southampton. He told of seeing the action of Lieut. Campbell who received a post-mortem V.C. for working a machine gun on a man's back. Pte. Gerald C. Boileau, of Halifax, but of the 13th (Royal Highlanders), found himself back in his ancestral home. His ancestors had settled near Canterbury after the revocation of the edict of Nantes, but his father had emigrated to Canada. Pte. Boileau enlisted at Vancouver, was sent to Quebec, and drafted into the 23rd Montreal and then later into the 13th. He was sent back to England suffering from heart strain. He spoke in grateful terms of the officers' kindness, and especially of the way in which Lieut. Molson had looked after him when sick. Pte. Gordon B. Carlisle, P.P.C.L.I. of Ottawa (grandson of the late Sir John Carling), is also at this hospital. He was knocked out on the 5th of May and has five bullet wounds, though not of a serious nature. Pte. W. A. Train, 5th Battalion, of Merritt, B. C., was hit by an explosive bullet in the hand, and by shrapnel in the head at Ypres in April, and, when convalescent in Devonshire, was shot accidentally while a shooting party. Lance-Corp. G. F. Green, 1st Battalion, had a very bad leg, but the massage treatment at Luton House had made a crooked limb straight.

Other patients encountered were Pte. M. V. Duffin, 14th Montreal; Pte. R. Sneddon, 13th Royal Highlanders, and Norman White, 3rd Field Ambulance, of Newfoundland.

A SIMPLE WAY TO REMOVE DANDRUFF

There is one sure way that has never failed to remove dandruff at once, and that is to dissolve it, then you destroy it entirely. To do this, just get about four ounces of plain, common liquid arvon from any drug store (this is all you will need), apply it at night when retiring, use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

By morning, most if not all, of your dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it, no matter how much dandruff you may have.

You will find all itching and digging of the scalp will stop instantly, and your hair will be fluffy, lustrous, glossy, silky and soft, and look and feel a hundred times better.

It may not be generally known that the hair of the head grows faster in summer than in winter.

The Position Of Bulgaria As Defined By Her King And By Her Government

Country Has Not Cast in Its Lot With Either Side—Either Serbia Concedes Macedonia or Must Fight to Retain it.

LONDON, Sept. 23. - Bulgaria's mobilization struck London with dramatic suddenness, but there is nothing to show whether Britain regards the Balkan development as a preliminary victory for the central powers, or merely another overnight turn of the Greco-Serbian-Bulgarian negotiations.

The consensus of opinion was that, although the Bulgar has not yet cast her lot with one side or the other, but is, as her Minister here expressed it, "still neutral, still waiting, but armed."

The first bulletin announcing Bulgaria's mobilization reached London by way of New York to-day. It was grams from the European effect that mobilization, partial or general, has been ordered at Sofia, that Bulgar cavalry had taken the field, and that Bulgars of fighting age were hurrying home. Subsequently came the news of excitement at Athens and of the conference of the King with the political leaders.

A Sofia despatch to the Chronicle says: "So far there has been no general Bulgarian mobilization, but the troops are leaving their stations throughout the country.

"Public opinion, which was somewhat divided a few days ago, is now stiffening in support of Premier Radoslavoff. There are indications that within a few days comparative unanimity concerning the Government's action will prevail. Referring to the concentration of certain Bulgarian troops, the Premier yesterday informed the Government members in Parliament that the war danger in the Balkans had decreased, but that the Bulgarian Government was obliged to restore to an armed neutrality. Most of the troops stationed in Sofia left the capital last night and this morning.

King Constantine of Greece conferred with his Cabinet to-day, and Athens reports that the King signed an order mobilizing the Greek army. A move on the part of the Bulgarar against Serbia is expected to bring Greece to the side of the latter immediately. Roumania, the remaining Balkan kingdom, had declined to enter into negotiations looking toward an understanding with Bulgaria, according to Berlin despatches, and official circles look to Bulgaria's first warlike move as the signal for Roumania's delayed intervention on the part of the Entente. Indications to-night point to another Balkan War, involving all the states of the peninsula, as inevitable.

News comes from the Bulgarian frontier, says a Bucharest despatch, that to-day by direction of the Bulgarian authorities merchants and shopkeepers in the frontier district have been summoned to town halls to take declarations as to the quantity of food stuffs they had on hand. Requisition by the State continue.

The Daily News lobby correspondent says there are grounds for belief that the Cabinet at its meeting yesterday were engaged with grave considerations arising out of the war. In particular, the mobilization in Bulgaria gives cause for anxiety.

A Bulgarian reserve officer, who is preparing to leave London to join the colors, said to-night: "The general mobilization includes ten divisions of the Bulgarian army, one division having been added since the Balkan War. It now affects 250,000 rifles, as compared with 216,000, the previous numbers.

"The strength of the artillery has been increased by approximately a third, and the stores have lately been replenished. The reservists now called to the colors will be better equipped than during the Balkan War."

The Bulgarian mobilization order, according to a despatch to the Times from Athens, effects four out of the ten divisions of the army, namely, the first, or Sofia division; the sixth, or Vidin division, quartered at Vratza; the seventh, or Rilo division; and the tenth, or Tatar Pazardjik division. The troops are, in addition to the 50,000 men of the Macedonian contingent, previously called to the colors.

Vidin is the most north-westerly garrison in Bulgaria. It has been frequently mentioned of late as one of the chief strategic points along the threatened Austro-Germans line of invasion of the Balkans.

Will Not Fight Turkey.

M. Radoslavoff, the Bulgarian Premier, has announced to his supporters the signing of a convention with Turkey for the future maintenance of armed neutrality on the part of Bulgaria, says the Times correspondent at Sofia in a despatch printed this morning.

SHE GAINED 26 LBS.

Mrs. George Bradshaw, Harlowe, Ont. writes: "I was troubled for many years with weak, watery blood and dropsy, had nervous headaches, dizziness and sinking spells, and was in fact a semi-invalid. Doctors told me my heart and kidneys were diseased and gave me up. By using 10 boxes of Dr Chase's Nerve Food I have been cured of many of my ailments and gained 26 pounds in weight."

Rich and Poor Draw Together In Old Country

U. S. Magazine Writer Gives Impressions of England—Says Lloyd George is The Man of The Hour

INDUSTRY MOBILIZED

NEW YORK, Sept. 22.—Great Britain's mobilization of her industrial forces for war purposes, her financial soundness, and a new spirit of democracy, born of the willingness of rich and poor alike to make sacrifices of both blood and money, are the most impressive phases of the war as seen by Isaac F. Marcosson, a magazine writer, who returned here yesterday after several months' study of British financial conditions.

Mr. Marcosson has talked with many of the British bankers and with Mr. Lloyd-George, Minister of Munitions, on whose shoulders, he says, the whole hope of the war is resting.

"The making of munitions is the biggest thing of the war to-day," Mr. Marcosson said. "Lloyd-George has built up a powerful organization. He has brought to his aid the best engineers in the country. British industry has been mobilized as never before. The only shortage of men is in the cotton districts. The great Midlands are one great beehive of industry. The factories there are running twenty-four hours a day.

Census of Resources.

"One of the most important services of the new Minister of Munitions is the taking of a census of all resources not only of materials and of industrial output, but also a national registration, showing what every man, woman, and child can do. Lloyd George's department has a record of every scrap of iron, and it is all available for war purposes.

"The Government has built thirteen great factories and has bought another. Besides those there are hundreds of controlled factories. The method of dealing with the controlled factories is this: The Government goes to the owner of the factory and says, 'Your output is so many shells a day. The Government will take them all and give you a fair profit.' War has the first call on industry, whether it is making shells or making shoestrings.

"As far as Great Britain is concerned, this is a money-is-no-object war. She is not only the richest of the nations at war, but she has made extraordinary financial preparations. The big thing that impresses me is her financial integrity, her extraordinary soundness. Money is plentiful, wages are higher, and labour is scarce.

"Up to several weeks ago Britain had never learned the use of wallets. Formerly she carried her money around in gold. Now she is using paper money currency and hoarding her gold. The ingenuity of the country is now being taxed to find wallets. The bankers are determined to see the war through at whatever cost and the nation is adjusting itself readily to the enormous war cost.

The Collapse of Exchange.

"The collapse in exchange was a great surprise to Britain. The average man could not understand why sterling exchange had fallen so low in New York, while there was so much money on hand in Britain. There never would have been any exchange complications except for the procrastination of the British Government.

"The sacrifices of the rich, not only in money, but in blood, is making a new feeling of the masses toward the classes. Bankers, capitalists, and employers are sending away their sons to fight in the trenches. From some families whom I visited, four or five sons had gone to the war, in any cases the sole heir of some great banking or industrial leader had gone away. After the war a great problem will be to find new leaders to take the places of those who were the natural successors to leadership, but who have fallen in battle."

Indians Secure A New Treaty

Mr. Joseph Whetung, Sr., one of the principal men of the Reindeer tribe of the Mississauga Indians has received through his solicitor an interesting letter dealing with the latest Indian treaties from the Government. Some of the Indians have looked forward to this, contended for it, a long time and it has cost them money. Mr. Whetung applied for it more than once, but he states that he had never received the right reply. He has heard and seen a great many Indian treaties and their various forms, but he says that this is the only one that will really do good to him and the other men. He is very grateful to his solicitor in having obtained this letter and hopes that those who have been doubting and those who were unable to see through it before will try to see him and get the information he has received.

FRENCH AIRMAN PUTS SIX HOSTILE CRAFT TO FLIGHT

Allied Commanders Are Developing a New Plan of Campaign That Involves Continuous Use of Artillery.

OFFICIAL REPORTS

PARIS, Sept. 24.—With the exception of an attack by an enemy patrol in Champagne the fighting of the past 24 hours has been largely in the hands of the artillery. Cannonading has broken out in Belgium, according to the French official report given out in this city this afternoon. Artillery fighting has taken place also near Arras, between the Aisne and the Argonne region, and in Lorraine.

One French aeroplane carrying Lieut. Daum, as observer, and Sergt. Garnier, as pilot, attacked and defeated a fleet of six German battle aeroplanes, it was revealed in a general order published to-day. Both French aviators are mentioned for conspicuous gallantry. The fight took place over Nancy. The French aviators attacked the German machines one by one, preventing them from bombarding the town. When the French machine landed it was riddled with bullets.

General Joffre, the French Commander-in-Chief, and the allied commanders on the front—Field Marshal Sir John French and King Albert of Belgium—are endeavoring a new plan of campaign that involves the almost continuous use of artillery on a vast scale along the whole line.

Masses of artillery have been employed on both sides since the beginning of operations in preparing for infantry attacks, pounding their adversaries' work for an hour or two, then suddenly suspending fire and assaulting with infantry. The allies are now methodically maintaining their shell fire for days at a time without infantry attacks, dropping projectiles upon the charred front into every fifty-yard square and repeating the process—a deadly automatic, unceasing pounding. The heavy calibre guns send their storms of shells upon encampments of first reserves behind the lines, and upon bridges and provisions trains.

Official reports obtained by the French army officers from their own observers, from prisoners and from photographs made by aviators show that parts of the opposing lines which have been subjected to this unceasing bombardment have been rendered entirely untenable, and that the best the Germans can do is to reoccupy their abondoned work after the bombardments have let up and then leave quickly when the showers of projectiles begin to fall again.

Must Remember.

"This, ladies and gentlemen," said the exhibitor at the wax work show, "is Sir John Falstaff." "Come, now, governor," remarked one of the audience, "how can that thin scarecrow be Falstaff?" "Well," said the exhibitor, "you must remember how long he's been here without food of any kind."

Swagger Winter Coats

Flare effects and more belted lines are now style notes in our last shipment of Coats. The average coat length is from three-quarter to seven-eighths, although some coats cover the entire dress. The Russian influence is also noted in some of our new coats, many of which fasten at the front, and a few slightly suggest a blouse. Considerable attention has been given to collars, as they add much to the appearance. Practically all are made to fasten up high at the neck, but are so arranged that they can be made into flat collars if so desired.

ASK GOVERNMENT TO SUPPRESS LIQUOR SALE

TORONTO, Sept. 24.—Led by President Theron Gibson of the Ontario branch of the Dominion Alliance, and Rev. Ben. Spence, secretary, a large deputation representing practically every social reform society and association interested in temperance reform, waited upon Premier Hearst and Hon. J. B. Lucas, Attorney-General, to-day, and presented a memorial asking that the Government take measures to suppress the retail sale of liquor during the war.

Premier Hearst, in reply, said the matter of liquor traffic regulation had been a matter of absorbing attention to him and the Government during the last six months.

"We will earnestly strive to reach the wisest and best conclusion," said Mr. Hearst. "The License Commission, in addition to the exercise of its executive functions, is now entering into the whole question."

The tone of the reply seemed to be sympathetic and Rev. Ben Spence expressed the opinion that the interview with the Premier was a very gratifying one.

Bishop O'Brien's 2nd Anniversary

His Lordship Bishop O'Brien to-day celebrated the second anniversary of his consecration with Pontifical High mass at the Cathedral this morning at 7 o'clock. Rev. Dean McColl was assistant priest, Rev. Father Phelan deacon, Rev. Father McGinnity subdeacon, and Rev. Father McAuley, master of ceremonies. A large congregation assisted at the mass and many received Holy Communion.

At the conclusion of the mass Bishop O'Brien addressed the people, expressing his appreciation of their attendance and of their prayers for him. Monsignor Casey of Lindsay, was present.

At four o'clock this afternoon the children from the parochial schools assembled at the Cathedral for Benediction, which was given by His Lordship. The "O Salutaris," "Tantum Ergo" and "Laudate" were sung by the children's chorus.

GERMANY TALKS TO CHICAGO

CHICAGO, Sept. 20.—A man in the trenches in Belgium, according to day a conversation between one man in Eilvese, Germany, and another at Tuckerton, N.J.

Some of the words were faint but it was easy to understand that the German was discussing the affairs in the Balkans. The distance—4,500 miles—prevented the Lake Bluff man from catching all the conversation. The "eavesdropper" was the operator in the new Great Lakes Naval Training School radio station. It was the first test of the third largest radio plant in America and one of the most powerful ever built. The station has a sending capacity of thirty kilowatts, but could stand more, according to Lieut. McCauley. Its chief features are two 400-foot steel towers.

Attending the Fair.

His Worship Mayor Buller has gone to Lindsay, where in all probability he will strain his conscience by telling the natives what a fine town they have.

A Burning Question.

The cost of fuel for the incinerator is a problem that has confronted the Property committee for some time. They discussed the question for upwards of an hour last evening.

WITH OTHER MUNICIPALITIES.

A canvass of Innisfil township was quietly conducted by representative farmers last week, and a total of about $6,000 realized for the Patriotic Fund. A similar canvass is being made this week in the adjoining township of Essa.

Berlin's Population.

Assessment Commissioner Hushnergard announced that Berlin's population for 1915 is 19,271, an increase of 210 over last year. Returns for the North and Centre Wards showed decreases, while the East, West and South had substantial increases.

Lighting of Thistleton.

Etobicoke township has agreed to all the conditions laid down by the Weston Hydro-Electric Commission for the lighting of Thistleton, and the work is to go on at once.

Reeve Appel of Tavistock.

W. M. Appel was elected Reeve of Tavistock, defeating John Zimmerman by a majority of 20.

Chief Asked to Resign?

It is reported that Fire Chief R. A. Dinsley of Wingham, has been asked for his resignation. It is claimed the Chief sold some fire hose belonging to the town, and has not yet made an accounting.

Amateur Work.—"This poem was written by a prominent lawyer of this city. Has it any value?" "About as much value," said the editor, "as a legal opinion written by a poet."

HAS RETURNED FROM THE WEST

Peterboro Dentist Reports an Excellent Crop—Much Activity in Recruiting.

Dr. R. F. Morrow, the well-known George street dentist has returned from the west and will resume practice at his office at the corner of George and Simcoe streets. Dr. Morrow was as far west as the Saskatchewan boundary. When he left for home the crop was about harvested and threshing was in full swing. This years crop is one of the best on record and will do much to improve conditions in the west. Everybody is optimistic of the future. Dr. Morrow reports much activity in recruiting, and anticipates a rush to the colours when the crop is harvested.

Operating The Civic Incinerator

Matter is Discussed by The Property Committee of The Council

Dead animals such as cows and horses, will in future be removed to the civic dumping ground. This was decided upon at a meeting of the Property Committee that was held last evening with Alderman McIntyre presiding. In the past it has been customary to dispose of such refuse at the incinerator. Alderman McIntyre presented a statement from the City Treasurer showing that the cost of providing wood and extra help at the incinerator, up to August 31st in 1914 and 1915.

Wood	$ 85.00	$139.80
Extra help	981.75	91.76
	$966.75	$230.06

Will Submit a Report.

It was moved by Alderman Green, and seconded by Alderman Edgar, that Alderman McIntyre and Sanitary Inspector Spence prepare a report respecting the value of any refuse collected by the garbage collectors and submit it to the Committee and that the present mode of collection and disposal continue until the present contract expires.

The matter of engaging a man to look after the incinerator be left with Alderman McIntyre.

Italians Seize A Mountain Position

LONDON, Sept. 24.—The loss of a mountain position on the Italian front was admitted last night in the official statement sent out from Vienna by the Austrian War Office. The garrison on Monte Coston, the communication says, early this morning evacuated the position as the result of an attack by "forces ten times their number." The mountain for some months had presented an awkward wedge in the Italian front, which now has been straightened.

Winter snows are already falling in the Alps, rendering still more perilous the work of the Italian and Austrian troops who are engaged in warfare in the mountainous region near the border. A correspondent of the Gazette de Lausanne describes the recent battle for possession of the Austrian stronghold on top of Freikofel mountain, 9,000 feet high. The attack was made under most difficult conditions. The Austrians had prepared for an assault from the east. Two battalions of Italian Alpine troops made their way around the mountain and attacked the Austrians from the rear. To reach the summit they were compelled to scale the precipitous side of the mountain, clinging to ropes placed in position by mountaineers. The correspondent states that the Italians captured 250 Austrians and a large quantity of munitions.

PRIVATE CLUB HAS BEEN CONTRIBUTING

To The Queen's Stationery Hospital Mentioned as One of Best Equipped

KINGSTON, Ont., Sept. 23.—Dean, J. C. Connel has issued a statement regarding the work of Queen's Stationary Hospital at Cairo, Egypt. The opinion was expressed by the authorities in Egypt that Queen's Hospital was the best equipped that had arrived. It is the only hospital there with a laboratory and expert pathologist. The wards have been named after prominent Kingston and Queens donors. There are 600 beds in the hospital, which is situated in the Abbassia cavalry barracks, built by Kitchener.

This announcement should be most gratifying to the members of the Anglo-American Club which has been quietly forwarding supplies of various kinds to this hospital. The local club is a private one, it is learned, and performed its patriotic work without the slightest publicity.

Your pals at the front are looking across the seas and wondering how long you will be in waking up to the seriousness of the situation. They will be glad to hear you have joined the 93th Battalion.

REPAIRS MADE A MILE IN THE AIR

By an Aeroplane Observer.

I was dreaming I had just pulled up into my favorite backwater round the first bend after the "Char" leaves the Isis. It was Oxford in the best of the summer term. Suddenly I heard the half-scared voice of an orderly, who had been trying to wake me up for ten minutes.

"Orders for special reconnaissance, sir. Will you please receipt the envelope?"

It was about half-past three and pitch dark. The orderly rushed off with the receipted envelope before I had time to ask him to hand me the candle which I had left on the other side of the tent. With a supreme effort I crawled across the tent. Halfway over I stumbled on the pilot who was on duty with me.

That did it. The Cornstalk had been discussing an excellent sheep deal in Kalgoorlie. They were just at the point of clinching the deal with a whisky and soda when I stepped on him.

I found a light and read the orders. "Special job, Cornstalk,' I said "The reconnaissance will start at daybreak."

"Daybreak, eh I like that! Catch me starting at daybreak! Don't read any more of that stuff to me, I'm going to sleep, and if you wake me again I'll have you off the aerodrome."

Truth is, the old Cornstalk had a perpetual "grouch." He was "fed up" with the weather. But he was one of the best flying officers.

I went over to the shed and busied myself with the preparation of my working kit. There was the usual mass of things which go to make an observer in action look like a lopsided Christmas tree. Leather clothes, flying boots, flying hat, helmet, goggles, binoculars, machine gun, ammunition, bombs etc. all had to be inspected and placed ready for use. By the time I had finished pottering around these things there was the first glimmer of dawn putting in an appearance. Objects about the aerodrome were beginning to take form in a biggest black sort of way.

The mechanics ran out the reconnaissance machine as soon as the footing was distinct. I got in and placed my equipment. Then I heard the Cornstalk's voice:

"Why on earth haven't you called me? Here it's nearly noon, and we are not anywhere near starting."

I said nothing. The Cornstalk grunted something about people's incompetent, put on his "leather," and clambered into his seat.

A mechanic swung the propeller. There was a buzz and a click. The spark had caught "first go." The engine spluttered, whined just a trifle, and then fairly roared as all the cylinders "took on." She was running perfectly, and soon warmed up. The old Cornstalk forgot his "grouch." I glanced back in time to see him chuckle as he glued his eyes to the "revolution-counter," and watched it mount to maximum ground speed. An engine in good temper is the only real joy of the pilot's life.

"Cheer-oh, old top," he shouted. "Where are we going? I don't suppose you have the foggiest notion!"

"No, I replied laconically.

The machine was straining at the chocks. A great cloud of dust and waste was scooped back in the vortex of her "air-wash." The Cornstalk put up his hand. The chocks were pulled away. The men sprang back, and the N.C.O. in charge of the look of pride at the machine, saluted and shouted, "All clear, sir." The propeller raced faster with the opened throttle. The machine moved forward. We got off easily, and soon were clear of the aerodrome, soaring "frontwards."

Crossing the line on the way out, "Archie" (the anti-aircraft gun), was still rubbing his eyes. He was so bad that he could scarcely hear his best salvoes. I took a good look round for Huns. As I surveyed our rear the Cornstalk looked up and winked. This was very significant. With the Cornstalk there was no unnecessary exchanges of messages. When he winked it meant that the engine was running perfectly. When we reached the end of our "job" and were starting back I got another reassuring wink.

We were well over the lines on our way home when I heard the Cornstalk manoeuvring the side-controls. The machine was travelling "left wing heavy," and obviously was not responding to some controls. I glanced back, and got his signal to reach over and hold the main control lever firm. He smiled in a half shamefaced way. This was a sure sign there was something wrong. He never looked in this peculiar way unless he was in a predicament.

He drew himself out of the seat and swung around to the right side of the fusilage (body.) Even the adjustment caused by the change in position of his weight did not correct the leftside tilt of the machine. This was steadily increasing. The control wires were jammed under the body of the machine, and we were in considerable peril. The Cornstalk acted quickly. He let himself down, holding on with his right hand, and fumbled with the wires under the fusilage. Those few seconds seemed an age. The strain on his right arm must have been terrible. It alone held him up while the machine swung over bumps and "levered" to the side. If this grip relaxed he would fall over a mile. In an instant, actually, he had done the job and climbed back into his seat. The smile had gone. He simply winked in the old way. Except for beads of perspiration he was the same imperturbable Cornstalk. The controls were free, and he swung the machine on to her wing-tips just to show he was master. Then he reached over for my writing block and scribbled on it:

We landed just in front of our shed. As I freed myself from enough of my mass of equipment to get out of the machine I slipped slightly and put my heel through the outer fabric of the lower plane. The squadron commander strolled up and asked the Cornstalk what kind fo a trip he had had.

"Dullest trip of my life, sir. Absolutely nothing doing, except this fool observer has gone and fallen through the plane I had put on only yesterday.

I went off to write my report. I saw the Cornstalk at breakfast an hour later. He was describing how he had "got" the gang that had tried to loot his sheep farm in 1906.

"Well, youngster, I hope you told the Staff what you thought of them, sending us off on that job at such an hour—and in this infernal climate, too. Anyhow, we did their old job of work!"

No further references was made to that reconnaissance.

The Auld Brig.

The Auld Brig o' Doon is a picturesque arch. It is high in the middle, and spans the river which Burns loved so much. The Doon is a beautiful stream, wooded on each side—its banks and braes a continual delight. The new bridge is a lovely arch. Between the two are the Tea Gardens. These gardens are the most beautiful to be seen anywhere, with a wealth of flowers and flowering shrub. They are laid out with the greatest taste, and the musical afternoons and evenings give great delight to many thousands. Without Burns, Alloway would be ever lovely and popular; but with Burns, it has become a show-place of the world. —H.J.S.

Anglo-Scots at Home.

The number of Anglo-Scots entering the service of Scottish non-league clubs is steadily growing, but any fear of complications of an international kind arising are by now remote. Scottish clubs are on their guard against doing anything contrary to the wishes of the English authorities, and, if any mistakes are made, it will not be owing to a disregard of the new rules formulated by the F. A.

A Famous Player.

Alec Raisbeck, the famous Larkall, Hibernian, Stoke, Liverpool and Partick Thistle players has received permission to assist Hamilton Acas. (the club he now manages) as occasion may arise. Apropos of the fact my old colleague, "Jonathan Oldbuck," writes:

"It seems to mark a period in the dim and distant past when I watched a tall, well built, flaxen-haired athlete presenting a gritty defence in the Hibernian team. I think most of us foresaw a great future for Alec. Raisbeck. But few of us imagined how far and how high he would go.

"His career is familiar to most of those who have followed the game during the last fifteen years, but to me nothing in it stands out in such glowing light as his masterful display for Scotland against England, at Hampden Park in 1906. We talk of the contest still as 'Raisbeck's' match. Surely never did any single player so dominate a game. I have chatted with him about his experiences, and strange to say, he was not disposed to rank the 1906 match as his best. He thought he had a harder commission against England at Sheffield in 1903."

I may say that I had the pleasure of seeing Raisbeck and Neilly Gibson at school together, and on the playground prophesied a great future for them.

A Hero's Return.

Carluke, Scotland was en fete for the homecoming of Corporal William Angus, 8th Lanarkshire Battalion, H.L.I., who was decorated with the Victoria Cross.

Corporal Angus, who was a prominent Lanarkshire football player, was in evident poor health, but he was cheered by the enthusiastic welcome which awaited him. It was a memorable day in the pretty Lanarkshire ton and his old club, Carluke Milton Rovers, who had no heart for football, scratched in the Lanarkshire Cup competition. The players were more delighted in taking part in the celebrations of their old colleague, who will go into a convalescent home.

Corporal Angus is to be presented with war loan stock to the value of £1,000. The money has been raised by subscription. Some of the Scotland football clubs have subscribed to this gift to Corporal Angus, who enjoys the distinction of being the first Scottish Territorial to win the Cross.

Connie Mack To Spring New Team

Predicts That Within Two Years It Will Be Stronger Than The One Broken Up.

While other people have been bemoaning the disruption of such a once powerful baseball machine as the Athletics, Connie Mack has been quietly gathering the material which will bring future championships to Shibe Park. He is confident that his drastic policy with relation to the old team was justified. It was the only one which could be applied to conditions as they existed. No excuses are offered for the present team, but at last Connie is making predictions and the most striking one is that in two years he will have a greater team than the one that was broken up. Within two weeks he says the baseball public will have an opportunity of seeing this new material on the diamond. Aside from the pitchers there will be few of the present members of the team as the basis of the rehabilitated Athletics. In discussing the baseball situation, he says:

"I am not crying for mercy or making any plea for patronage for the Athletics Club, nor do I believe that I have made a mistake in tearing apart the greatest baseball machine of the day. I maintain that I did right and will again say that I will have a greater team in two years than the one I broke up.

"We are losing ball games every day and probably will finish the poorest of any team in either major league in years, but I have made considerable progress along the lines of reconstruction. If the fans will look back to the 1908 season they will realize that my progress was slow then until the combination was complete, and then the team came like lightning. My progress must be slow because the only part that I have now that I am banking on for my new machine are pitchers, and they don't know anything yet and cannot be expected to show until next season.

"I will have almost an entirely new team in the field in two weeks' time, and then the fans will be able to get a line on my future championship team. To date I have not a single youngster, barring one, who will be a part of the new machine. My best prospects will be here in a short time and I think the fans will be satisfied.

"The poor attendance has not worried us in the least, because the less attention we attract right now, the better it will be for the team. I am convinced that the fans will suddenly awaken to the fact along about the middle of next season, and then they will be satisfied that I have done the right thing.

"I have not seen that I have made a serious mistake. In fact, I am more convinced than ever that I did exactly right. I made the remark last winter that I did not think the Athletics as they finished the 1914 season could repeat in the American League, and after what I have seen of the other teams I am sure that I was not wrong. My 1914 team with its 1913 spirit could have won pennants for several years, but with the spirit that prevailed in 1914, it could not have finished better than fourth this year.

"Others may disagree, but I contend that I know that team better than anyone else. We have always given the fans good baseball and pennant-contending teams, and will do so in the future. I do not begrudge the Phillies the money they are making or the success they have had. The club deserves the success, and I am pulling hard for them to win the pennant. I have not seen anything of the National League teams, and therefore my opinion is valueless, but I should say, judging by the existing conditions, that the Phillies will win out with a little to spare.

"At the Sporting Writers' banquet in Philadelphia last winter, Moran and I wished each other success during the present season. Ond I am glad to say that I feel happy because a man like Moran, who is a credit to the game, has been so successful, and I will be pulling for him till the finish.

"Why should we envy the Phillies? We have had years of success and it is their turn now. I have never been a quitter, and I won't quit now. I could have broken up my team in a manner that would have caused but little excitement, but that is not my way of doing business. Had the team been broken up in another manner, the fans would have had to be content with a losing team for a longer period than they will under existing conditions.

"I repeat that we will have another wonderful club before the close of next season. Everything depends on how soon my pitchers develop. They will surely be right by the middle of next season. They are slow finding themselves, but they will come around. The rest of my combination has been completed and will be shared up between now and the spring training season.

"Just at present I prefer to keep the names of the new men to myself, but they will all be here within two weeks. Just remember we don't care if there are not a hundred people present. The way the team is playing we are getting all the patronage that could be expected, but the public likes a winner, and I will give them that."

There are enough men in the pool rooms of Peterborough every night to complete two companies. When are they going to see the need for men and more men? There is a place for them all in the 60th.

HARVEY SPROULE AT HEAD OF N. H. A. TEAM

TORONTO, Sept. 23.—The battle is on in local professional hockey circles, and with Harry Sproule at the head of the Torontos and "Eddie" Livingstone looking after the Shamrocks the hockey enthusiasts should have one great old time this winter.

According to information from Montreal, Harry Sproule, who was coach of the Victoria Club last winter when they got into trouble with the O.H.A., has purchased the Toronto franchise from Frank Robinson, the Montreal magnate who has enlisted, and as both he and Mr. Livingstone are well known in the hockey game and have a good knowledge of all the stars in the amateur ranks, it is likely that several new faces will be seen on both teams. Sproule is already credited with singing up two of the best amateurs in the city in Gordon Meeking and Frank Heffernan, the star performers of the Victoria O.H.A. champions.

Before he disposed of the franchise Mr. Robinson sold Cameron and Foyston, of the Torontos to the Shamrocks, and it will be up to Sproule to fill their places.

Both the professional managers are hustlers, and the arguments they will have this winter will keep the hockey pot boiling. Ever since the two teams have been in the city it has been felt that they would be better off if they were both owned by local magnates, and this has at last been accomplished.

Both teams are anxious to get an early start, and have interviewed Mr. Solman, manager of the Arena, with the idea of getting him to open the ice palace the first week in December.

Merry Run In London.

The All-Scotch revue that looks like having a very run in London retains practically all the features that were approved by the patrons of vaudeville. To judge from the notices, however, there are changes in the cast, and Mr. Allan Macdonald is getting his chance to show his paces. He is an ex-Glasgow amateur, and son of the late Mr. Allan Macbeth. He toured for many years with Kenyon, and latterly went round with a play from his own pen—"The Elder o' the Kirk." His behaviour as the elder was beyond reproach, and he could be trusted to stand at the plate anywhere.

Female Magistrate.

The female magistrates just appointed in South Australia are being described as the first in the British Empire. Woman justices, however, were not unknown in England centuries ago. The Countess of Richmond, mother of Henry VII., was a magistrate, and tried many important cases, whilst in Queen Mary's reign a Lady Berkeley sat on the bench in Gloustershire. Perhaps the most remarkable case of the kind was that of Lady Berkeley, who was given a special commission by Henry VIII. to act as judge in her own cause in the trials of certain poachers on her estate.

NEW YORK.—Announcement was made by the Standard Steel Car Company, that an order for 2,500 cars had been closed by agents of the French Government.

Hold U. S. Securities.

NEW YORK.—M. du Pont, head of the du Pont & Furland Bank of Paris, says that as a result of the campaign to get French investors to give up their American securities, only about $100,000,000 out of the $1,000,000,000 came out of the strong boxes. One of the more notable transactions was the sale of 100,000 shares of Utah Copper. He estimated it would be some years after the war before exchange will be normal again.

Bradstreet's Estimate.

Bradstreet's reports visible supply of wheat in the United States east of the Rockies increased 2,021,000 bushels; West of the Rockies increased 164,000 bushels; Canadian wheat increased 3,685,000 bushels; all American increased 6,050,000 bushels; Europe and afloat decreased 1,100,000 bushels; world's wheat increased 4,950,000 bushels. Corn (American) increased 48,000 bushels. Oats (American) increased 3,546,000 bushels.

German Bond Offering.

New York.—Zimmerman & Forshay are offering the Imperial German Government 5 per cent. bonds (third war loan) not callable before 1924, at $210 for each 1,000-mark bond, which is equal to 84. The firm agrees to cash interest coupons at its office, free of expense, ten days prior to maturity.

The bonds are exempt from all taxes in Germany, and interest, which is payable January and July, will accrue from October 18 next. The firm says:

"Owing to the present low rate of German exchange the bonds yield a very high interest return, which, together with the quality of the bonds themselves, should be a recommendation to the careful investor."

Trade Balance $35,493,734.

Washington.—The trade balance and the exports of the week ended September 18 were the largest for the fiscal year and have only been exceeded twice before since the European war began, according to the figures made public at the Department of Commerce.

The figures were as follows: Imports, $20,826,140; exports, $45,249,883; trade balance, $35,493,734.

A total of 91,080 bales of cotton were exported during the week, making, since August 1, 1915, 307,498 bales.

Prevented Beef Shortage.

London. — "The Board of Trade does not allow the American Meat Trust to get all they ask for, nor ship owners to get all they want," Walter Runciman, the President of the British Board of Trade, stated in the House of Commons in the course of a debate on financial matters in which the high prices of food were commented upon. Steps had been taken by the British Government, Mr. Runciman said, to secure meat in Argentina, and Australia had assured a good supply. If these measures had not been taken, he said, there would have been a shortage really dangerous for the country.

New York Press Comment.

Journal of Commerce.—U. S. Steel common, once again became the leader of the stock market. There was active buying by large interests.

American. — General expectation among traders was that the upward movement would continue to-day.

Sun.—The unqualified endorsement of the allied loan by the investment bankers' association will go far in offsetting hyphenated propaganda, which appears to be weakening.

Financial America. — There is a good demand for many of the specialties in the stock market at the present time.

Erie is Doing Well.

The optimists are speaking well of Erie. The gossip of coming dividends on the first preferred stock has helped the upward movement, but the real bullish agent has been the Erie's earning power. Erie common is selling around 30, the first preferred at 50 1-2 and the second preferred at 40. The upward movement has been steady. Pools have apparently not figured in the improvement at all. The practice of turning earnings back into the property is having its effect. While official figures for August are not yet available, it has been estimated that the net increase was about $1,800,000.

Bush Efficiency Methods.

President Bush of the Missouri Pacific system has cut the transportation expenses on the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad about $2,000,000 a year since he became its head in 1912. In 1912, with a gross income of $33,200,000, the transportation expenses were about $9,000,000 and in 1915, with gross earnings of $31,333,000, they were about $6,000,000. The ratio of transportation expenses decreased in that period from 25.16 to 20.00. It is pointed out that with limited facilities Mr. Bush succeeded in producing results surpassed by only three Western roads. An old friend of this railroad President remarked in this connection yesterday: Mr. Bush is the kind of railroad President who sticks close to the racks. He realizes that the Denver lies in the West and not in New York City.

Cotton Oil's Good Year.

A statement prepared by the American Cotton Oil Company in connection with the sale of $5,000,000 two-year 5 per cent. notes to the First National Bank shows the war did not prevent last year from being a good one. Net earnings in the fiscal period ended Aug. 31 were about $2,500,000, which covered interest charges five times over and left a balance of $1,200,000 for the common stock after providing for the 6 per cent. preferred stock dividend. The statement did not say whether any of this had been reserved for special purposes, but if not the balance for the junior shares was close to 7 per cent. for the year. The year's results make a favorable appearance in comparison with the annual earnings in the preceding six years. They amounted to $1,844,000. The balance sheet, the statement said, showed on July 31 current assets of $14,701,826 and current liabilities amounting to $2,127,000. These figures took no account of capital invested in buildings, real estate and equipment, which amounts to about $16,000,000.

HOW A CHILD CAN SAVE A MAN FROM DROWNING

(By Catharine Brown, in New York American.)

Maybe you wouldn't expect such a little girl as I am to be a lifesaver, or to give the rules for saving drowning persons. Papa knows all about it, of course, because he's champion long-distance swimmer. Well, he taught me, and so I'm going to tell you anyway. I've practised so much that I'm sure I shouldn't be afraid to go after a full-grown man who was scared in the water and yelling for help.

The first thing I learned about it was never to swim up in front of a drowning man, where he could grab me and drag me under. You see, drowning persons don't have any sense. They're so scared they'll do most anything foolish. The right way is to swim up to 'em from behind.

Don't be in a hurry. When you get enough sing out to him to take it easy and it will be all right. If he's pretty sensible and not too scared you can swim alongside and tell him to grab hold of the collar of your bathing suit. That will hold his head up while you tow him in.

If he's too scared to have any sense you've got to be careful and look out for yourself. Sometimes a person who's in that fix will whirl around in the water and face you when you're trying to come up behind him. What you do in that case is to swim by just out of his reach and grab him by the wrist that's nearest to you. Then you can pull his arm around as you circle up to his side to throw your other arm over his shoulder and get your hand under his chin.

When you've got a good grip on him this way, you can keep his head out of water while swimming with both feet and your other arm. If he's not too far gone, he'll begin to see that you're going to save him, and won't make any more trouble.

But it's better, if he'll let you do it, to come up from behind and grab him by the chin in the first place. All the time it's very important to tell him he's all right, and not to be afraid. A person that doesn't get scared in the water and who has sense enough not to waste his breath yellin gfor help, isn't likely to drown in a hurry anyway. If your lungs are kept pretty full of air you can't sink. Everybody who knows how to float knows that.

When you don't know how to float, your head is apt to go under and you begin to gulp water. But just a little "dogpaddling" with the hands under your chin will keep your head out of water, if you keep your lungs well filled with air. You'll be surprised how easy it is. Try it some time.

There's another good way of taking hold of a drowning person. Instead of grabbing him by the chin when you reach over his shoulder, put that hand under his armpit. Then you turn him over on his back toward you, turning on your own back at the same time and putting your other hand under his other arm-pit.

The back of his head then rests on your chest, and he can't do anything to you, no matter how crazy he is. Of course, in this position you have only your legs to swim with. But, with good strong kicks and the "shears motion," you can push along at good speed and bring your man out safely.

You hear a lot of silly stuff about the drowning man's "death grip." Papa says there's no such thing — and he knows. Before a drowning man realizes it he's apt to become unconscious. Even if he has grabbed you his grip relaxes then. And it's easy to tow back an unconscious person.

Go on saving him just the same. He may look drowned for keeps, but when you get him on the beach the old-fashioned treatment, or the use of the pulmotor — which papa has told me all about — will force the water out of his lungs and start him breathing again.

I saw a "drowned" man once. He was brought in by a life guard. Half an hour afterward he was as lively as anybody on the beach.

I mustn't forget to tell you that a fifty-pound girl swimmer like me hadn't better try to rescue a two hundred-pound man by taking him by the arm-pits. That position forces you deeper down in the water than the chin hold, and before you got him to land you might swallow some water yourself.

That's about all I can think of just now about saving drowning persons. But I could say a lot about the foolishness of going and getting drowned at all. Cats hate the water, and never get into it if they can help it. But if a cat falls into the water for the first time in its life, what does it do? Why, it goes ahead and uses its legs the same as if it was on land—and swims like a fish, without any lessons.

Pape says that if we ran around on four feet instead of just two, we'd swim as naturally as all animals do. But we can use our hands in the water in-stinct-ively, as dogs use their fore paws, and keep our heads up that way. Do it—and the first thing you know you're kicking out with your feet at the same time and swimming well enough to keep from drowning in a few minutes, when you fall overboard.

Of course, with us humans real good swimming is more art-i-ficial than with animals; all the same it's a lot easier than doing sums and fancy em-broid-ery.

Is That You?

She was giving orders at an express rate, for they were married, and he, as a rule one of the most meek and submissive of men, was, like the proverbial worm, beginning to turn. "Do you think," he sneered, "that you rule the whole of the universe?" "No," she snapped, "but I rule the first letter of it."

Pat's Lap Dog.

"Hallo, Pat, I hear your dog is dead?" "It is." "Was it a lap dog?" "Yes, it would lap anything." "What did it die of?" "It died of Tuesday." "I mean how did it die?" "It died on its back." "I mean how did the dog meet its death?" "It didn't meet its death. Its death overtook it." "I want to know what was the complaint." "No complaint; everyone for miles round appeared to be satisfied." "I wish to know how did it occur?" "The dog was no cur; he was a thoroughbred animal." "Tell me what disease did the dog die of." "He went to fight a circular saw." "What was the result?" "The dog only lasted one round."

Try Bridge of Allan.

"The war will mean the death blow to many overrated German and Austrian spas," said a tourist agent. "For many years past these resorts have enjoyed a great wave of prosperity, and visitors from all parts of the world have flocked to them in search of health, but they could obtain just the same benefit at a British spa at much less cost." For a Scottish instance Bridge of Allan corresponds to Bains-les-Bains for the cure of neuralgia.

The Russians Inflict Heavy Losses On The Enemy

Four British Steamers Are Sunk In Twenty-Four Hours

ANTI-TREATING LAW IS ENFORCED

It is Expensive Nowadays to Buy a Friend a Drink or to Allow Treating

LONDON, Sept. 25.—"Treating" to liquor is a serious offence in certain sections of the Kingdom nowadays, and it is worth a good deal of money for one man to say to another "What's it to be, old chap?"

Especially in this case in the districts where the greater part of the munition factories or naval shipyards are located. There the administration of the liquor law is very strict, the hours of sale being cut down to a minimum and treating and credit being absolutely forbidden.

An illustration of this took place at Sunderland this week when a man was charged with treating. He took three men into a public house, bought them beer, took a whisky himself and left the price of a drink for a fourth man who was to call in later.

The accused did not deny the transaction. All he could say was that as he could not read he did not know the new law.

The court imposed a fine of twenty shillings each against the treater and the treatees.

Subsequently the publican was fined ten pounds in each case of fifty pounds in all for having allowed treating on his premises.

Germans Making Furious Attacks But Are Meeting Defeat From All Sides

Recapture of City of Pinsk And The Fortress of Dubno By Czar's Troops is Expected---Field Marshall Von Mackensen is Being Hard Pressed.

PETROGRAD, Sept. 25.—The recapture of the City of Pinsk and the fortress of Dubno by the Czar's troops was predicted by the War Office officials to-day.

Field Marshal Von Mackensen is being hard pressed in the Pinsk region. His left wing has been thrown back five miles by the Slava, who recaptured Logishin. His right flank is floundering in marshes south of Pinsk, and Russian troops have crossed the Jassl River a few miles east of the city. The Germans have suffered heavy losses and abandoned large numbers of guns in the retreat.

Austrians are counter-attacking determinedly, but have been unable to stem the Russian advance in the Volhynian fortress triangle. The recapture of the fortress of Lutsk and the taking of four thousand prisoners is officially confirmed. The enemy is retiring upon Dubno, whose works are not suitable for defenses against an attack from the north. It is believed here that the fortress will be reoccupied within a few days.

The battle all around Dvinsk and along the Dwina continues with unabated fury. An official statement from the War Office at midnight comments one, "Gusts of fire" from enemy's artillery, and reported that the Germans are making furious attacks.

FOUR STEAMERS SUNK.

LONDON, Sept. 25.—Four British steamers have been sunk by German submarines in twenty-four hours, and two submarines captured by the British.

PARIS, Sept. 25.—British airmen have bombarded and destroyed several German troops' railway junctions.

TORONTO, Sept. 25.—All Greeks in Canada are ordered to report to the colours immediately.

ATHENS, Sept. 25.—The Government stated that the mobilisation order was merely "armed neutrality," and Greece was not affiliated with any belligerent powers.

LIVERPOOL, Sept. 25.—British ship Urbino has been sunk. The crew was saved.

Russians Recapture The Town of Lutsk and Have Taken 4,000 Prisoners

Germany Has Lost Forty Zeppelins And Ten Airships With Nearly Six Hundred Aviation Men Since The War Began---Brief Despatches.

LONDON, Sept. 25.—Russians have recaptured the town of Lutsk and have taken four thousand prisoners.

GENEVA, Sept. 25.—From a German source it is known here that Germany has lost forty Zeppelins and ten Parseval airships, with nearly six hundred aviation men since the war began.

ATHENS, Sept. 25.—Greece and Bulgaria continue to declare the mobilization merely a precaution.

GODERICH, Ont., Sept. 25. — The steamer Western Star struck a rock and sunk near Manitoulin. All the crew was saved.

MONTREAL, Sept. 25.—Nearly one thousand Canadian horses were lost in the submarining of the steamer Anglo-Columbian yesterday.

LONDON, Sept. 25.—After demolishing German trenches near Labassee, British infantry stormed and captured the enemy's territory on a hundred yards of front.

PETROGRAD, Sept. 25.—Russian successes in Galicia continue, reported last night that several more Austrian guns and men taken.

LONDON, Eng., Sept. 25.—Newspapers are still guessing as to Bulgaria's motives. Members of the Cabinet will say nothing. In many quarters it is still believed Bulgaria is acting with the Allies.

LONDON, Sept. 25.—King George yesterday approved of the order-in-council forbidding the treating of the King's soldiers to intoxicating liquor.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 25.—The Premier of Bulgaria notified the United States Government that Bulgaria's action should not be construed as indicating war on any of her neighbours.

Great War Demonstrations In Greece

ATHENS, Sept. 25.—Great crowds paraded the streets early to-day in war demonstrations, before the French, English and Italian legations.

Bulgarians and Turks were not molested.

The newspapers are commenting cautiously upon Bulgaria's move and expressing the hope that Bulgarian mobilization order does not mean that Czar Ferdinand intends to start a third Balgan war. They inform the people that the Ministry has no present intention of plunging Greece into bloody conflict, but deserves the support of every good citizen in resisting any attempt by the Bulgarian ruler to upset the peace of the Balkans.

Mobilization will be well under way when parliament meets next Wednesday.

Eight Hundred Thousand Germans Menace Serbia In an Attempt To Force a Passage

LONDON, Sept. 24.—"The riddle of the Balkans," as the London Press terms the latest developments in the Near Eastern peninsula arising out of Bulgaria's order for mobilization remains unsolved. The greatest uncertainty exists even in official circles in London as to the intentions of King Ferdinand and his advisers. In fact, it is not yet certain that the mobilization has begun, or that the date has been set for it. One report from Athens says that the mobilization has been postponed.

It is unknown, however, that the Entente representatives at Sofia and other Balkan capitals are still busy trying to reconstruct the Balkan league, and thus prevent Roumania, Bulgarian Government appears to fighting among themselves. As the Bulgarian Government appears to have made up its mind, despite the opposition of some parties, it seems likely that these diplomatic efforts will have many difficulties to overcome.

The central powers have already commenced their attempt to make their way through Serbia and one of the intervening neutrals countries to the Aegean. With Russia more than holding her against the Austro-Germans in Galicia and Volhynia, it is believed here that the Balkan powers would hesitate before going contrary to the wishes of their big neighbor and former protector.

The best information obtainable at Nish indicates that there are 800,000 German troops available for an attempt to force a passage through Serbia. It is felt in Nish that this movement will be undertaken, although when is not known. The operations indicate that the Teutons are feeling out the Serbian positions.

Athens ca maoi mianiwaoiwaotiaect

The Times' correspondent at Athens cables to this paper that Premier Venizelos, after an audience with the King, summoned a meeting of the Cabinet and subsequently conferred with the Ministers of Serbia and of the Entente powers.

M Mincoff, first secretary of the Bulgarian Legation, in London, said yesterday:

"Up to now we have been the only civilians in the armed camp of Europe. Roumania and Greece have been mobilized for a considerable time, and even Switzerland is under arms. Why, therefore, is it so astonishing that Bulgaria should follow suit? Why should mobilization mean any change in our national policy?

I am not prepared to make any prophecies, as they might fail of fulfilment owing to unexpected developments. We must wait and see."

Big U. S. Fortunes Levied Upon For British War Tax

NEW YORK, Sept. 24. Scores of great American fortunes will be extensively affected by the war income tax to be imposed by Great Britain. Most prominent of those who will be affected is Waldorf Astor, who became a citizen of Great Britain, and whose fortune, estimated now at $300,000,000, must pay its share of the seventeen per cent. income tax that is to be collected by England because of the war.

Henry James, the American novelist, who recently forswore allegiance to the United States and became a subject of Great Britain, will have to contribute a large share of his royalties to pay costs of England's war.

Vivian Gould, who married Lord Decies, will contribute to the British war chest, as will also May Goelet, daughter of Ogden Goelet, who married the Duke of Roxburg.

Others who must contribute are Margaret Drexel, daughter of Anthony J. Drexel, who married Viscount Maidstone; Consuelo Vanderbilt, who married the Duke of Marlborough; Mary Leiter, daughter of Levi Z. Leiter, of Chicago, who became the wife of Lord Curzon; Beatrice Mills, daughter of Ogden Mills, who married the Count of Granard; Margaret Leiter, who married the Duke of Suffolk; Helen Zimmerman, daughter of Eugene Zimmerman, of Cincinnati, who married the Duke of Manchester.

Maoris Held War Dance

Celebrated Landing on Shores of Gallipoli in Native Manner

LONDON, Sept. 25.—An officer of the New Zealand contingent of the Dardanelles describes in the Times an extraordinary Maori war dance which took place on the shores of Gallipoli.

"The Maoris, privates and officers, lined up. With protruding tongues and a rythmical slapping of hands on thighs and chests, with a deep concerted 'a—a—ah,' ending abruptly, they began the Maori haka—the war dance. Shrill and high the leader intoned the solo parts, and the chorus crashed out. As the dancers became more animated the beat of their feet echoed through the gullies of Gallipoli. The leader now declaimed fiercely, now his voice sank to an eerie whisper, still perfectly audible, and as he crouched low to the ground so the men behind him peered. Suddenly, after a concerted crash of voices, the chant ended with a sibilant hiss, a stamp of the right foot, and the detonation of palms slapping the hard ground.

"A hundred yards away in the Turkish trenches perplexed Moslems listened to this blood-curdling serenade, and one of them in explanation produced the cover of the Times. Omnipotent nods and head-shakings followed its reading. For the first time in history the Straits have had to endure attack by cannibals."

SWISS TO NURSE PRISONERS.

Belligerents Will Send Consumptives To Alps for Treatment.

GENEVA, Sept. 24. The British section of the sick prisoners will be sent to various places in Oberland; the French to Leysin and the Germans to St. Moritz.

Force The Belgians To Work

German Authorities to Punish Those Who Refuse

Compulsory labor in Belgium under German administration is announced in the following dispatch of the semi-official Wolff Telegraph Burea from Brussels, published in the Vorwarts of Aug. 26:

"The Governor General has issued an order by which every person is made liable to punishment who refuses without sufficient ground to undertake or to continue work consonant with his professional activity in the public interests, and demanded by the German authorities.

"Likewise persons will be punished who through coercion, threats, or persuasion, or other means, hinder other persons in work for the German authorities or give assistance to them so that they may refuse to work.

"In connection with the regulation measures are also ordered concerning aversion to labor and it is ordered that whoever refuses to accept work, although he receives public or private support, or by reason of his refusal to work becomes destitute and in need of assistance, shall likewise be punished. A sufficient ground for refusal will be considered if based upon international law."

DANDRUFF AND FALLING HAIR

Itching, Burning, Irritated Scalp. Kept Awake at Night. Used Cuticura. Now Head Is Well.

58 De Salaberry St., Quebec, Que.—"About six years ago dandruff began to form on my scalp. At first I didn't notice it, but my hair began falling out gradually and it kept getting worse. The itching and burning were so bad that I scratched and irritated my scalp. I was kept awake at night by the irritation.

"I then tried a sample of Cuticura Soap and Ointment, washed my head with the Soap and warm water, and applied the Ointment. After the first time my hair stopped falling. I got one cake of Cuticura Soap and one box of Ointment. I continued using them for a few months and my head is now well." (Signed) Miss Myrtle Davis, June 3, 1914.

"Am I to assume that the newspapers were correct in stating that you mean to support my cause with—I may say, to the full extent of your power?"

"It depends on circumstances, Mr. Pless."

"Circumstances?" He eyed me rather coldly, as if to say, "What right have you to suggest circumstances?"

"Perhaps I should have said that it depends somewhat on what my powers represent."

He crossed his slender legs comfortably and looked at me with a queer little tilt of his left eyebrow, but with an unsmiling visage. He was too cocksure of himself to grant me even so much as an ingratiating smile. Was not I a glory seeking American and he one of the glorious? It would be doing me a favor to let me help him.

"I trust you will understand, Mr. Smart, that I do not ask a favor of you, but rather put myself under a certain obligation for the time being. It is quite impossible for me to prosecute the search for my child without financial assistance from outside sources. My funds are practically exhausted, and the banks refuse to extend my credit. You have publicly designed yourself to be my friend and well wisher. I have asked you to come here tonight, Mr Smart, to put you to the real test, so to speak. I want $100,000 for six months."

While I was prepared in a sense for the request, the brazenness with which he put it up to me took my breath away.

"Really, Mr. Pless," I mumbled in direct contrast to his sangfroid, "you—you surprise me."

He laughed quietly, almost reassuringly, as he leaned forward in his chair the better to study my face. "I hope you do not think that I expect you to produce so much ready money tonight, Mr. Smart. Oh, no! Any time within the next few days will be satisfactory. Take your time, sir. I appreciate that it requires time to arrange for the"—

I held up my hand with a rather lofty air. "Was it one hundred and fifty thousand that you mentioned or"—

"That was the amount," said he, a sudden glitter in his eyes.

I studied the ceiling with a calculating squint, as if trying to approximate my balance in bank. He watched me closely, almost breathlessly. At last, unable to control his eagerness, he said:

"At the usual rate of interest, you understand."

"What security can you give, Mr. Pless?" I demanded in a very businesslike way.

"Oh, you Americans!" he cried, his face beaming with premature relief. "You will pin us down, I see. I do not wonder that you are so rich. I shall give you my personal note, Mr. Smart, for the amount secured by a mortgage—a supplementary mortgage—on the Chateau Tarnoway."

Tarnoway! Now I remembered everything. Tarnoway! The name struck my memory like a blow. What a stupid dolt I had been! The whole world had rung wedding bells for the marriage of the Count Maris Tarnoway, scion of one of the greatest Hungarian houses, and Aline, the nineteen-year-old daughter of Gwendolen and Jasper Titus of New York, Newport, Tuxedo, Hot Springs, Palm Beach, and so forth—Jasper Titus, the banker and railway magnate, whose name as well as his hand was to be seen in every great financial movement of the last two decades!

My pleasant little mystery had come to a sharp and rather depressing end. A joyous enthusiasm had attended me while I worked in the dark; now a dreary reality stared me in the face. The sparkle was gone.

My cogitations were brief. The count after waiting for a minute or two to let me grasp the full importance of the sacrifice he was ready to make in order to secure me against personal loss blandly announced that there were but two mortgages on the chateau.

"You wish me to accept a third mortgage on the place?" I inquired, pursing my lips.

"The chateau is worth at least a million," he said earnestly. "But why worry about that, Mr. Smart? My personal note is all that is necessary."

"Just a moment, count," I said, leaning forward in my chair. "May I inquire whence and from whom you received the impression that I am a rich man?"

He laughed easily. "One who indulges a whim, Mr. Smart, is always rich. Nichlose Rothhoefen condemns you to the purgatory of Croesus."

"Croesus would be a poor man in these days," said I. "If he lived in New York he would be working where his next meal was to come from. I am not a rich man."

He eyed me coldly. "Have you suddenly discovered the fact, sir?"

"What do you mean?"

"I suggest a way in which you can be of assistance to me, and you hesitate. How am I to take it, sir?"

His infernal air of superiority aggravated me. "You may take it just as you please, Mr. Pless."

"I beg you to remember that I am Count Tarnoway, Mr."—

I arose. "The gist of the matter is this: You want to borrow $150,000 of me. That is"—

He hastened to correct me. "I do not call it borrowing when one gives ample security for the amount involved."

"What is your idea of borrowing, may I ask?"

"Borrowing is the same thing as asking a favor, according to our conception of the transaction. I am not asking a favor of you, sir. Far from it. I am offering you an opportunity to put a certain amount of money out at a high rate of interest."

"Well, then, we'll look at it in that light. I am not in a position to invest so much money at this time."

"Suppose that I were to say that any day inside the next three or four weeks would be satisfactory to me," said he, as if he were granting me a favor. "Please be seated, Mr. Smart."

"Thank you. I fear it is impossible for me to remain."

"I shall be disappointed. However, another time if not tonight, I trust. And now to come to the point. May I depend upon you to help me at this trying period? A few thousand will be sufficient for present needs, and the balance may go over a few weeks without seriously inconveniencing me."

I actually was staggered. My choler was rising.

"I may as well tell you first as last, Count Tarnoway, that I cannot let you have the money. It is quite impossible. In the first place, I haven't the amount to spare; in the second"—

"Enough, sir," he broke in angrily. "I have committed the common error of regarding one of you as a gentleman. Dash me, if I shall ever do so again! There isn't one in the whole of the United States."

"You will do well, sir, to keep a civil tongue in your head," said I, paling with fury.

"I have nothing more to say to you, Mr. Smart," said he contemptuously. "Good night. Francois, conduct Mr. Smart to the corridor."

Strangely enough, I did not recover my sense of speech until I was well out into the corridor. Then I deliberately took a gold coin out of my pocket and pressed it into the valet's hand.

"You will do well, sir, to keep a civil tongue in your head."

"Kindly give that to your master with my compliments," said I in a voice that was intended to reach Tarnoway's ear.

Mr. Poopendyke was waiting for me in the courtyard on my return.

"What is the matter with you?" I demanded irascibly. "What's up? What are you doing out here with a lantern?"

"I was rather anxious," he said, a note of relief in his voice. "I feared that something unexpected might have befallen you. Five minutes ago the—Mr. Pless called up on the telephone and left a message for you. It rather upset me, sir."

"He did, eh? Well, what did he say?"

Public Charges Are Not Beneficiaries of Life Assurance

A census was taken about a year ago of the inmates of alms houses, of prisons, of asylums for the care of the helpless, in an eastern state. It was found but three of the occupants of these institutions, who numbered altogether over fifteen hundred, had been beneficiaries of life insurance.

It was somebody's neglect that forced the public to pay higher taxes in order to take care of nearly all these people.

Life insurance limits the needs of poorhouses, prisons, old folks' homes. Life insurance, therefore, reduces the needs of the State in maintaining institutions for the care of the needy.

The man who has sufficient insurance to take care of his own future if he reaches old age, and of his dependents, should anything happen to him, is doing his duty, not only to his family, but to his State.

H. E. Sears recently told the story of the captain of his squadron gave a dinner to the men of his squadron the night before they left for the front.

"Now, my lads," he said, "treat this dinner as you will the enemy." And they did—with a will.

After the dinner he discovered one of the men tossing away bottles of champagne after a host, and, highly indignant, he demanded to know what he meant by such conduct.

"I'm only obeying orders, sir," said the man.

"Obeying orders?" roared the captain. "What do you mean, sir?"

"You told us to treat the dinner like the enemy, sir, and when we beat the enemy, sir, those we don't kill we take prisoners." Ex-Bat.

HOME HEALTH CLUB

By DR. DAVID H. REFDER

Hill climbing. People who live in bungalows and in a level country have a problem to solve that is so far of greater importance than most of them would ever realize. A bungalow is a dwelling house in which there are no stairs to climb, and as there are no hills in a level country the muscles of the heart are liable to become weak along with many other muscles as well as the lungs, simply from lack of exercise. City dwellers especially those who live in large cities, where land is very valuable, and dwellings, as well as business houses must have several stories with many stairs to climb, have really an advantage which in the great majority of cases, they know not of.

During the time we have been living in Chicago in an apartment we have been obliged, on account of our four active boys, to live on the "first floor." Of course, we have all felt as though we were being cheated out of something of great value. The boys, of course, made up for a portion of their loss by running, jumping, wrestling and other out-door play that is natural to boys, no matter where they are. I also was partly compensated by walking to and from my office, climbing the office stairs, etc., but one day when we climbed the stairs to take an elevated train or street car I noticed that my plump and rugged wife was "out of breath" and "all in" when we reached the platform. After that I observed her closely for some time and I found that she could not stand much of a walk and even her household duties seemed a great burden.

As soon as it looked at all promising I carried the whole family off to the woods in Michigan for the summer camp. From four to eight times daily they go down and up the bluff to the lake, the air is pure and clean, there are no street cars and the village store is nearly a mile away. They live in the open air. When the cold rains come they build a roaring fire at the fire-place of the rough summer cottage and are happy in spite of bad weather. The boys, even Tom, the baby, are like fish in the water, and it's hard to keep them out long enough to eat and sleep. They climb trees, and once Tom got a tumble of 25 feet from a big pine tree that stands at an angle of about 45 degrees part way down the bluff, but the bushes and the sharp incline of the bluff prevented any damage except a few scratches. All of them, their brother included, are as brown as wind and sun can make them, none of them feel the need of rest and a walk of several miles with many hills to climb is a pleasure for the mother as well as the boys.

The lungs are forced to expand and the heart gets strong and always ready for the strain of extra exertion. Clean sweet milk, fresh eggs, the little garden which we planted at the edge of the woods, the fresh berries and other fruit have all helped, but there is nothing of greater importance in securing and keeping good health than pure air, sunshine and exercise. Nature supplies the medicine if there is need of them. One morning David H. was stung by a bumble bee, he ran screaming to me and as soon as I learned the cause of his cries I pulled plantan leaves and crushed them with my fingers. I rubbed them vigorously over the wound, and then bound a poultice of them on it. In a few hours a little redness was all there was left to show to the other boys.

Preparedness: Almost every publication is full of advice upon the subject of preparedness for defensive purposes and in view of the tremendous damage already caused by a well prepared nation that is comparatively small, the advice is, to say the least, timely. It is not my job, however, to discuss war or anything that pertains to it except so far as such things pertain to health but as I consider life itself a continuous battle, from the cradle to the grave, I think I may well make suggestions regarding proper ammunition and equipment for the fight.

Consider for a moment the fact that every particle of matter that is in your body and goes to make up the various portions of it, must, from the first, pass through the one little opening called the mouth. Is not this the point that should be most jealously guarded. The child should be taught from infancy the vital importance of a clean mouth and clean sound teeth. Not very long ago a man came to me who was suffering with aches and pain in various portions of his body. He detailed many symptoms and wanted "something to take" that will destroy the pain and let him go on about his business.

As I talked I made observations and penciled a memoranda. He was greatly surprised when, instead of offering him medicine I asked him how often he cleaned his teeth. He had never visited a dentist except to have 2 or 3 teeth pulled and had never bothered to use a tooth brush and he still more surprised when I told him that he deserved all the pains he was suffering, and that I would not even advise him about treatment until he went to a good dentist and had his teeth cleaned and put in proper condition to masticate food.

He reluctantly did as I told him and as the cause for nearly all of his trouble was then removed there was but little for me to do. I recommended a special mouth and tooth wash and the regular use, morning and night of a good tooth brush, a proper regime for constipation and the man was quickly restored to health.

In preparing for winter you will be wise to arrange for plenty of fresh air in your sleeping quarters. Use warm covering and sleeping garments instead of closely closed windows. By using paper blankets under your bed pad and between the woolen blankets and the top spread, you will not require as much covering in order to be quite warm and comfortable. A great weight of blankets and quilts are not necessary for warmth. Use covering that will keep the heat of your body from radiating rapidly and you will be warm. The fire is inside of you. Proper food properly prepared and eaten will keep that fire burning brightly for many years and such things as cold feet, colds and other such ailments, will not trouble you. You are always ready for the daily battle and the legitimate spoils of the war are health and happiness.

To Forgive a Neighbour

A Scotsman was on his deathbed, and his friends persuaded him to forgive a neighbour with whom he had had a standing feud for some years. The neighbour came to the dying man's bedside. After they had shaken hands and made peace the Scotsman exclaimed—"If I get better, Donald, remember all this goes for naught."

Pare large, ripe cucumbers, then cut them into halves, scrape out the seeds, and grate the flesh of the cucumbers on to a sieve. When it has thoroughly drained, measure the pulp and put it in a bowl. Tricking a Jeweler.

A fashionably dressed woman alighted from a brougham in West London and stepped into a hairdresser's shop. She informed the barber that she had a son who was of unsound mind and that the doctor had ordered his head to be shaved.

Her son, she said, was violent, and she instructed the barber to get a couple of assistants and seize him when he was brought round, to tie him in a chair and shave his head in spite of anything he might say. The barber did not relish the job, but an advance fee of a guinea tempted him, and he fell.

Then the lady drove to the jeweler's, bought some expensive rings and jewelry and expressed surprise at having left her purse at home. She offered to drive the jeweler home with her, together with the jewels, and pay him at her residence.

On arriving once more at the barber's the two alighted, and the unfortunate jeweler at a sign from the lady was seized and bound to a chair, and in spite of his angry yells and expostulations his head was shaved. Meanwhile the lady drove off with £300 worth of gems and was never heard of again.—London Mail.

He laughed loud and long as he put aside the paper.

"What's the matter?" asked the man who was sitting at the next window of the club.

"Here's an article about training a dog," replied the man who had been reading the paper. "It says the first thing to do is to attach the dog to you."

Thereupon the man laughed some more.

"Why, hang it all," exclaimed the man who was so amused, "it seems so absurd, you know. My experience is that a dog will attach himself to you if you give him any provocation."—Exchange.

ATROCITIES AFFIRMED

Report of Austrian Priests Makes Huns Out Worse

Some time ago a committee of Austrian priests with the approval of Archbishop Piffl of Vienna set out to investigate the alleged cruelties of German troops in Belgium at the beginning of the war. It was hoped that the report of these priests, who had been admonished direct from the Pope to consider the evidence from an absolutely impartial standpoint, would clear the Germans in the eyes of the World. The report was handed to the Pope as well as to the Archbishop of Vienna, but the publication of it has been forbidden in Austria and Germany. In clerical circles in Rome, however, its contents are well known, and the reason why it is being kept secret in Germany and Austria is perfectly plain.

"The German War Department," the report says, "has already admitted that many of the accusations made against the Belgian franc-tireurs are false." Concerning the case of the parish priest of Oyenbrugge, the committee reports: "When the unfortunate priest returned to his parish he was arrested without any reason whatever and thrown into prison together with twenty-eight civilians. Here he was compelled to stand in the middle of the floor with the hands raised about his head for several hours. When he finally collapsed from exhaustion he was prodded with bayonets and struck with the butts of rifles. Soldiers tore his breviary to pieces and threw them into his face. They forced two civilians to strike him and spit into his face. Finally they threw a bucket of water over him while he was lying helpless on the floor, and whenever he moved they prodded him with bayonets. When the priest tried to push aside the point of a bayonet which almost touched his face a soldier sent a bullet through his head." This is a verbatim translation of a report made by trustworthy priests, each of whom is personally known to the Archbishop of Vienna.

Soldiers Avoid Writs

Asked in the Vacation Court, London, Eng., to grant an attachment against a sergeant-major for non-compliance with an order calling him for a surety bond for costs, Mr Justice Low refused the application. His Lordship said that he was not going to make a writ of attachment against a person serving in His Majesty's forces in time of war, except for something criminal.

Hun Charity Statues

Many of the war charity schemes in Germany take the form of wooden statues. These have been erected in many of the towns throughout the country. People drive nails into the statues, each nail costing roughly 25 cents, the proceeds usually going to the Red Cross funds. The idea is that the statue should be covered with nail armor, and there is scarcely a German town of any importance which has not erected in some prominent position one of these charity statues. Berlin has the most imposing one—a huge effigy of Hindenburg. The figure of Hindenburg himself is no less than 33 feet high from the soles of his mighty boots to the crown of his colossal hat, and the statue rests on a square pedestal over 6 feet high. At Hamburg a wooden statue of the German St. Michael has been erected. Hamburgers are now spending their marks in nails which they drive into the statue in the cause of charity.

Had "Cholera Infantum."

WAS WASTED TO A SHADOW.

Cholera Infantum is one of the most common summer complaints of infants, and many die who could be saved if taken in hand on the first sign of the trouble. It begins with a profuse diarrhoea, very often accompanied by vomiting, and the matter ejected from the stomach has a bilious appearance. The child rapidly loses flesh and becomes weak and languid.

Mrs. W. Fallis, 455 Jones Ave., Toronto, Ont., writes: "I have used Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry for my three boys, and I do believe it saved their lives. One of them had cholera infantum so bad he was wasted to a shadow, and the doctor had given him up, but 'Dr. Fowler's' cured him. I have also used it myself for colic and find it an excellent remedy. I would not be without it in the house."

Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry is the original remedy for the cure of all bowel complaints. It has been on the market for the past 70 years.

BRASS BANDS IN BATTLE

Napoleon I. was a firm believer in the inspiring effects produced by music on armies and utilized it with telling results. During the peninsular campaign the British bands had a conspicuous part. At Busaco, when the English, weakened and starving, were hard pressed by the French, the Duke of Wellington sent forward the bands to play the national anthem. Instantly the men fought with renewed vigor and the battle was won.

An officer said, "I saw one company waver, but a non-commissioned officer shouted that as long as the music lasted the fighting would go on and threatened to put a bullet into the first man who showed signs of cowardice. He did not have to fire."

At Talavera two bands were entrenched in a ravine and played stirring music to goad the men to fight against the enemy.

During the Schleswig-Holstein War of 1848, Prince Frederick Charles, the father of the Duchess of Connaught, ordered his regimental bands to play a religious chorale praying for victory—and victory came. During the Franco-Prussian War a general wrote to headquarters, "Send me a thousand men and the music of the 'Marseillaise' and I will guarantee you a victory." Before Plevna in the Turco-Russian War, Skobeleff, a Russian general, was about to order a retreat when he caught sight of the Imperial Guards' Band standing in the rear. He at once ordered it to play the Russian national anthem, and the disheartened soldiers, with a great access of courage, swept over the Turks, utterly routing them.

BOY SCOUT'S ADVENTURE

Heavy Belgian Lad Killed German Officer and Took Coat and Helmet

The spirit of revolt which inspires the Belgian nation against the Teutonic invader is well illustrated by the adventures of Gaston van Hecke, a Belgian Boy Scout. Refused a place in the ranks on the score of his youth, young Van Hecke positively declined to be suppressed. He attached himself to the first battalion he could find marching to the front and defied all efforts to drive him off. Wherever the battalion went, Van Hecke was sure to arrive on the scene, begging to be allowed the privilege of fetching or carrying for anyone, officer or private, who would patronize him, and doubly delighted if only the commission would take him up to the fighting line. At length it became a recognized thing that Van Hecke was companionship, and must be endured.

The following is one of the many adventures which befell him. It was at Ramscapelle where, after enduring heavy shell fire and bayonet charges, the battalion to which he had attached himself was driven out of its trenches, being under fire from both sides, were left empty.

Towards nightfall, young Van Hecke made his way into the most advanced trench, armed with a revolver. Presently he heard footsteps approaching, and, peeping over the edge of the trench, saw a German officer making his way to the same trench from the same side. Van Hecke promptly dodged down and waited his time. In a few seconds the German's head appeared, cautiously peeping into the trench.

The Boy Scout promptly shot him dead, through the forehead. Determined to secure a trophy, he hauled the body into the trench and hastily stripped off the coat and helmet, judging it wise to make his departure immediately afterwards. The coat and helmet was shown at the Belgian War Exhibition, in Piccadilly, London.

The British Red Cross

Queen Alexandra is president of the British Red Cross Society, which was founded in 1905, and incorporated by Royal Charter in 1906. Though the British Red Cross Society is affiliated with the International Association of Red Cross Societies, it is, as in the case of every country, worked upon a quite independent basis.

Roughly, the British society is divided into two parts—the men's and the women's detachments—and some idea of the progress made since the inauguration in 1906 may be gathered from the fact that at the present time the British Red Cross Society can turn out nearly 55,000 nurses—men and women—in nearly two thousand detachments.

When Germany Failed

In the opinion of Lord Northcliffe Germany was beaten as soon as she ceased to advance on Paris.

"He says it is costing him four times as much to live as it did two years ago." "But the price of necessities has only doubled." "Yes; but he is leading a double life."

THE ANNUAL VISION.

She comes, the sweet girl graduate,
Arrayed in robes of white,
To grapple with affairs of state
And keep things running right;
To show what's what and like as not
On several points shed light.

Her mind with useful learning
Stored to the very brim,
Her sweet soul grandly yearning
In seas of light to swim;
A perfect dream, her final theme,
Tied with a ribbon trim.

No problem for her solving
Is ever found too deep.
But they, like mists dissolving,
Evanish; with a sweep
Conclusive, grand, of her soft hand,
She puts them all to sleep.

Oh, sweet and soulful creature,
Adored girl graduate,
You are indeed a feature
With which to part we'd hate!
To you we bow. Please show us how
To keep things running straight.

His Ambition.

The soft, tender rays of the morning sun stretched their long, graceful arms over field and wold, kissing the hilltops and shedding luster on the humble onion patch where Felix McQuarter was engaged in useful toil.

Well aware are we, dear romantic reader, that Felix is no name for a hired man, so you will at once guess that he was a nobleman in disguise. Guess again. You are wrong.

Felix was only one of nature's noblemen, and as there is no salary attached to that job he had to work at what came to hand.

"Ah me," he sighed, "would I were rich."

Just then a fairy stepped up. "Here is a million dollars," she said. "Take it and blow yourself."

"How can I ever repay you?" said Felix.

"Don't mention it," said the fairy.

Felix tucked the money in his pocket and started for town.

"What are you going to buy?" called the fairy.

"The best nickel cigar in the hut village," he replied as he strode gracefully away.

FRIED FOOD VERSUS BEAUTY

The deadliest foe to a good complexion is fried food. One of the reason that English and Irish girls in the old country—frequently have such wonderfully complexions, is that fried foods there is little used. One of the principal reasons why so many southern girls—who otherwise might be beauties—have such sallow complexions is because they eat a great deal of fried chicken, fried "hogmeat," fried corn fritters and the rest of it.

Whether one like fried fare or not, it's a sure thing that a diet of it will spoil one's looks.

Food is of value to the body in proportion to its digestibility. A food that is readily digested is quickly turned into good red blood, and good red blood brings pretty red cheeks.

The Highland lassie gets her peach-bloom complexion from oatmeal. And oatmeal is perhaps the most easily digested food on earth! A breakfast of oatmeal porridge and milk will be digested in twenty-five minutes; a breakfast of fried ham and fried potatoes in about three to four hours.

What, then is the trouble with fried foods? It is the grease. When anything is fried the grease makes a coating round it, like a piece of armor-plate. And if once you try to digest oil and grease—as must—that have to happen to that layer of fat before the digestive acids have a chance to get in to the food that is inside it, you will see why it has so little chance to be changed quickly into blood.

Fried food is an armor-plated variety of comestible which doesn't make anything. In the effort to absorb it a large amount of bile is produced, and the typically yellowish complexion of the bilious person is the result. Neither man nor woman can eat fried food and have a good complexion.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

HIS COURSE IN LOVE.

By LULU JOHNSON.

Copyright, 1907, by M. M. Cunningham.

On the whole, Treadway thought it rather nice of him to be willing to marry Marion Hitesman. He was possessed of an income of half a million a year, the income from his mother's estate, and when his father died—well, it required the services of two men to keep track of the Treadway investments.

Marion was a dainty little country woman, but she would need a lot of social training, of course. Perhaps a year in a finishing school might be a good thing to fit her for the place in society she was destined to fill. It might be a bother to wait a year before marriage, though, so on second thoughts perhaps a social secretary would be a better plan. Treadway decided upon the social secretary as the lesser of two necessary evils.

Marion Hitesman was only a little country girl, the belle of Wichfield, a village of a few thousand persons. Treadway had been forced to stop over there for repairs to his automobile, and before these were made he had seen Marion. After that the automobile was called upon only for little trips to nearby points of interest, and Treadway paid his easy going court to the girl.

Perkins, his father's lawyer, made his summer home in Wichfield, and the introduction was easily accomplished, but Treadway found courtship according to Wichfield notions rather complicated. In town he would have left a standing order with the florist and confectioner. There would have been an occasional motor excursion and finally a proposal of marriage in the conservatory at some one's dance and a note in the society columns of the papers.

Here it was all different, and, while he enjoyed the novelty of it, he found it rather awkward at times. In town mammas with marriageable daughters were willing to do more than half the courtship for him. Here he found himself on the same level of equality in the Hitesman home as Ben Taylor, who clerked in Luscomb's grocery.

TREADWAY WATCHED HER WISTFULLY.

Even this fact did not serve to warn him, however, and his declaration was entirely characteristic. The two were returning from a ride in the country. A score of couples had gone out to the home of a farmer host, and the road was dotted with buggies. At Marion's command Treadway had not thrown on speed to outstrip the others, as he usually did, and the car rolled along as quietly as though it were under the observation of a string of traffic police.

"I love automobiling," she said, "when the car does not run too fast."

"You shall have an automobile for your own," he promised, "when we are married."

"Are we to be married?" she asked, with a touch of coldness in her voice.

"I hope so," was the prompt reply. "I've got a lot of money, and in time I shall have a lot more. I can give you everything you want and introduce you into society. Of course you'll have to coach up a little, but you'll make it all right. Is it a go?"

"No, thank you," said Marion very quietly. "I admit that the proposition you make is glittering in the extreme, but I must decline."

"In that case," was the quiet retort, "I shall omit the customary expressions of regret. No doubt you will find quick consolation."

Treadway was too stunned to argue. He busied himself with the steering wheel until the big black car drew up in front of the Hitesman home. He helped her out and opened the gate for her.

"It is goodby as well as good night," he said as she held out her hand. "I shall be gone in the morning."

He stammered something he could not catch and hurried up the walk to the house. Treadway watched her wistfully until the door closed behind her; then he turned away, carrying in his heart the memory of a slender figure silhouetted against the light from the open door.

In the early dawn the big touring car slipped down the dusty road. There was the usual gossip, and then Wichfield forgot Treadway in the excitement of a revival meeting at which a famous evangelist exhorted. But Treadway did not forget, even though he put the width of the Atlantic between himself and the little town where he had met defeat. He dawdled in London and loafed miserably in Paris, but he could not forget the girl with the big brown eyes, and he was glad when at last he turned his steps homeward.

The summer had passed, but the brisk autumnal air made touring a delight, and presently for a second time the big black car rolled into Wichfield. Perkins, the Treadway lawyer, had closed his house and gone back to town, but there was an excellent hotel, and presently Treadway found himself installed in a comfortable room. Once settled he sallied forth to find Marion.

She was not at home, they told him at the house, but Mrs. Hitesman added minute directions by which he found the patch of woods where Marion had gone in search of nuts.

Evidently her nutting was but an excuse for a walk in the woods, for he came upon her day dreaming at the foot of a huge chestnut. As he approached she looked up wonderingly; then, after a moment's pause, she sprang to her feet with outstretched hands.

"For a moment I thought you must be a vision," she cried as he hurried toward her. "Mr. Perkins told me just before he left that you had gone abroad for the winter."

"I did go across," he confirmed, "but I couldn't stay. I wanted to come back and ask you if your decision was final."

"My decision?" she echoed.

"Yes," he explained. "I know you told me that you would not marry me, but I could not be content until I asked again. I went to London and Paris to try to forget you, but the farther from home I got the more I seemed to want you, and so here I am."

"But the hundred or more who were ready to accept you and your millions?" she reminded.

"There might be a million or more who would be ready to accept my hundreds," he replied impatiently, "but the whole million in one big seraglio would not be you, dear. It was a silly, braggart speech that I am heartily ashamed of now. It was that which brought me back. I wanted to tell you how well I realized what a fool I had been. I love you too much to give up without another appeal. I've a whole lot to learn, Marion, but will you be the teacher, dear, and show me that the cursed Money is not everything?"

"I think I should like to try," she whispered as he caught her hand.

"And I came over here prepared for the argument of my life," he said wonderingly.

"You said this time what you should have said before," she replied. "The last time you offered me wealth and position. This time you have offered me your love. It is love that a girl wants, Tom. It's not always the money she seeks. I liked you before, but I could not be bought."

"But I loved you then," he cried.

"Not in the same way," she explained, "or you would have told me so. You wanted me to teach you. That was the first lesson."

"Then here endeth the first lesson," cried Treadway, with a laugh, as he bent to touch the soft brown hair with his lips. "Let's hope the others will not be so drastic. You've been pretty hard on your pupil, sweetheart."

The best thing to keep in the beer bottle is the cork.

If you get the best of whisky, it will get the best of you.

NURSE CHANCES AWFUL DEATH IN CAUSE OF SCIENCE

PARIS, Sept. 25.—Mary Davis, a young Englishwoman, who has been working in the pathological laboratories of the American Ambulance since January, has just performed an act of heroism as great as any recorded upon the battlefield.

Her work has been the examination of bacteria from the wounded arriving at the ambulance, and assisting in the experiments with animals to determined their virulence, work for which her studies in the Pasteur Institute in Paris had qualified her. Her duties in the last few months were chiefly directed towards the study of gaseous gangrene. She has seen many examples of the horrible result of this infection, and had observed the invariably fatal course of the disease in animals inoculated with the bacilli. She had become convinced of the efficacy of injections with quinina hydrochloride, and had concluded that the experiments on small animals had given all the results of which they were capable, and that the time had come for an experiment on a normal human body, but not one from the battlefield, fatigued and wounded and possibly infected by other bacilli.

Risked Her Life.

Well aware that her plan would be prevented if it became known, she determined, without a word to anyone, to risk her life in an attempt to demonstrate the efficacy of the treatment which she was convinced would cure the victim of this dread disease.

Her preparations deliberately and completely made, she waited until she was about to leave for a holiday, so that her absence would not disturb the work in the laboratory. She chose the deadliest strain of bacilli in the laboratory, obtained from the latest fatal case, of which two drops of culture suffices to kill a guinea pig. Then she inoculated herself in a manner most certain to produce the disease in animals, injecting fifty times the amount used to kill a guinea pig, making one injection deep into the muscles of the thigh, the other just beneath the skin.

Causes Consternation.

Two hours later she quietly came to the laboratory and asked to be treated in the same manner as animals, under experiment. The consternation caused by her announcement among the medical staff may be easily imagined.

Injections with a quinina solution were made at once at the points where she had inoculated the deadly bacilli. She was sent to the nearest hospital for observation and further treatment. Quinina injections were given a second time. Symptoms of a slight degree of infection developed within twenty-four hours, but they subsided without an operation becoming necessary. She is now completely recovered.

Earnest Youth.

"I sent you some suggestions telling you how to make your paper more interesting. Have you carried out any of my ideas?" Editor—"Did you meet the office boy with the waster-paper basket as you came upstairs?" Youth—"Yes, I did." Editor—"Well, he was carrying out your ideas."

Doctor Said Only Hope Was In An Operation

Was Skeptical When He Began the Use of Dr. Chase's Ointment—Relief Came Quickly

Here is a plain, honest statement in regard to Dr. Chase's Ointment. Between the lines of this letter you can read the gratitude which its writer feels. One does not suffer from annoying, distressing piles for ten years without appreciating a cure when it is obtained.

Almost every mail brings the report of someone who has been cured of piles by the use of Dr. Chase's Ointment. Such statements are never used without the permission of the writer, and until we are satisfied that the cure is genuine and the writer a person of responsibility.

You may believe in operations for piles, and think there is no other cure. Write to Mr. Ingles, enclosing stamp, and he will gladly verify his statement. He will tell you that the pain, the expense, the risk of an operation are quite unnecessary. That relief and cure come with the use of Dr. Chase's Ointment.

Mr. Ernest W. Ingles, Penticton, B.C., writes: "I suffered from piles for ten years and though I tried all kinds of ointments and injections I really had no permanent relief until I used Dr. Chase's Ointment. When I began this treatment I had absolutely no faith in it, for I had been examined by a well-known physician in Vancouver, and he said that an operation was the only thing that would benefit me. It was surprising the relief I obtained from the very first box, and now, after using four boxes, I am practically cured. My case was so exceptionally bad that I received no relief day or night, and for this reason the results are wonderful."

You can obtain Dr. Chase's Ointment from any dealer at 60 cents a box. If you do not want to risk this much send a two-cent stamp to pay postage, and mention this paper, and we shall send you a sample box free. We are so certain that any sufferer from piles will obtain relief by using this ointment that we do not hesitate to make you this offer. Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

LADY'S COAT.

By Anabel Worthington.

This coat should take a first place among the more graceful of the utility garments. It is unique in cut, with the entire front panel cut in one, with the front side bodies, and with the same arrangement duplicated in the back. This leaves the lower half of the sides, that which comes below the belt, in a separate piece. The seam which joins it to the upper portion can be left plainly visible or concealed by a belt.

The sleeves are plain and straight, and may be finished with or without a cuff. The neck is a trifle open, with a small collar, and this may be buttoned closely to the throat if desired.

The length of this coat is a matter of choice. It may be made either thirty or thirty-four inches long, according to its destined use. The longer garment is likely to be found more generally useful, while the shorter is better for part of a costume.

There are some very attractive imported cloakings which will be found excellent for this coat, and it is also a style which will be effective in velvet and faille for more dressy wear. The various fur cloths will be much worn this winter and these will also be appropriate.

The coat pattern, No. 7342, is cut in sizes 34 to 44 inches bust measure. Medium size requires for coat 2¾ yards of 54 inch material, for shorter length 2¼ yards of 54 inch width, for either a yoke of 27 inch satin to trim.

This pattern can be obtained by sending 15 cents to the office of this paper.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 3 for 25c.

Australian And New Zealand Troops Cover Themselves With Glory in Fighting at Anzai

The Colonials' Dash in The Fighting at The Dardanelles—"If Night Had Been Two Hours Longer We Would Have Turks off That Hill" Said Wounded Australian.

ALEXANDRIA, Sept. 25.—Once again the Australian and New Zealand troops have covered themselves with glory—this time in a magnificent attack on the famous Sari-Bair hill, generally known as Hill 971. "If only the night had been two hours longer," said a wounded Australian officer, "we should have had all the Turks off the hill, but day dawned we were 600 yards distant from the foot, and the enemy rained down a merciless fire upon us, and we were forced to entrench." Wounds seem nothing to these men so long as the objective is reached.

It is said that before the landing operations in April the German officers told the Turkish soldiers that the Australians and New Zealanders would probably be arrayed against them, and they were warned that these were "not ordinary men, but very devils for fighting." The landing on April 25 confirmed the truth and the warning to the Turks, and it will be a lasting regret that there were not sufficient troops to follow up the great initial success of the Oversea forces. The Turkish position had been undoubtedly turned; they were on the run everywhere, but the Colonels tafw laorditaoirdl but the Colonials had to fall back on Gaba Tepe, and for three months they had been marking time, waiting until the moment should be propitious for a new offensive.

Happy Allies.

Here in Egypt we have watched fresh troops pouring in practically day after day. The camp is Alexandria had extended and extended until they stretched as far distant as Aboukir, where men from the Lowlands of Scotland gazed upon the scene of the famous naval conflict between Nelson and Admiral Breuys 100 years ago. The street of Alexandria were almost impassable with troops, and one would witness in the Mohammed Ali-square scenes hitherto undreamt of, and for kaleidoscopic effect almost without parallel, save perhaps in the actual theatres of operations. Australians, New Zealanders, and Maoris; French pious-pious, Senegalese, Zouaves, and Chasseurs d'Afrique; Pathans, Sikhs, and Gurkhas French, English, and American sailors; and last, but not least in numbers, the British Tommy. The Entente had never been better exemplified than in the nightly spectacle of English and French troops arm-in-arm walking through the streets singing "Tipperary."

Cafes and bars were thronged with hilarious troops—British soldiers drawn from all parts of the Empire Here in Egypt stood reflected the greatness and the unity of the British Empire.

In Cairo, similar scenes. The great camps at Zeitoun and Heliopolis had again become the centre of much animation with the arrivals of fresh reinforcements from Australia and New Zealand, and the Mena Camp had been reopened for the reception of troops from home.

Bayonets Reary.

"What an extraordinary sight would have been presented to the eye if a limelight had suddenly been turned on that great advancing mass of humanity! Thousands and thousands of men, from Anzac to Suvla Bay, creeping through scrub and wending their way through the gullies, peering through the darkness for a sign of the enemy, knives and bayonets ready to despatch anyone who attempted to arrest them in their path. Everything depended on our surprising the enemy and working the greatest execution while night lasted. Unfortunately, our guide had taken the wrong path after branching off from the coast, and we had been obliged to retrace our steps for some distance, thereby losing valuable time.

"Eventually we struck the right course and pushed on as swiftly as we could through the gullies. After a while we surprised a detachment of Turks, who offered little resistance; any who resisted were soon despatched with the bayonet. The night was very dark, and sometimes it was difficult to distinguish the forms of our own men. Occasionally we could hear that strange gurgling sound that indicated that the Gurkha was effectively using his kukri. Not a shot was fired; it was all silent knife and bayonet work.

"By dawn we had reached a point some 500 or 600 yards from the hill, having up to that time met with no serious resistance. We had surprised the Turks everywhere. In one case, just before dawn, we came upon one party of 150 Turks bivouacking, and they were altogether too astonished to do anything. A handful of our men just went forward and bagged the lot, taking them down to the beach. In another case we captured a German officer, whom we found fast asleep under a tree. Prisoners admitted that they never anticipated an attack on the hill from the direction in which we made it, and they had no sentries posted.

A Gurkha's Methods.

"On my way to the dressing station, after I was wounded, I passed several Gurkhas sitting here and there nursing a wounded hand or arm, but you may be quite sure that each man had accounted for more than one Turk. The Gurkha, rushing at a Turk, wards off the bayonet with his left arm, or grips it with his hand, and then, bringing his kukri quickly round with his right, despatches his man in a trice."

The Otagos, in rushing one position, came up against a difficult ascent, but to their great astonishment the Turks entrenched above leant over and helped the New Zealander up, kissing their hands as they did so. They then surrendered in a body. The fight for a crest on a portion of the Sari-Bair position was very fierce indeed. The Turks were strongly entrenched, and their numerous machine-guns were well concealed in the scrub, but here again our troops were not to be denied, and although many a brave fellow was killed the enemy was dislodged from his strongly-held positions after magnificent charges with the bayonet and the crest occupied, the Turks fleeing down the opposite slope. The gallantry and dash of the troops in this fighting.

One officer who had been bayoneted through the leg by a Turk, closed with his assistant in a desperate struggle. As he clasped the Turk round the neck the latter managed to embed his teeth in the officer's left hand, but the Briton succeeded in getting a knife from his pocket, and with his right hand stabbed the Turk through the heart.

On the crest a dying Turkish officer begged a drink of water from a British private, who immediately gave him his water bottle. The officer, in token of his gratitude, offered the private his gold watch, as well as £6 in Turkish money.

Fair-Fighting Turks.

Some New Zealanders had established themselves at the head of a ravine when they noticed a movement of troops in a gully some distance away. At first it was thought that they were British troops, but eventually it was realized that they were Turks, and that they were seriously menacing a British position to the left. A signaller informed Major Wallingford, who quickly brought four machine guns in well-concealed positions to bear on the advancing enemy, and in a few minutes they were practically annihilated.

In another case a whole battalion of Turks had no sooner commenced to advance than the guns of the British monitors found the range, and hardly a man escaped from the deadly shelling. Men out at sea state that they could see the shells from our war-ships falling right along the ridges of the Turkish position as our men advanced. The firing was very accurate, and the losses of the Turks must have been enormous. Wounded men speak of the inspiring sight of seeing their comrades struggling for the possession of the hill, which, it is hoped, will give the British the master-hand. Once Hill 971 is in our hands the Turkish communications will be cut, and the control of the Narrows will then be a question of time.

All the wounded men speak very well of the Turk. They say throughout he has fought very fairly, and has shown that he bears no animosity against the British. They take the greatest care to avoid hitting our dressing stations or hospitals bases, and there have been further instances of Turks dressing our wounded men and carrying them into our lines.

A singer who recently passed an evening at the house of a lady stayed late. As he rose to go the hostess said:

"Pray, don't go yet, Mr. Basso; I want you to sing something for me."

"Oh, you must excuse me to-night; it is very late and I should disturb the neighbors."

"Never mind the neighbors," answered the lady, quickly, "they poisoned our dog yesterday."

THE ALL-IMPORTANT HOUSE DRESS

With Its Apron in Middy or Bungalow Style

THE PANTALETTE SKIRT

Our modern housewife, be she bride or matron, does not prepare breakfast in a be-ribboned and be-ruffled morning robe, or dinner in a passe afternoon frock. She delights in her trim morning dress, with open throat, short skirt, and sleeves, developed in some fresh material which may be tubbed every Monday morning. Her hair is drawn back daintily and becomingly, and often confined under a cap of the same material as the housedress, to protect the hair from dust or cooking odours.

The Material of the Housedress.

Gingham, chambray and percale are the staple fabrics for these dresses, but someone who desire to simplify matters, still further, decided that plain white soiled no quicker than starched gingham or chambray; that soft, white cotton crepe, which washes so easily, requires no ironing, does not wrinkle, and is fresher looking, was more practical, for these dresses than the old-time fabrics which require starch and careful laundering.

Buttons and Pockets Trim the House Dress.

Of course, many an old-time housewife laughed at the idea and considered the very thought of housework in white ridiculous, but many have taken it up and find cotton crepe, whether in pure white, or patterned in color, a most satisfactory and practical material for the workdress.

Popularity of the Smock.

The gardening fad, which took a strong hold upon the fancy of the city dweller and the suburbanite, this summer, was responsible for the introduction of the smock. It has become decidedly popular with housekeepers and promises to find a permanent place in the wardrobe. These smocks are fashioned of dark blue linen, chambray, duck, and similar materials, often trimmed with smocking in contrasting thread. They are especially practical to slip on over an afternoon frock when there is some slight task to be performed which might possible result in a spot or stain on the gown. The woman who delights in regilding a picture frame, or brightening up a piece of furniture, will also find them convenient, as they are generally made up in a somewhat heavier material than the regulation apron, and, therefore, offer more protection.

Bungalow or All-Enveloping Aprons.

These large all-enveloping aprons play no small part in the housekeeper's scheme of things. Crepe is also being used considerably for these aprons, but gingham still holds first place; this is a garment that requires a lot of crispness to make it look fresh. Percale, striped, or patterned in some conventionalized design, is attractive, too, and there are a number of other wash fabrics, thin duck, for instance, that are used.

Pockets and Trimmings.

Large, roomy pockets are features of both dresses and aprons. They come in very handy for carrying a dust cloth, a short handled duster or whisk broom, a pair of sheers, or some other article to be used at various times during the morning, besides being useful, they break the severity of the dress and render it more becoming.

Buttons are used to trim these dresses, too; but they must be a washable button—bone or crocheted. Pearl buttons, which are not removable, are apt to break when the garment is laundered. The large pearl or bone buttons, however, the shanks of which may be slipped through buttonholed eyelets, secured with a bar, and removed when the frock goes to the tub, are the height of the practical.

AN OPEN LETTER

From a Well Known Methodist Clergyman of Interest to All Who Are Sick

One of the best known ministers in the Hamilton conference is the Rev. Chas. E. Stafford, of Elora, Ont., who freely admits that he owes his present health to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Mr. Stafford writes as follows: "Some years ago I was severly afflicted for a period of nearly four months. The leading physician in the town in which I was then stationed diagnosed my case as one of complete nervous prostration, brought on by overwork and which superinduced intercostal neuralgia and muscular rheumatism, from which I suffered the most excruciating pain night and day for weeks. So weak and helpless did I become that my attendants had to handle me like an infant, raising me up and laying me down with the greatest care, so intense were my sufferings. Acting on the advice of my doctor, and taking his medicine, I did not seem to improve. One afternoon, while suffering great pain, the editor of the paper published in the town, and who was a member of the church of which I was then pastor, urged me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I was sceptical as to the medicinal qualities of all proprietary medicines, but on the strong recommendation of the editor, who had great faith in the medicine, I decided to try them. To my great surprise and supreme delight, I soon found that the Pills were giving me relief, and after I had taken seven boxes I was fully restored to health. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, under God, having made me a new man. Ever since I have been better and stronger physically than I had been for a number of years.

Three years ago, after an active ministry of forty-six years, I asked the Hamilton conference of the Methodist church to grant me superannuation relation, which it did, but for more than two years I have been supplying a charge which necessitates a drive of twenty miles every Sabbath. To-day I am strong and hearty, without an ache or pain, and for my present physical condition I am indebted to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and can most heartily recommend them to the afflicted."

Call Again.

A stern father who had repeatedly told a young man who was paying his addresses to his daughter not to visit the house again without his permission, which he never intended to give, was surprised when he answered the door-bell late one evening to see the young man. "Sir," said he in anger, "didn't I tell you not to call again, eh, sir?" "Yes," said the young man, "I know, but I didn't call to see your daughter; I came on behalf of our firm about that little bill." "Oh! er—er——" stammered the father, "call again will you?"

Heavy Battery Which Had Been Harassing The Allies On The Peninsula is Silenced By The Fire From Warship ---British Ships Do Heavy Damage in Bombardment of Zeebarge.

GERMANS AGAIN USE GAS BOMBS

The Germans are again resorting to the use of asphyxiating gas bombs, the War Office stated. This method of attack was used by the enemy yesterday in the regions of Auberive and St. Hilaire, in reply to the violent bombardment of the German positions.

Intense artillery fighting developed yesterday north of the Aisne and south of the Aisne-Marne Canal. The French gunners continued to wreck the German trenches in the Artois, Champagne and Argonne regions.

The Germans replied with heavy artillery attack upon the French positions near Andechy, Bancourt and Tilloly.

PARIS, Sept. 25.—A French warship has entered the Dardanelles and silenced a Turkish battery on the Asiatic coast, it was officially announced this afternoon. The battery's guns were of a large calibre and had harassed the Anglo-French troops near Seed Ul Bahr by throwing shells across the strait.

The Turks have made several unsuccessful attempts to explode mines under the French trenches at the southern tip of Gallipoli. Prisoners report that on one occasion the French counter-mined and set off dynamite in the Turkish tunner, annihilating a large detachment of German officers.

LONDON, Sept. 25.—The Holland-American lined Eimdijk, six thousand tons, has been sunk. Thirty-nine of her crew have been saved. Five are missing.

Despatches from London do not say whether the Holland-American liner, which sails under the Dutch flag, was sunk by a submarine torpedo or a mine. This vessel sailed from Buenos Aqres in August with eight thousand tons of maize consigned to Copenhagen, Denmark.

Thirty-nine of her crew landed in England, five are missing.

AMSTERDAM, Sept. 25.—Three British warships heavily bombarded Zee Brugge, the German naval base, at daybreak to-day. The extent of damage is not known, but is believed to be very heavy.

NEW YORK, Sept. 25.—Americans are planning immediate steps to alleviate the suffering of Armenians in Turkey. It is estimated to-day that 315,000 of Armenians have been massacred and the remaining 600,000 have been driven from their homes by the Turks and are suffering terribly.

TOKIO, Japan, Sept. 25.—Allies are reported to be preparing to call upon Japan to send troops to help block the threatened Austro-German drive on Constantinople. No official confirmation was obtainable here, but the report attracted considerable comment to-day, in view of the despatches indicating that Bulgaria may soon cast her lot with the Central Empires.

The assistance of Japan's armies is known to have been desired for some time by certain French leaders, among them Stephen Pichon, the former Foreign Minister.

Though Japan several weeks ago refused to sell to Russia her own reserves of ammunition, the Government has taken active steps to aid western Allies in obtaining supplies of shells. The Government ammunition plants are being extended and improved, and some supplies of ammunition already have gone forward to Russia.

By March, 1916, Japan will be in a position to send large supplies of war munitions to the Czar's armies.

NEW YORK, Sept. 25.—Despatches from Berlin via wireless admit that the British and French are again on the offensive on the western front.

In deference to the wishes of Mr. and Mrs. Ackerman there will be no public reception.

FOUR DOLLARS FOR A HORSE

Animal Was Withdrawn From the Market

Four dollars was the top price, bid for the remnants of a draught horse that was put up at auction on the farmers' market this morning. The same horse in Eastern Canada would probably have realized one hundred and seventy-five dollars, and have been drafted into the remount department. Mr. Thornton, the auctioneer, made a futile attempt to secure a higher price for the animal, which was finally withdrawn from the market.

Still Discussing The Hydro Award

City Solicitor Gordon was in Toronto yesterday in connection with the Power Arbitration decision which is still in suspension. He had asked the arbiters for a statement of the details of their award which he appealed on the ground that it was too large. In Toronto he received a statement, but it was in the aggregate. Mr. Gordon again requested an itemized sheet.

Dyer, who have been members of the band of the 57th Regiment for some years, have joined the band of the 80th Battalion. The other son, Pte. Frank Dyer, is in India with the 4th Devons. Another son residing in Peterborough has tried to enlist but failed to pass the doctor.

Mr. John Butcher Doing His Bit

Mr. John Butcher, sexton of St. John's Church, and for many years a member of the 57th Regiment Band, has presented the band of the 80th Battalion with a piccolo—a gift that is thoroughly appreciated by every member of the band. Mr. Butcher is determined to do his "bit," having given up his two sons —George of the 8th C.M.R. and Alex. of the 33rd Battery—to the call of King and Country. If more Peterborough people wou'd follow his example, it would be an easy matter to secure recruits and to equip the band.

MEN OF 80TH ARE INOCULATED AGAINST TYPHOID

Fifty of Them Received Serum Yesterday—Another Machine Gun For The 80th C. M. R.—Capt. Park is Here.

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

The process of inoculating the members of the 80th Battalion against the danger of typhoid infection was commenced yesterday afternoon, when Majors Eastwood and Cameron injected the serum into the arms of fifty recruits. This morning another big squad was inoculated, and in a day or two the first stage of the operation will be completed. Another injection of the serum will be made in a short time.

A committee from the 57th Chapter I.O.D.E. visited the recruits in Nicholls Hospital this afternoon, taking flowers, magazines, and fruit for the men there who have been operated on in order to fit themselves for military service.

The promotion of Lieut. Meyers, of the 57th Regiment, to the rank of captain has been gazetted.

Captain M. H. Park of the 59th Battalion is home on leave from Barriefield Camp.

It may be interesting news to local people to know that in spite of the drafts that have been made upon it, Major Medd states that B Squadron of the 8th C.M.R. still is composed 80 per cent. of Peterborough men. B Squadron has sent 90 men to England, of which the great majority were Peterborough men.

Mrs. Mary Waddell and Mr. R. M. Waddell have forwarded a cheque to the Militia Department for the purchase of a machine gun, which they asked supplied to 8th C.M.R. on account of Peterborough having furnished a squadron to that regiment.

Lt.-Col. Johnston of the 80th Battalion, and Mr. J. H. Burnham were in Lindsay yesterday consulting with Major-General Sir Sam Hughes on matters in connection with local military affairs.

The men of the local detachment, 80th Battalion, are making a big hit with their new marching song, "We'll Never Let the Old Flag Fall," which Bandmaster Hughes heard the 48th Highlanders feature in Toronto a short time ago and the music of which he secured for the 80th Band. The latter played it for the first time on the march, and the men sang the chorus lustily. The music has a good swing to it. The chorus goes like this.

"We'll never let the old flag fall,
For we love it the best of all,
We don't want to fight to show our might,
But when we start we'll Fight, Fight, Fight;
In peace or war you'll hear us sing,
God save the Flag, God save the King;
At the ends of the world the flag's unfurled.
We'll never let the old flag fall."

Needless to say, the soldiers who sp-

RECEPTION OF BUDGET

Throughout The House of Commons There Were Manifestations of Boisterous Good Humour—The Spirit of Iron There However.

EVERYONE CHEERFUL

Copyright 1915, Central News by T. P. O'Connor

LONDON, Sept. 25.—If the English take their pleasures sadly, they also take their sadness merrily. Never before in the history of Great Britain was there introduced in Parliament such a gigantic and crushing budget, but throughout its presentation by Chancellor of the Exchequer Reginald McKenna there were throughout the House of Commons manifestation of boisterous good humor.

As John Dillon remarked to me, "You'd think the Chancellor was announcing a handsome war bonus to every poor, but deserving member of the House.

The budget thus served the double purpose of providing extraordinary financial elasticity and boundless resources for Britain, and, on the other hand, evidences of the spirit of iron but good humored resolution with which she is ready to carry on the war, however, short or long it may be, to the hour of decisive victory.

The reception of the budget was remarkable even afterward in the lobbies. Even the millionaires, who will have to pay such gigantic sums as thirty to sixty thousand pounds each were as cheerful as men who will have to pay only a few hundred. There was only one real growl and that was from the irreconciliable Free Traders, who see in the import duties even when confined to such luxuries as motors the thin edge of protection.

When the Chancellor announced that there would be no tax on whisky

These two fine gifts show a splendid spirit, and are greatly appreciated by Bandmaster Hughes and his men.

The following donations to the band are appreciatively acknowledged:

STRIKING APPEAL MADE TO THE STALWART SONS OF ENNISMORE TOWNSHIP

Men And Money Was The Keynote of The Message That Was Conveyed by a Number of Local Speakers. This is Not a War Between Foreign Countries Alone But a War Involving Great Britain and Her Dominions Over The Seas.

LIBERTY OR STARVING

Canada's part and responsibility in the great conflict that is engaging the attention of the world, was brought home to a large gathering of stalwart sons of Ennismore at a meeting that was held last evening in the town hall. Unlike the majority of recruiting meetings that are being held throughout the country, the gathering was composed largely of men. Not more than two dozen women were present. The speakers, who were Mr. G. A. Gillespie, M.P.P., Mr. E. A. Peck and Mr. D. O'Connell, found virgin soil for the message they had to deliver, and which was driven home with a force of conviction that left no doubt in the minds of those present as to its import. Few recruiting meetings have produced such a promising number of men of apparent military age and capability. They are hardened sons of the soil endured to the rugged life of the farm.

The chairman for the occasion was Mr. Michael Perdue, whose chief contribution to the cause has been three nephews, namely Thos. Murray, John Perdue and Dennis Perdue. The first two are with the 2nd Canadian Contingent, and probably by this time have experienced their first baptism of fire. Ennismore is represented in the 1st Canadian Contingent by Jas. Cadigan.

Mr. Perdue, as chairman of the meeting, remarked that it was a question of men and money. Both were needed if this war was to be prosecuted to the fullest extent. He expressed the hope that the people of Ennismore would realize their positions and responsibility in respect to the matter and be prepared to make such sacrifices as might be within their power, to assist in the cause for which Great Britain and the colonies are fighting.

Naval Supremacy

Mr. E. A. Peck who was the first speaker introduced said that for over thirteen months war has been waged with grim intensity. Success has been with the British, with the result that the German flag has been swept from the high seas. British trade has been maintained with very little loss, but when we turn to the land operations we see a more serious situation.

For a number of weeks we have heard of the almost uninterrupted progress of the enemy on the eastern front. The Russian army shows evidences of demoralization and it doesn't seem that it will be in a position to resume the offensive for some time to come. On the western front a deadlock exists which is not likely to be broken for some time. The Italians are making slow progress and the operations at the Dardanelles are likewise slow and labourious, and can only be carried on with enormous sacrifices. Great Britain said the speaker, is not responsible for this war. It followed the violation of Belgium's neutrality and other inviolate acts that were committed by the enemy. We must face the situation squarely. This war was forced on us. We are facing a relentless enemy. In face of extreme danger it is up to us to decide whether we can, as individuals or as a community, do something to expedite matters and bring the war to a successful termination. We have the resources and the means to suppress the enemy. Everybody can assist, but we do want the young men who will come forward and do their share.

"Did I Do My Share?"

If we do not make an united effort, there is a possibility that we will have to be a party to an unsatisfactory peace. Some day this war will be brought to an end. The young men who have enlisted will return to meet the relatives of those who have fallen at the front and the question that will arise in the minds of those who remained behind is "Did I do my share?"

In conclusion Mr. Peck quoted an extract from a letter received from a

EXCITING IN RUMANIA OVER BALKAN CRISIS

Crowd Surrounded German Legation and Made Hostile Demonstration on Appearance of Kaiser's Envoy.

CONFERENCES HELD

LONDON, Sept. 25.—The Rumanian King has summoned into conference the members of the cabinet and leaders of all political parties, according to Bucharest despatches received here this afternoon.

The King's action followed the audience he granted the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg, special envoy of the Kaiser, who reached Bucharest early this week to plead with Rumania to remain neutral, no matter what develops in the Balkans.

Press despatches to-day reported the news of the Bulgarian mobilization caused great excitement in Bucharest and a clamor on the part of anti-Austrian papers for war. A crowd surrounded the German legation and made a hostile demonstration on the appearance of the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg, who planned an early return to Berlin.

All despatches from Sofia were so heavily censored that they threw little or no light upon the Balkan situation.

Four Cars Were Derailed, Early Trains Delayed

Four cars of a freight train proceeding westward on the C.P.R. were derailed at an early hour this morning, as a result of which the early morning trains were considerably delayed. A broken rail was the cause of the accident. Fortunately no one was hurt.

To-morrow services at the S. A. Temple will be of unusual interest in as much as it will be the farewell service of three Cadets who will go into training in Toronto for officership. The wind-up of the Annual Harvest Festival will be on Monday night, when a final sale of goods will take place.

"Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unsurpassed."

SATURDAY, SEPT. 25, 1915

THE EXHIBITION GROUNDS.

This year the Peterborough Industrial Exhibition was a great success under adverse conditions of two kinds. One of these was the state of national and local unsettlement caused by the war, and not in our power to remedy or remove. The other was one within our power to remove or improve, or one that can be removed or improved, with energetic and persistent effort. This cause is the absence of buildings and equipment suitable for a first class exhibition such as it could be made if these were provided.

It is, from a practical and prudential point of view, impossible to provide these buildings and conditions under the tenure upon which the directors now hold the grounds. The lease is due to expire a year or so hence; only one more exhibition can be held under it. Then if something is not done the exhibition will be "on the streets"; it will have no home. It is not desirable, if it be possible to renew the lease; for under a short term tenure, no one would contemplate the erection of permanent buildings and improvements, such as are demanded if the exhibition is to be placed upon a permanent and satisfactory basis.

The directors, have an option, soon to expire, to purchase the thirty acres they now have under lease. This option is for $30,000, which is considered a reasonable figure for so advantageously situated a property, within easy walk from the centre of the city, and besides well served by street car lines for local purposes, and with steam railway lines for outside visitors.

It is proposed to purchase the grounds for joint exhibition and park purposes. If this were done by the society, or by the society and city and county jointly, permanent buildings could be erected, and merchants and others would be encouraged to make exhibits without risk of articles being blown away or flooded, and the exhibits and the inducements to public patronage, and the public interest in the exhibition would be greatly increased. The question of financing the purchase is an important consideration; but with concentration of the business ability and interest of the entire community—urban and rural—upon the problem, it could be solved. One director has tentatively suggested that as a contribution to the price, from one side of King Edward Park, a row of building lots be taken and sold. This reduction of area would be compensated by the addition of 30 acres of recreation park with a stone's throw, for in the interval of exhibitions, the whole exhibition park would be available for recreation and general park purposes.

This reference to parks suggests that the city might well take a liberal share in the enterprise, which would have the effect of adding thirty acres to the park area of the city, especially to South city, which is not any too well served with parks. It is to be remembered that Peterborough with seven fine parks, has never spent a dollar in purchase except for a part of the smallest, King Edward Park, and without a charge of extravagant discharge of duty, the city could well afford to assist liberally in the purchase of the Exhibition Grounds for park purposes in part; especially as at the same time it would be serving the commercial, and social, and other interests of the city in a very substantial way. The county might also consistently take a share, considering the large interest the farmers have in a successful exhibition. The business men of the city, who would be materially benefitted, might well take an active interest in the matter.

There will soon be a meeting of the directors of the Exhibition, and no doubt the matter of the puchase of exhibition park will receive attention. If the matter is dealt with in a practical manner, doubtless something practicable will be evolved; or if not, an interest will be created that will lead to effectul action at an early date. There is need for some prompt action, bearing in mind that the present lease is on the point of expiry and, that unless something is done in the way of purchase, the exhibition will be homeless, and the city and county will be deprived of the benefits of an institution, which rightly managed, can be turned to great public advantage, and will suffer loss of credit for public spirit and enterprise, in the eyes of, in this regard, more progressive communities around us.

CANADA SOUND.

The war has hit Canada hard in some ways. We have lost to productive labour a large number of our best citizens; we have spent a great deal of money in providing munitions and other things. A large proportion of our people have been busy in work that yielded no monetary profit, but withdrew a good deal from productive circulation. Yet with all this the soundness of Canada's commercial, industrial and financial condition has been demonstrated. We have a fair share of prosperity, and, considering conditions, a splendid share of prosperity. We have no reason to be discouraged over home conditions. Yet there are some that are inclined to take the gloomy view. An Ottawa journal condemned the optimistic ring of a business circular issued by a city firm, and declared that it was "pure but pleasant nonsense." The circular so criticised was intended to demonstrate "visible evidence of Canada's prosperity and financial strength," and was expressed in these words:

The field crops of Canada this year are greater than in any year since Confederation.

The savings of the Canadian people are greater than in any period since Confederation.

The position of the chartered banks is stronger than in any period since Confederation.

Many manufactories are busier, and more mills, factories, machine shops, and foundries throughout the Dominion are being operated 24 hours a day than in any other year since Confederation.

The United States has a plethora of gold seeking investment. Already New York has purchased millions of dollars of Canadian securities and has millions of gold for future purchases.

The anomaly of the present situation is that while Canada played no part in the events that precipitated the European war she will be the innocent beneficiary.

This may be optimistic; but can one paragraph of the above be logically and successfully challenged. Optimism is better than pessimism at any time, especially the optimism that encourages to larger and more persistently energetic effort. Our country has been subjected to severe test, and it has stood the test well. With all the hindrances, with all the diversion of national effort, it can be truthfully said that Canada is at present producing more of what it is consuming, and exporting more manufactured and agricultural products, than in any past year of our history since Confederation. Canada is sound, in wind and limb, as the sportsman says of his horse; and more than that, sound at heart—willing to see and meet her duty, and under divine Providence, able to successfully do the day's work from day to day, while we do bravely and well, and with reasonable adequateness, a special national and imperial duty.

BETTER UNDERSTANDING.

The American liner St. Paul, observing a German submarine approaching, put on full steam ahead, and although pursued made good her escape. Washington is much gratified by the incident, which brings a better understanding with Germany, showing, as it does, that the Germans will not sink American liners if they can't catch them.—Star.

SIR WILFRID LAURIER HIMSELF AGAIN.

Irrespective of political feelings, the people of Canada will be glad to hear that Sir Wilfrid Laurier is rapidly recovering from an illness that was of a serious character, verging toward danger. The nature of his trouble made it more than ordinarily persistent as a hindrance to public speaking, and one reason for congratulation is the well-founded expectation that he will soon be able to resume his exceptionally moving appeals to Canadian young men to enlist for service in the present war. This is a self-imposed duty he is eminently qualified to discharge, for he has been all his adult life an intelligent student and a sincere admirer of British political institutions.

It would be a mistake to suppose that Sir Wilfrid is merely a facile orator; as a matter of fact, he is a very cogent reasoner on questions of higher politics, and he is exceptionally equipped with a fund of historical knowledge on which he can confidently draw for apt illumination of his theme, whatever it may happen to be. He has an exceptionally thorough command of both French and English on the public platform, and has a warm place in his heart for both countries: "La Belle France" and "Merrie England," now leagued together in an alliance which Germany is doing her best, and her worst, to make perpetual.—The Globe.

GERMANY BLOCKED RUSSIA'S PLANS FOR A FREE POLAND

The following article was written from Petrograd to the Chicago Tribune, by N. L. Piotrowski, formerly city attorney of Chicago and one of the best known Poles in the United States. It is a remarkably illuminating story, showing as it does how the Germans blocked Russia's move to free the Poles after the Russo-Japanese war.

The article says: In the absence of Mr. Sasonoff, the minister for foreign affairs, I was granted an audience with the vice-minister, Mr. Artsimowitch, in the office of the ministry. I was delighted when I learned that Mr. Artsimowitch, who spent ten years as consul-general in San Francisco, Cal., speaks English fluently. I also learned that he is friendly to Americans, which is natural, for his wife is an American. He was recently elevated to the high office which he now occupies.

I told his excellency that the 4,000,000 American Poles, who still love their mother country, are deeply interested in the fate of Polland, that they were happy when they read the proclamation that was issued by Grand Duke Nicholas to the Poles, promising them that the three parts into which Poland has been divided would be united into one country and one nation and that united Poland would be made free and independent.

Further, I told him that there were many in America who have no faith in the promise uttered by the grand duke; that they are trying to discredit Russia and to create an impression that this promise was only to obtain the good will of Poles during the war; that they assert the proclamation was never sanctioned by the Emperor or by his ministers and that the promise will never be kept. In view of the circulation of such stories, I told him I came to Russia, to Petrograd, to learn the truth from authentic sources and to publish it.

Work for United Poland.

The minister, after listening to me attentively, told me frankly and positively that the promises made by Grand Duke Nicholas were made with the full knowledge and sanction of the ministry. He said that at the present time there is in Petrograd a committee composed of representative Poles and Russians, holding daily sessions under the presidency of the Prime Minister, whose duty it is to formulate a plan for the establishment of the autonomy of the Kingdom of Poland in accordance with the grand duke's proclamation. The Emperor sent to that commission, through Prime Minister Goremikin his felicitations and best wishes in their labour.

The minister further assured me that all the representative Russians favour the establishment of Poland's autonomy, because the Poles, being of the same race as the Russians, will become Russia's friends and the accomplishment of that scheme will benefit Russia as well as Poland.

Will Reconquer Galicia.

When I asked the minister: "In view of the fact that the Germans are occupying at present the greater part of Poland, how can Russia make her promise good in making Poland free?" he gave me the following answer:

"This is only the beginning of the war. Ultimately the Germans will be driven not only out of Poland, but beyond their frontiers, and Russia will wrest Posen from Germany. The withdrawal of the Russian forces from Galicia is only temporary and Russia will reconquer Galicia from Austria."

I then asked: "Why has not the government done something already in putting into effect the promises made nearly a year ago; why has the government waited so long?"

"There are several reasons for that," answered the minister. "To bring about a change such as is contemplated is not a small matter and it requires time and attention and the government's time and attention have been mostly taken up by the war. But the chief reason is that Poland is the terrain of war where of necessity the chief commander is almost absolute ruler. Nothing can be done in that country without his consent. Such are the conditions and the war created those conditions. Therefore no permanent change in the government can be established in Poland until peace is established."

Berlin Prevented Freedom.

I learned here from reliable authority, but, for obvious reasons I am not at liberty to disclose the name of my informant, that Poland would have been granted autonomy after the war with Japan, but the government was prevented from carrying out its purpose through influences that came from Berlin.

The granting of autonomy to Poland would have created difficulties with the German government, which did not want to see the Poles in Russia treated better than were the Poles in Germany. Granting autonomy to Poland might have been the spark to cause the conflagration that the Serajevo affair did and this war might have been brought on ten years sooner.

It was plainly intimated that any concessions granted to the Poles by the Russian government would be regarded by the Berlin government as a cause for war.

Mr. W. H. Price, M.P.P., has returned from England and announces that Asquith "is a politician, not a statesman." One wonders whether Mr. Price learned this by thorough cross-examination and study of Mr. Asquith or did somebody tell him so. A month ago Sir Herbert Holt returned to Montreal from England and announced that Lord Kitchener was a failure. How do our tourists, when in London, go about it to weigh these men and find them wanting?—Toronto Star.

Decrease in Population.

It is estimated that there will be a decrease in the population of at least two hundred, according to the figures obtained by the Assessor's Department.

WITH OTHER MUNICIPALITIES

Something like $4,00,000 has just rolled into the Toronto civic treasury. Yesterday was the last day for payment of the second instalment of this year's taxes. The total amount involved was $4,54,000. The last instalment is due November 24th.

Weston Action for Trial.

The action launched over a year ago by the Weston Council to recover money alleged to have been overpaid the contractors on the sewerage system will likely come to trial this fall. Complaint has also been made respecting some of the construction of the plant, and htis will likely be gone into in connection with the trial. The action is the outcome of a visit paid by a number of ratepayers to the Attorney-General.

Bix—"Getting in debt is as easy as falling out of an airship." Dix—"Yes; and getting out of debt is about as easy as falling up to it again."

"They asked me to their reception, but it wasn't because they liked me; it was only because I can sing." "Oh, I'm sure you're mistaken."

TOO EARLY TO TELL.

Two colored teams were playing; a white man who had nothing else to do stopped to witness the game. After having watched the playing for a few minutes he approached the captain of one of the teams and asked: "Are you having a good game?"

"Yes, sah, we done been having a good game," replied the captain.

"What's the score now?" asked the white man.

"Sixteen to nothin', now, in their favour," was the reply.

"Oh, they are outbatting you, are they not?" said the white man.

"I don't know, sah, for we all ain't been to bat yet," replied the captain.—Concordia Kansan.

"Poverty, my dear, is no disgrace." "I know that; but, on the other hand, you know, it's nothing to brag about, either!"

A STRIKING APPEAL TO THOSE AT HOME TO DO THEIR BIT

I suppose there is hardly a woman or man at home who would not be pleased and proud to offer a British sailor or soldier a pipe of tobacco or a cigarette. There are many ways of fulfilling this desire, but there is no way better than that of subscribing to the Tobacco Fund.

There are three solid reasons why we ought to help this fund.

Firstly, our sailors and soldiers want tobacco and cigarettes.

Secondly, our sailors and soldiers deserve tobacco and cigarettes, and it is for us to see that they get them.

Thirdly, the Tobacco Fund can send more tobacco and cigarettes for 25 cents than one could send privately for nearly three times the money, plus postage.

That our sailors and soldiers want cigarettes takes no proving. The pipe and the "fag" are the universal comforters. We have only to think of the weary vigil in the North Sea or in the trenches; the tired men tramping back from the weary labour; the brave lad with newly dressed wounds awaiting the ambulance; the dusty column halting after a long march, to realize that a cigarette at the front is worth more than a packet at home.

But any soldier who has longed for a smoke in places where money could not buy one might put his case more convincingly than I can. Here is a postcard from "Somewhere in France":

Dear Sir,—Very many thanks for your kind gift of smokes just received. The receipt of same was most welcome, especially to the poor chaps who pass through our hands wounded. A cigarette goes a long way to increase comfort in our civil life, but now their value increases beyond calculation.

Here is another:

Dear Sir,—Thanks very much for your tobacco and cigarettes. They were a real treat after being without a smoke for a week.

One Thing We Can Do.

Which of us at home could hear unconcerned of a poor chap wounded and weary in a strange land, "without a smoke," or of a soldier-boy fighting and working in the trenches for a whole week without the consolation of a pipe or a "fag?" Assuredly we all are eager to do any little thing for those who are doing and enduring so much for us.

And there is one thing we may always do, and do with a minimum of trouble and expense; we may send money for tobacco and cigarettes, feeling sure that our sailors and soldiers will get the full benefit of all we send.

Sir Ian Hamilton after his vivid description of the heroism of our soldiers throughout the desperate fighting in the Gallipoli Peninsula asks for comforts for the men. He asks for "cigarettes and more cigarettes." And he may ask with confidence.

The men deserve all that we can do for them, and more. That also needs no proof. Never a daily paper is published which does not contain moving stories of the courage, fortitude, and self-sacrifice of our dear boys at the front.

Danger, danger sudden and terrible, fatigue, suffering, acts of heroism, are commonplaces to the men who "prize a cigarette after being without a smoke for a week."

A man I know, a sergeant and a V.C., who has been for eight months in the firing line, and is now in "the hottest part of the British area," writes to his sister thus:

I had a near shave just now. I was in a dug-out and I thought I would write to you. I had just reached out my hand for the pencil when a shrapnel burst close to me and buried several of the men. One poor fellow had his head blown off. I was trying to dig the men out with my hands when some of our chaps came to help me. One of them said, "Sergeant, you have the heart and courage of a lion."

That man, who won the Victoria Cross for saving life under fire, has a better heart than any lion; he has the heart of a brave and merciful man. Shall such a man be left "without a smoke for a week?"

Army and Navy of Heroes.

We have an army of such men, and a navy too; an army and a navy of men who perform acts of heroism when no one sees, who do deeds deserving the Victoria Cross which no one hears of.

Truly our sailors and our soldiers deserve tobacco and cigarettes. How much to them are a few cigarettes—a few cigarettes which cost so little and are so easy to send?

For 25c. The Tobacco Fund will send a parcel containing 50 cigarettes, four ounces of smoking mixture, and some matches. Each packet bears the name and address of the subscriber, and a post card on which the soldier can acknowledge the gift.

The tobacco is good. I am an old smoker, and I have tried it.

The sailor or soldier will get nearly three times as much for the money as he would if the gift were sent privately.

The tobacco and cigarettes are sent duty free and carriage free. Not a farthing of the money sent for tobacco or cigarettes is spent on the working of the fund. Every penny subscribed goes to purchase comfort for the men in the form of smokes.

Do It Now!

If you send tobacco or cigarettes privately you spend nearly all your money in postage and boxes. If you send money to the Tobacco Fund this cost is saved. The advantage of such an arrangement speaks for itself.

As an old soldier and an old smoker I venture to put the facts before the public. The men are splendid. Tobacco is the universal comforter. Let each one of us "do his bit" and DO IT NOW.

"THE MEN DESERVE ALL WE CAN DO FOR THEM, AND MORE."

STRIKING APPEAL MADE TO THE, ETC.

soldier at the front who, among other things, referred to the need for more men if the conflict was to be concluded in Britain's favour.

A Duty At Home.

"It's the young man's duty to go and fight," said Mr. Gillespie. There is also a duty for those who remain at home. During the past year the Canadian Patriotic Fund has spent upwards of five million dollars to assist the dependents of those who are at the front. The fund through the Government, is about to make another appeal. It is to be hoped that all who can will contribute freely to this cause. The cheese factories contributed one day's make of cheese, and it is to be hoped that at least a similar amount will be subscribed when the next appeal is made. The money subscribed to the fund is administered almost without cost. The money donated by the cheese factories was administered locally and every dollar's worth was practically worth two dollars, when it reached the men in the trenches. You may rest assured, said the speaker, that all money subscribed to this fund will be well and honestly spent.

Should Germany Win.

"We have sent a large number of men to the front who have fought in many a glorious fight and have brought Canada to the front as a nation. If Germany should win none of you men in this hall would be allowed the liberties you now enjoy," said Mr. Gillespie in conclusion.

A Momentous Struggle.

The struggle that is going on now throughout the civilized world is one of the most momentous struggles that the world has ever known, said Mr. D. O'Connell. Out on those battle fronts the grim struggle continues day by day. Living here in this peaceful Canada it is hard to realize that each day this war continues, ten thousand human lives are wiped out. It is not a war going on between foreign countries. It is a war in which Great Britain and Canada is engaged as much as if it were going on in the peaceful confines of this country. It's a fight not of the English people alone. It's a fight of the Scotch people, a fight of the Irish people, and a fight of the Dominions that comprise the British Empire. The war originated with a dispute between Austria and Serbia. Lord Grey did all within his power to avert the catastrophe that threatened the world. Belgium's neutrality was violated and as a matter of honour and necessity, Great Britain was forced to take up arms.

The Worst Sufferer.

Belgium has been the worst sufferer of all the countries involved, continued Mr. O'Connell. There was an idea prevalent throughout Great Britain during the early stages of the war that some great power would assert itself and the war would suddenly come to an end. This has not happened. Germany has succeeded in massing huge armies on all fronts and has invaded the territory of other countries, including Belgium, France and Poland. Belgium could have acceded to the demands of Germany and have allowed the enemy to pass through unmolested. The other alternative was to resist such an effort, which she did at an appalling cost. She preferred to preserve the integrity and honour of the nation. The enemy invaded Belgium with between three and five million men. These sacreligous huns swept everything before them without fear of God or man. They burned down the homes while the peasants were driven across the border into Holland, where they were compelled to accept the bounty of a strange country. They entered the sacred places of worship and outraged God's chosen people.

Flocked to the Colours.

It is no wonder that the soldiers of Ireland have flocked to the colours in thousands to avenge the atrocious acts of the Germans. Since December last the lines have been extended from Switzerland to the sea, where ever since the Allies have been held in a vise as it were. While they held the Allies steadfast they withdrew from forty to fifty per cent. of their armies and augmented by the Austrian forces have driven back the Russians at the rate of five miles a day. Their present intention is to drive the Allies off the Gallipoli Peninsula, then return to the western front, and by concentrated effort, break through to the sea and then attack the British coast. If they succeed in doing that it means the total destruction of things which if they did not exist would make life intolerable.

Time Is At Hand.

The time has come now gentlemen, said Mr. O'Connell, when we must make one united effort if we are to avert the impending result. If our civilization is to be preserved every man and woman must make some form of sacrifice. I don't want to assume the terrible responsibility of doing or saying something that might result in the loss of a human life. I am doing this because I feel it is my duty. I say to those men who are able to fight, and who regard their country in the proper light, it is their duty to enlist in the interests of the country.

The Duty At Home.

Those who are unable to go and fight have other duties they can perform. The Canadian Patriotic Fund has been established to assist the dependents of those who are at the front. Men who remain at home must be imbued with the idea that they must make some sacrifice. They must see that the dependents of the soldiers are provided for. One hundred and fifty thousand men have joined the colours in Canada. Before the winter is over Canada will have raised two hundred thousand men. It must be apparent that each of us must realize our proper sense of duty.

"With that proper appreciation of the rights which you enjoy in the Township of Ennismore, you will fight for the right to live as free men, and enjoy all those sacred heritages which British traditions stand for."

Hot Curling Iron Goes —No More Broken Hair!

(Beauty's Mirror.)

Every woman knows that continual use of the hot curling iron means brittle, blistered, parched, dead looking hair with burn, uneven ends. There's no need of anyone using that instrument of torture, now that we know what can be accomplished by the occasional application of ordinary liquid silmerine. This is not only more effective, giving the hair a fluffier and more lasting curl but tends to promote its health, lustre and beauty. Any druggist can supply silmerine in liquid form and a few ounces will last for many months, so it is quite economical to use.

The approved way is to part the hair in several strands and with a clean tooth brush apply the liquid the full length of each strand. The over-night transformation is agreeably surprising to one who has never tried this simple and harmless method.

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

INTEREST IN BOER LEADER

Englishmen Hopeful That Botha Will Soon Pay Visit to London

CRIPPLED GEN. BULLER

LONDON, Sept. 25.—Englishmen are speaking of Southwest Africa as "our new colony" and there is a lively hope that General Louis Botha, Premier of South Africa, conqueror of the Boer War, there were many will come to London, where there is great interest for him. When Kitchener and General Botha were discussing terms of peace toward the close of the Boer War, there were many fruitless interviews before a working basis was agreed upon. At the end of one of these ineffective discussions Botha shrugged his shoulders, rose, and remarked that he must be off. "There's no hurry," Kitchener answered pleasantly. "You haven't a train to catch, you know."

"But that is just what I have," replied Botha. And the next morning the Chief of Staff reported a successful Boer raid on a British armored train on the Delagoa line, only a few miles off. Botha had "caught his train"!

In the Boer War Botha proved himself a military commander of the finest order, yet he was no general by profession. Indeed, he was a simple farmer, who left his cattle to take up arms, and laid down arms to revisit his cattle. Success in such circumstances cannot be attained without a strong dash of genius.

Louis Botha was born 53 years ago on British soil at Greytown, in Natal, and has, mainly, French and Dutch blood in his veins. When five years of age, however, he quitted British soil for the Orange Free State, where he attended a local school. His father was a sheep farmer on a large scale, and, with his five brothers, Louis used when he grew older, to help in the management of the estate. This was the life he followed till he reached the age of 22. Later on he set up farming for himself, and was elected a native commissioner and a member of the Orange Free State Volksraad, or Parliament. It is worth noting that, during the anxious period preceding the Boer War, Botha's influence was always on the side of moderation. Indeed, he opposed the war and incurred the hearty dislike of President Kruger in consequence. But once war was declared he threw in his lot with his own people, joining the command under General Lucas Meyer on October 30, 1899. Botha was one of the first Boers to don a regular uniform—a simple tunic of grey, with trousers of the same color, incased in boots that reached to the knees; over the shoulders a bandolier; and on the head a sombrero, slewed up at the side with a big clasp displaying the national motto. It was not long before he distinguished himself and was promoted from fighting general to assistant commandant general. At the battle of Dundee General Meyer, feeling convinced that the god of battle had decided against him and his forces, decided to surrender and would have done so had not Botha combatted this decision, with disastrous results to the British.

It was the battle of Colenso, however, that made Botha world-famous. It was here that he crippled Buller, when the generals was preparing for his great advance. General Meyer fell ill, and the Boer commandants unanimously chose Botha for their leader. The odds against him were tremendous—it was a case of 2,000 Boers to 12,000 British. Risking flat revolt, Botha ordered every Boer horse taken off the field, to remove the temptation of a "retreat". He staked his common-sense and intimate acquaintance with the country against a fearful odds of men and cannon as ever soldier faced.

His generalship was the talk of Europe. He seemed to have the power of being in all places at once, turning up where and when he was least expected. With 18,000 men he shut up General White and an army from 12,000 to 13,000 men in fortified Ladysmith, and kept back General Buller with an army of 20,000 men, advancing to its relief. He inspired his men by example of personal courage and fortitude. At Pieter's Heights he fought shoulder to shoulder in the trenches, and for the last four days and nights never closed his eyes in sleep.

Again, it was the indefatiguable Botha who spoiled the British victory at Spion Kop and turned it into a terrible calamity. The Boers, utterly exhausted, were slipping away one by one, and four commands were actually riding for the passes, when Botha appeared from nowhere with his soldiers, as it seemed, and prevailed upon his men to return to that last furious onslaught which spelled disaster for the British at Spion Kop.

When peace came he vigourously advocated an attitude of reciprocal trust, accepting the results of the war with complete sincerity. With the restoration of self-government to the Transvaal, he became its first Prime Minister. As such, he did everything he could to induce Boers and Britons to pull together and the same policy has guided him since he became first Premier of United South Africa.

British people have always admired him, even when he was their enemy. During the South African War one paper declared that "Botha is just the type of soldier that a great nation like ours knows how to esteem, even though he is an enemy in arms against us."

MANY OF BRITAIN'S CLERGYMEN ARE IN KHAKI

LONDON, Sept. 25.—The distinction of being the first Bristol clergyman of any denomination to enlist as a private belongs to the Rev. John E. Pugh, well-known in the west of England as the "sporting prison," who has exchanged broadcloth for khaki, and has preferred the lot of a ranker to a commission. Private John Pugh is now drilling at Aldershot and there will probably meet many who remember him as one of the finest athletic persons who ever walked on a cricket or football field.

The Rev. J. P. Simeon, vicar of Patcham, near Brighton, is another clergyman who has followed the flag. He resigned his living and enlisted in the Mechanical Transport as an ambulance driver.

"I do not feel," he said "that I can stay at home in comfort when there is a niche that I can fill, and by so doing free a man for purely combatant duties."

Possessing some medical knowledge and able to drive a car and do mechanical repairs, the Rev. J. P. Simeon is the type of man the Mechanical Transport are asking for.

The Rev. George Thomas, pastor of a Calvinistic Methodist Church near Fishguard, has obtained leave of absence from his Church and enlisted as a private in the Royal Garrison artillery. He has done good recruiting work, but decided that he could not continue to urge others to adopt a course he was not prepared to follow himself. He is now known all over Wales as the first Nonconformist minister to join the new army as a soldier. Similarly, Mr. Glyn Evans, of Dudley, Worcester, is said to be the first Unitarian minister to join the colours.

The Rev. Cuthbert T. Maclean, a curate of St. Mary Newington, Southwark, is among the most ardent of fighting parsons. He has been in the trenches for some months and had three fearful weeks on Hill 60. Now an injury to his knee prevents his marching. To overcome this disability, he has joined the Flying Corps.

Men who consider themselves to be of very great importance frequently treat their wives and children as if they were of no importance.

He—"Marry me, Liza, an' I'll be as true to yer as me old donkey is ter me." She—"Go hon, 'Enery;—don't be makin' an ass of yerself."

A witty clergyman awakened his drowsy congregation by saying: "My dear friends, I have come here to preach a sermo' not to referee a sleeping matsh."

HONORABLE ARTILLERY ANCIENT REGIMENT

Celebrates 378th Anniversary in London and Has Counterpart in Boston

The oldest regiment in the British army is not a part of the regular establishment but a militia regiment, the Honorable Artillery company, which is allied to the Honorable Artillery Company of Boston.

Both the English and American honorable artillery companies trace their documentary history back to Henry VIII., and their legendary origin to William the Red, son of the Conqueror. The London company has just celebrated its 378th anniversary, for it was on August 25 1537, that the King's charter granted to "certeyne welbiloved S'rvants & Subgiettes" the right to establish the "Guylde or Fraternitie of Saint George." This guild established an "Artillery of Longbowes, Crossbowes and Handgonnes" which had as its object "the better encrease of this o'r Realme & Maynetenance of the Science & Feate of Shoting." In return for their patriotism the members were granted the privilege of wearing "any man'r of Imbrowdery or any Cognisaunce of Sylv'r . . or any man'r of Sylks as Velvet Satten or Damaske," and also were freed from serving on juries.

Moreover, they could not be charged with murder if they happened to kill accidentally any trespasser during target practice in the "Fynnysbury Felds," provided they shouted a warning.

The company leased a piece of ground which became known as the Artillery Garden. Other towns became envious and began to apply for charters, Colchester, Bristol and Yarmouth among them, but the parent company had but one genuine offspring, and that is the Honorable Artillery Company of Massachusetts, which was founded by some members of the London company who emigrated to Boston.

In 1641 the H. A. C. obtained the land they now occupy in Bunhill Fields. In a dispute as to the choosing of officers that arose, a compromise was affected by the Privy Council. Since then, their captain-general has been either the Prince of Wales or the King himself.

During the civil war in the middle of the 17th century, the H. A. C. took no part, although its members sided individually with King Charles. Yet they attended Cromwell's funeral as a body. At the Restoration they threw off their republicanism and accepted James, Duke of York, as their captain-general. The H. A. C., on James' departure to France, welcomed with equal enthusiasm its succeeding commander, who were William George of Denmark and George of Hanover. Their hearty reception so pleased King George that he sent them a donation of 500 pounds with which a new armoury house was built.

In their Bunhill quarters there are kept relics the Royal warrant book, the drum major's staff of 1679 and some of the magnificent uniforms worn during the reigns of Queen Anne and George I. The Great Vellum Book, containing the names of members from 1610 to 1682, stands unparalleled as a muster roll, as John Milton, Christopher Wren and Samuel Pepys as well as the leading names among the royalty and nobility appear on it.

The H. A. C. is not a parade organization. Not only have its present members gone to the front, but also great numbers of recruits. A large number have been commissioned in other commands.

POULTRY APLENTY ON MARKET TO-DAY

Poultry was plentiful and fairly cheap on the market this morning. Most of the chickens sold at 50 and 60 cents each, but bids of 75c were numerous, and the buyers were inclined to wait until the price went below $1.00 a pair. A few ducks were offered at 60c each. On the whole the quantity of poultry was much larger than on recent Saturdays. Apples were another feature. There were Snows, Wealthies, Pippins, St. Lawrence, McIntosh Reds and other varieties. Prices ranged from 15c a peck for windfalls, to 20c and a little higher for better quality. Butter sold from 30 to 32 cents; eggs were not plentiful at 23 cents.

MEN OF 80TH ARE INOCULATED

peared in Police Court yesterday morning were not members of the 80th Battalion. They were Tommies' home on leave from Barriefield Camp.

Private Black, who has joined the 80th Battalion, is a brother of Ptes. Archie and Alfred Black of the 8th C.M.R.

Pte. Bill Johnston, one of the Chemong Indians who is now wearing the uniform of the 80th Battalion, is one of the best-known guides in Kawartha Lakes waters. If he shoots as many Germans as he has hooked bass, he'll be as deadly as a machine gun at the Front.

There are a number of recruits for the 80th Battalion at present in hospital, having undergone operations that would fit them for active service.

Lt.-Col. Johnston, with his usual thoughtfulness, visited the seven patients in Nicholls Hospital yesterday. Needless to say, the recruits appreciated his visit. Some of them will soon be fit to report for duty.

Unless there is a rush to-day and to-night, the parade state of the 80th Battalion will not show 240 on Monday morning, although if the recruits who have passed the doctor and those in hospital were able to report for duty that figure would at least be reached. Yesterday was the quietest day of the week, from a recruiting standpoint.

LATEST FROM THE FRONT.

Bulletin: Last evening a totally unexpected and vigorous attack was made upon the Examiner by a Hunter Street evening journal. Contrary to the Hague agreement, the opposition released a considerable quantity of gas (whether poisonous or not has not yet been determined) upon the Examiner forces. The enemy did not, however, use his heavy guns, merely sending his light untrained artillery into action, and the bombardment, although long sustained and noisy, did no damage. We are still holding our first line trenches.

Frankly, the Examiner is a little surprised at last night's onslaught from the Review. There was no intention of hurting our somewhat thin-skinned contemporary's feelings in the reference made to the interview with Col. Ketcheson. To the Examiner it appeared that the commanding officer of the 80th Battalion had said that there was dissatisfaction at the recruiting here. And we didn't propose to let Col. Ketcheson or anybody else forget that in seven weeks Peterborough has recruited 350 men for Overseas service. Hence our article which has had the intended effect. Apparently now Col. Ketcheson never said what the Examiner thought the Review quoted him as saying—all that he meant, according to the Review, was that he had heard some dissatisfaction here. And therefore, according to the Review, the Examiner was wrong, as usual, and it never did have any news except some it scissored from the Review.

All of this and some more is what the Review handed us last evening. However, the Examiner is too busy trying to secure instruments for the new band, recruits for the battalion, and tobacco for the soldiers at the Front to enter into a controversy that might be exciting enough in peace times, but that would be out of place during present conditions. Nevertheless, we shall hold the Review to "strict accountability," and a repetition of the offence will be construed as "a deliberately unfriendly act," in which case we shall write them another "note."

Mrs. Booth, 176 Sherbrooke Street, has received a letter from Pte. James Bills, who was wounded, on the 19th of March last. Pte. Bills has been discharged as being medically unfit. He has been detained in Birmingham, England, where he is working on munitions of war. He hopes to return to Peterborough with the rest of the boys at the duration of the war. Pte. Bills states only a few of the Peterborough boys are left. He concludes by sending his thanks to the ladies of Peterborough for comforts sent both to the front and to the hospitals.

The local detachment of the 80th Battalion will attend divine service at the Park Street Baptist Church tomorrow morning.

The detachment yesterday afternoon visited the DeLaval factory in their march through the south end of the city and were presented with packages of tobacco. The quartette, Ptes Badley, French, Hatcher and R. Dyer sang "We'll Never Let the Old Flag Fall" for the benefit of the staff and employees of the De Laval.

Although eighteen band-men have been recruited in Peterborough for the 80th Battalion, no instruments have been bought as yet. Col. Ketcheson has been told by certain parties in Belleville that they will furnish him with enough money to buy the instruments.—Belleville Ontario.

Rural Fair At Bridgenorth

Large Number of Entrants—Mr. J. H. Burnham Was Present

BRIDGENORTH, Sept. 25.—The annual rural fair was held here yesterday. A large tent was pitched in Kelly's Grove which contained a splendid array of flower, fruit and grain exhibits. A number of colts were also shown. A large gathering of children accompanied by their parents were present. Prizes are donated by the Department of Agriculture, under whose auspices the affair was held. Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P., and His Worship Mayor Buller stopped at the Fair on their way to Lindsay. They were loud in their praise of the exhibits. As Mr Burnham remarked it represented the blending of education with agriculture.

A SONG FOR CANADIAN SOLDIERS

THE ROLL CALL.

(To be sung to the tune of "When the Roll is called up Yonder," or "The Absent-minded Beggar.")

Words by O. Hezzlewood, with apologies to the author of the original.

When my King and Country call me and I'm wanted at the Front,
Where the shrapnel shells are bursting in the air;
When the foe in fury charges and we're sent to bear the brunt,
And the roll is called for service—I'll be there!

Cho.—When the roll is called for service etc., etc.

When the Kaiser's lines are broken and his armies out of France,
When the Belgian desolation we repair;
When the final muster's ordered and the bugle sounds "Advance"
May the God of Battles help me to be there!

Cho.—When the roll is called for service etc., etc.

When the Allies march through Prussia with the foe in full retreat,
That our hearts be kept from hatred is our prayer;
When the "right of might" is ended in a crushing last defeat,
And the roll is called in Berlin—I'll be there!

Cho.—When the roll is called in Berlin etc., etc.

When for me "Last Post" is sounded and I cross the silent ford,
I've a pilot who'll "mine field-" will beware;
When "Reveille" sounds in Heaven and the Armies of the Lord
Sing the Hallelujah chorus—I'll be there!

Cho.—When the roll is called for service etc., etc.

To the Gallant Soldiers of Canada.

It is said that "war is hell," but it does not follow that warriors must be endowed with hellish dispositions. Your present mission is as sacred as the Crusades of the Middle Ages, nay, it is more sacred. The object of those old Crusaders was to rescue the tomb of Christ from the Saracens. Your mission is more exalted. Not only the tomb of the founder, but the distinctive principles of Christianity are assailed and threatened. It's yours to prove that the Gospel of "Love and Sacrifice" is superior to "The Will to Power." "Chants of Hate" are unBritish, so are their results, viz., Louvain, Aerschot, and Senlis atrocities. War affords you enough methods of punishing the aggressors without violating the recognized rules and without you becoming a "human devil."

If in the discharge of your duty it is your fate to fall, be assured that He who "numbers the very hairs of your head" is conscious of your merit, and that a grateful country will keep you in memory and accord to you the meed of human appreciation due to one whose life is consciously spent "for others."

You may quite consistently pray for your so-called enemy even whilst pressing the trigger, thrusting the bayonet, or striking with the sword.

How to Keep Face Young and Attractive

The way to ward off old age is not to fear it, not to allow ones self to be oppressed by the dread of advancing years. Use only legitimate preventives and avoid trying experiments with preparations not indorsed by the physicians. An entirely safe and very effective way to keep the complexion young looking and beautiful is to apply ordinary mercolized wax at bed time, using it like cold cream washing it off in the morning. This gradually absorbs the withered, faded cuticle, which is replaced by the more youthful, pink tinted underskin. One ounce of this wax, to be had at any drug store, is enough to rejuvenate a worn-out complexion. Crow's feet and other wrinkles, the first signs of advancing age, may be removed by a simple, harmless preparation made by dissolving an ounce of powdered saxolite in a half pint of witch hazel. It is used as a face bath.—National Hygiene Review.

Awful.

A party of Englishmen were visiting Niagara Falls. "Aw, I say, what a magnificent volume of water," said one. "Aw, ye-as, and how it thunders!" exclaimed another. "Aw, my word! What an awful abyss?" added a third. "There's no doubt of it, said the American who was showing them around, "the Falls certainly are 'awinspiring.'"

Has One Advantage.

"My dwelling is bounded on the north by a gasworks, on the south by an indiarubber works, on the west by a vinegar factory, and on the east by a glue-boiling establishment." "A nice neighborhood, I must say!" "Quite so; but it has one advantage. I can always tell which way the wind blows without looking at the weathercock."

RECEPTION OF THE BUDGET

all eyes turned to Redmond and Dillon and the members of the Irish party who had come in large numbers from Ireland for the first time in many months and the meaning smile was followed by the suggestion in the lobby that the little finger of the Irish Party was still omnipotent in the British government.

Although every financial expert agrees that whisky tax is now so high as to make any increase fruitless and perilous, it was also recognized that any attempt to increase it would rouse the hostility of the Irish Party and the desire on the part of the government to conciliate Irish opinion made it pause before proposing such a tax.

There has never been a week since the Irish Party came into existence which has revealed so clearly the inner power of John Redmond in its councils as the one just ended. Although the party has never been so reticent in public, apart from its influence on the budget, the presence of the Irish and Dillon's speeches are the main factors in stemming the tide which has turned so strongly in favor of conscription. The movement for compulsory military service was at one time within an ace of carrying Asquith and the cabinet in its rush, and with the cabinet won over it would only have been a short step to rush Parliament into line.

Dillon, however, made two of the most powerful speeches of his life and rallied the democratic English as well as the Irish and compelled the conscriptionists to slow down.

Thus, for a moment, the conscription movement is quiescent and it is the general impression that it will never be carried. The radicals and Trade Unionists, the chief opponents of the movement, held a great hope that the popular methods of recruiting which are now in use will succeed in bringing at least another million men into Kitchener's army within the next twelve months.

The other day I received a visit from a very interesting man who represented a type I have never met before. He was an Austrian Croat, who had at one time been a deputy to the Hungarian Parliament in Budapest and at the moment was an exile in London to avoid imprisonment of perhaps worse at the hands of the Austro-Hungarian authorities. He had, before reaching London, been to several other capitals of Europe where he had been received by all the chief ministers, as he was entitled to be, for he is the representative of a great and powerful though in a sense new movement: the movement of the Jugo Slavs of Austria. Jugo means young and this movement is the organized effort of the present generation of southern Slavs to take advantage of the present upheaval in Europe to prosecute to success their long cherished ideas.

As I heard this gentleman state thoroughly the purpose of his party I became painfully aware of more ignorance than was creditable to me as to one of the greatest of the new problems which this war has brought forth.

The first misconception of which I had to get rid, that is so popular in England as elsewhere, as to the real character of Serbia. It has been regarded by all of us a small though heroically gallant nation, something in isolation from all western Europe and merely one of the many small states of the Balkans.

The real conception of Serbia is that it is the Motherland and the banner bearer of a race numbering something like 25,000,000; that, in short, there is a small Serbia and a greater Serbia, the greater Serbia being outside its own frontier.

The purpose of every single Serb of all these 25,000,000 is that out of the Europe disintegrated by the present war, all these Serbs shall be combined into one kingdom making up the Greater Serbia.

For years I have been a student of Austrian newspapers and politics and I have already learned from these papers though they all represented German and Magyar ascendancy that Austria had not one but a dozen Irelands, and that in all these Austrian Irelands there was practically the same problem as in my own country, namely; the substitution of native self-government for alien rule and that we should never have a real free Europe until these different nationalities were given racial equality and freed alike from German and Magyan oppression. But until I meet this visitor for the Jugo-Slav organizations I did not associate this Slav moment in Austria with Serbia.

The history of this movement is especially interesting to me as an Irishman, for the analogies with Irish life are extraordinarily close. For instance, the Croat is a Serb just as much as the Serb, speaking the same tongue, although it is printed in a different alphabet, and having the same blood. There is this momentous difference, however that the Croat is a Catholic and the Serb an Orthodox. Until some years ago this difference of religious faiths led to conflicts between the Catholic Croat and the Orthodox Serb just like the conflict between the Orangemen in Ulster. There was even this additional likeness; on certain days of the year in the towns of southern Hungary, as in Belfast in northern Ireland, the Croat wrecked the shops of the Serbs and the Serbs wrecked the shops of the Croat.

A great Catholic, Bishop Strossmeyer, whom I remember as a powerful figure in the Vatican conclave at Rome which proclaimed Papal infallibility, was the first to make the attempt to sink these religious differences in the common cause of the emancipation of the Serb race. The movement which he started gathered strength as time went on and to-day Catholic Croat and Orthodox Serb are working like brothers or the creation of Greater Serbia.

This problem has even already complicated the plans of the Allies. There is very keen contest between the Slavs and the Italians with regard to many of the regions of southern Hungary. Many towns bear Italian names to-day. Ragusa for example, which are really almost entirely Slav in population. The Slavs look with horror on the prospect of these Slav regions being handed over to Italian control. Although little is said about it in the papers here, the Slav prospect that in their anxiety to win over Italy the Allies surrendered more Slav ground to Italy than she is entitled to.

Some of the troops which to-day are fighting the Italians on the Austro-Italian frontier are Slav. Slav regiments which went over in a body to the Serbian army as to brothers during the Austrian invasion of Serbia and who are at present interned as prisoners in Serbia, having begged to be released that they would join in the fighting against the Italians as invaders of Slav rights and Slav territory.

I think, myself, that these Slav expectations are somewhat exaggerated, but their existence is undeniable and dangerous. This is probably one of the many secrets causes which account for the innumerable difficulties the Allies have found in rounding up the Balkan states for a joint attack on the Turks. For myself, my opinion with regard to this and all the other outstanding questions which Europe will have to face after the war is that the one security for a free and peaceful Europe is the recognition of the principal of nationality, and for that reason I have a longing and a hope that the war will break up Austria and lead to the emergence from the welter of the Greater Serbia.

This is one of the many reasons I, as an Irish Nationalist, have been so vehemently on the side of the Allies. Bitter and terrible as it is, I prefer a long war that will transform the existing Europe of militarism and of racial ascendancy to a Europe where every race will be free to develop its own national ideas, and once again right and not might will be the law of mankind.

TO REDUCE YOUR WEIGHT EASILY AND QUICKLY

If you are overstout the cause of your overstoutness is lack of oxygen-carrying power in the blood and faulty assimilation. Too little is being made into the harder tissue of muscle and too much into little globules of fat. Therefore you should correct the mal-assimilation and increase the oxygen-carrying power of the blood. To do this go to any good druggist and get oil of orlene, only sold in original packages and in capsule form, and take one capsule after each meal and one at bedtime till your weight is reduced to what it should be on all parts of the body. The effect of oil of orlene in capsule form is remarkable as a weight reducer and it is perfectly safe.—E. J. T.

Any druggist can supply you or a large size box will be sent on receipt of $1.00. Address D. J. Little Drug Co., Box 1288, Montreal, Can.

FRENCH LAUD THE WORK OF THE BRITISH FORCES

Work of John Bull's Submarines is Marvellous Says Paris Report—Sinks Turkish Vessels

PARIS, Sept. 25.—A review of recent operations in the Dardanelles was issued by the French War Office yesterday, reading as follows:

"In the Dardanelles the last weeks of August saw little activity. They were marked chiefly by artillery duels and sapping and mining warfare. On 30th August our mountain cannon forced the defenders of a field fortification located in the alley of Kereves-dere to evacuate the work, and when night came our soldiers finished its destruction. During this time our artillery continued its fire upon the batteries located by our aviators in the stone fortifications of Achi Baba and on the Asiatic coast.

The Turkish artillery is capricious. On certain days it appears to be lacking in ammunition, and its silence especially that of the heavy guns, is almost complete. On the other hand, at other times its bombardment of our zone is as abundant as possible. We have suffered only material damage and of small importance.

"The work of our aviators on the Bay of Akbachi Sliman, the principal point of debarkation for Turkish supplies and reinforcements for the southern zone, has been happily completed by the fire of the fleet. Many vessels have been thus sunk by our Allies, and the Turks have been forced to abandon the work of debarkation during the daytime.

"The British submarines, whose activity in the Sea of Marmora is marvellous, have accomplished even in the Straits some difficult operations.

"On the 29th of August they sank two Turkish transports in the Bay of Akbachi Sliman and two others between Nagara and Gallipoli.

"In the northern zone our valiant Allies obtained on 21st August a particularly advantageous result in effecting the junction of the troops debarked at the Bay of Suvla with those occupying the heights dominating Gaba Tepe."

Improvements in Business College

anitary Comforts Combined With Proficiency in Instruction

A recent visit to the Peterborough Business College revealed a marked change in the well-kept and orderly appearance of the interior. The school shows a bright and healthful atmosphere, well lighted and ventilated. The walls have been treated to a pleasing tint of maresco, and the windows and woodwork have all undergone a thorough cleaning. Since Mr. McKone has assumed the management, a thorough renovation of the college has taken place, and students enjoy the advantage of perfectly sanitary premises for study.

In an interview with Mr. McKone, it transpired that he is having numerous applications for students to fill positions in business offices. This college has in the past helped hundreds into good positions and good salaries; and it would seem that experienced students, whose proficiency can be vouched for, are still being inquired for at this school. Because of the thoroughness of the instruction, business men have come to repose confidence in the students. The moral is: That young men and young women who desire to learn to do well those things which business men require, have an excellent opportunity of finding good positions through spending a term or two at the Peterborough Business College.

"MAT WALTON'S BEAR"

An Exciting Incident of The Early Fifties in North Monaghan—The Whole Settlement "in At The Death"

Many of us look back to our childhood days as the happiest of our lives, and our children never tire, or rather we never tire, of prosing over their incidents, time after time. In like manner stories of the childhood of our country are full of interest.

Last night, a lady whose memory goes back many, many years in the history of North Monaghan, in a reminiscent mood, spoke of the earlier days, and the different conditions from our own times. She told of the time before matches were invented; when flint and steel, and punk were the only means of kindling fire, and borrowing fire from a neighbour.

Prices in the early days were extremely moderate; farmers tilled their land to make a living, not to make money.

In the early days there were few doctors in Peterborough, and for a long time they had to be brought from Cobourg. At last a Dr. McNabb, a Scotchman, settled in Peterborough. He was called to attend a farmer who had suffered from a fall from a loft. After three six-miles visits—going and coming—made on horse-back from Peterborough—he was asked the cost of the cure—"Oh! bring me a bag o' tatties when ye come to town"—a far different fee from those of today: a bag of potatoes was worth ten-pence—20 cents.

In those days, about sixty-five or seventy years ago, the abundant timber harboured many bears; and pig-pens had to be barricaded against them. This brought to the lady's mind a true story of a bear hunt, known popularly in the neighbourhood for a generation afterwards as

Matt. Walton, as he was called—when every man and woman in the primitive civilization was spoken of by their Christian names—lived in North Monaghan, on the quarter line, his farm, a "long hundred," reaching from the boundary to "Breally's school-house."

One rainy night Mr. Walton and his wife returned from town, sheltered by a big umbrella with a handle the size of of a corrugated "pop" bottle, which was placed in the porch, in the rear, to dry.

After supper they went to bed and about midnight Mr. Walton was wakened by some noise. It was a very windy night and, rising to investigate, he saw through the window at the back of the house a huge, black-moving object. It did not need the fact that a giant black bear had been shot on the next farm, a short time previously, to tell him that a bear was prowling in the big field behind the house.

He roused his "hired man" and his son, and sent them to beat up all the neighbours to join in the bear hunt. From the first houses visited men were sent out on horse back to carry the fiery cross through the settlement.

The result was that in an hour or two, all the neighbours within three miles radius had come through wind and rain, and darkness and stump-studded roads to the hunt. They were armed with guns and pitch-forks, principally pitchforks. They cautiously entered the field where the bear had been seen and formed a semi circle of very careful strategic advance towards the enemy which they saw, with uneasy eyes and quick-beating hearts, as he moved about, sometimes rising on his haunches—to their frightened eyes—a height of six feet. The enveloping movement was not very vigorously pushed, and the semi-circle of pitchforks, in trembling hands, didn't close in with any great unpetuosity. At last one, John Foster, (who is said to be living in Toronto at present), made a dash forward, saying that he couldn't stand it any longer—he was going to "get that bear," and if the bear got him his neighbours should close in and achieve his rescue.

He advanced boldly and, reaching the bear, which stood its ground bravely, too, made a vicious thrust with the fork and pierced the bear through and through, bringing his body to the reeking ground. Feeling no movement, for it was so dark he couldn't see anything, but the black mass, he called for a light, and when a lantern was brought by the shaking hand of one of the hunters, it was seen that Mr. Foster, in his courageous assault, had impaled and smashed to ruination Mat. Walton's pet umbrella.

It had been blown from the porch, and its gambols over the grass had been mistaken from the movements—the crouching and rearing—of a bear.

The situation may be imagined: "Mat." Walton's grief over the ruin of his umbrella was swamped in the reproaches and jeers of his neighbours, who had been fooled from their beauty sleep in warm beds, and subjected to fruitless tramps of from one to three miles, through wind and rain and mud, to take part in a sham bear hunt.

"Mat. Walton's bear" was a by-word and an endless subject of yarns at husking bees, apple bees, threshing bees and logging bees for years, and a synonym for any story of doubtful probability.

Most, if not all, of the participants in this homeric midnight-hunt have passed to the happy hunting grounds where all mistakes are rectified and compensation made for all earthly disappointments.

ECZEMA AND SORE EYES.

"My daughter suffered from inflamed eyes and eczema on her head," writes Mr. H. W. Lear, Port Planford, Nfld. "The child was in a bad state and suffered cruelly. The doctor failed to help her and on recommendation of a friend, I used Dr. Chase's Ointment, which made a complete cure. With a grateful heart I write you this letter."

Turkish Island Off Syria Has Now French Governor

PARIS, Sept. 25.—Moniteur De La Flotte, the official organ of the French Naval Department announced today that a French force had occupied Ruad Island, in the Eastern Mediterranean, west of Crete, and two miles of the Syrian Coast. The population of the Island is about 4,000.

The landing party, made up of companies from French men-of-war, formed a square after disembarking. A proclamation was read in Arabic, announcing the occupation in the name of France.

The inhabitants cheered the French. The Mohammedan leader of the natives delivered an address expressing gratitude at the efforts of the French to establish order in Syria. A French marine officer was appointed governor of the Island.

Ruad was a Turkish possession. Although but 800 yards in length, it affords the best shelter along the coast for vessels drawing less than fifteen feet of water, and may have been desired by the French principally on this account.

FAREWELL SERVICE AT MURRAY ST. CHURCH

To-morrow evening the service at Murray Street Baptist Church will be of an interesting character. Rev. Alex. Haddow, B.A., and his wife, both of this city, will be tendered a farewell service by the Murray Street congregation. On Monday they leave for Bolivia, where they will be missionaries under the Baptist Convention of Ontario and Quebec. Brief addresses will be given by representatives of the deacons and Ladies' Mission Circle, and the music will be of an appropriate character, after which the many friends of this young couple will be given an opportunity to bid them farewell.

Mr. Haddow, who was at one time an employee of the Canadian General Electric Co., has done eight years of College and University work, and has taken the two degrees of Bachelor of Arts and Bachelor of Theology. He was for two years one of the representatives of McMaster University in the debates with other Universities, which resulted in bringing the laurels to McMaster.

Peterborough is proud of her sons who are conspicuously successful in their various callings in different parts of the world, and the career of "Alex." in South America will be watched with great interest.

Collegiate Echoes

The girls of the Collegiate Institute have organized their Athletic Club for the year, selecting the following officers:

Hon. Pres.—Mr. Brown, M.A.
Vice-Pres.—Miss L. Williams, B.A.
President—Miss A. Dobbin
Vice-Pres.—Miss L. Nesbitt
Secretary—Miss I. Knapman.
Treasurer—Miss Mabel Christie.

The girls will follow the usual athletic activities, and have a capable executive to manage their affairs.

The girls in the different forms are busy collecting chocolates or money to buy them for the boys at the Front. Some of the fellows, after putting their names on the lists, had a hard time scraping up their donations.

The forms are organized to make scrapbooks for the soldiers. They expect to send from six to eight each week. Volunteers from the art classes are busy making cover designs.

At a rugby meeting on Thursday after four, a letter was read from the secretary of the O.R.F.U., asking the P.C.I. to join the eastern Ontario district, which includes Port Hope, Kingston, Lindsay and Peterborough. It was decided, on account of the heavy expenses that would be incurred, to take no action. Meantime the teams are practising, and games are expected with teams in this vicinity.

A WORD TO OUR PATRONS IN PETERBOROUGH

It is a well known fact that this war has caused havoc in the tailoring trade especially those firms who import their goods from the Old Country, notwithstanding this, however, the GLOBE TAILORING CO. through their buying agents in HUDDERSFIELD, ENGLAND, secured huge orders for delivery August 1st and although some of these goods are a little late in arriving, nevertheless, we have received a fair amount of these shipments. This places us in a position to still supply our Well-Known Suits and Overcoats at the same price of $14 CUSTOM MADE-TO-MEASURE.

Our finances not being tied up in Real Estate, we were able to pay cash for the majority of these goods and therefore our price REMAINS AS BEFORE. Please ask to see our WELL KNOWN BLUE SERGE AT THE OLD PRICE, $14, also Tweeds, Worsteds and Cheviots. OVERCOATINGS in Chinchillas, Witney's Cheviots, Meltons and Beavers.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE PETERBORO BOWLING CLUB

The annual meeting of the Peterborough Lawn Bowling Club was held last night in Mr. Fitzgerald's office.

The report showed the passing year to be one of the most successful years in the history of the club.

Financially, the membership and equipment of the club for the coming year, all indicate another record year for 1916.

The club was very fortunate in directorate during the last season.

Very enthusiastic votes of thanks were conveyed to them for their most efficient work.

Honorary Presidents—Hon. J. R Stratton, Geo. Gillespie, Esq., J. E. A. Fitzgerald, Esq.

President—T. C. Elliot.

Sec.-Treas.—John Maynard.

It was decided to hold two more tournaments, one on Tuesday, Sept. 28th, and the second on Tuesday, Oct. 5th.

Every member and also every bowler in Peterborough is cordially invited to be present on both occasions.

The sum of $21 was voted to the Red Cross Society.

Rushing Troops Into Belgium In Anticipation of Offensive

LONDON, September 25—Advices reaching London from German and Dutch sources, indicate that the German positions in Belgium and France are being heavily reinforced in anticipation of an early general offensive by the allies. Unusually large movements of troops westward have been noticed during the past week. These, observers say, are in the main fresh levies apparently just out of training.

In addition to strengthening their fortifications along the Belgian coast, which have been severely battered by the Franco-British warships in their occasional bombardments, the Germans are said to be rebuilding the fortifications at Lille. Once a strong frontier fortress the French abandoned it before the first German drive on Paris and after destroying as much of the fortified work as possible. As the key to the entire German front in Northern France, it is expected every effort will be made to provide as formidable a barrier to an allied advance as military engineering can devise.

The feeling is growing here that a widespread offensive will begin in the near future. The autumn rains are due before another six weeks, and the wet season will preclude any great operations, especially in the low lying country along the coast. This fact leads observers here to believe General Joffre and Field Marshall French will order their advance by mid-October at the latest.

Heavy Loss To Manvers Farmer

Wife Died Week Ago and His Home and Buildings Were Destroyed By Fire.

PORT HOPE, Sept. 25.—Every building on the farm of Mr. H. Sandy, Manvers Station, was totally destroyed by fire last Monday night about 9.30 o'clock. This included a beautiful 11-roomed brick residence, large barn, stable, driving shed and hen house. More than one hundred chickens and fifty ducks perished in the flames.

The whole season's crop and the contents of the residence were destroyed. Mrs. H. J. Byers and baby of this town were in the house when the fire started, and it spread so rapidly that Mrs. Byers had to leave some of her clothing in the burning building.

The fire started in the stable but its origin is a mystery. Mr. Sandy was away driving Mr. Byers to the Millbrook Station when the fire started, and when he returned every building was a charred mass of wood and ashes. The loss is very heavy, and the insurance small.

Mr. Sandy was bereaved last week by the loss of his wife, who was buried on Saturday, and his many friends extend sincere sympathy in his double affliction.

Blinded In Battle Regains Sight

Pte. S. L. Chambers of Truro a Passenger on Hesperian Given Warm Reception

HALIFAX, Sept. 25.—Private S. L. Chambers, of Truro, blinded in battle at the front, and who regained his sight when the Hesperian was torpedoed, arrived at his home last night and was given a great reception by the citizens. He was met at the train by the Mayor, Councillors, and two bands.

Private Chambers was taken by automobile to the town hall, where patriotic speeches were made. Chambers was called on for an address and made a good reply. He called on the young men to enlist and said that the boys in the trenches wondered why more volunteers were not coming, for all the men Canada could send were needed.

Chambers' sight in both eyes is now quite good.

Harvest Festival At St. Albans

Rev. Canon Allen of Millbrook Delivered an Inspiring Address

St. Albans Mission was filled last night on the occasion of the Harvest Thanksgiving. The room was very tastefully decorated, and there was a profusion of offerings in the shape of vegetables, fruit, etc., and not the least noticeable was an array of jars of jam, which will be St. Albans contribution to th Jam Shower.

The service was conducted by the missionary, Mr. C. Spence, assisted by the Rev. James Price, rector of St. George's, while Rev. Canon Allen of Millbrook gave a most inspiring address based on the words of the prophet Habakkuk in the 3rd chapter, verses 17 and 18. Taking Habakkuk as an example of faith in God, the preacher dwelt on the similitude of the history of the times in which the prophet wrote these words, to the present-day history of the British Empire, her Allies and enemies. The lesson he impressed on the congregation was to have faith in God—to learn to know God, above all to be thankful and to recognize the hand of God, not only in prosperity, but also in adversity and suffering.

$20,000,000 IN WAR ORDERS.

New York Air Brake Company Has New Contract for $3,675,000.

In accordance with the precedent set several months ago, President C. A. Starbuck of the New York Air Brake Co. issued a statement informing stockholders of the amount of war business under contract.

"The Company has closed a contract for an additional order for cartridge cases," he said, "amounting to $3,675,000, bringing the total amount of orders now on the books for the war material to $20,242,600.

"It is the policy of the company to keep its stockholders informed of any additional contracts which may be closed, so that they may not be misguided by extreme statements given out by irresponsible parties.

QUININE SHORTAGE A FEATURE.

New York, Sept. 24—Increasing activity in quinine in the early part of the week, which was followed by another increase in the price of this commodity over that announced three weeks ago, was the principal feature of the local trading in drugs and chemicals during the week. The active demand for war purposes, together with an increasing demand from domestic dealers with the advent of cool weather, has caused a scarcity which threatens to be serious. Various houses reported that large quantities of quinine were unobtainable on the market, even at a permium over quoted prices. Cable advices from London to Weekly Drug Markets report that quinine has been the feature of the market there for some days, and that it has reached a new high level.

In searching for reasons explaining the strength of Hide and Leather shares, everybody seems to be looking everywhere but at the annual report published a few weeks ago. It shows there are $4,819,000 par of first mortgage sinking fund 6 per cent. bonds outstanding, which are gradually being retired by a heavy sinking fund. These bonds mature in 1919. Further analysis of the report shows that the current assets are $10,160,614, or $5,331,614 in excess of the outstanding bonds, and equal $41 a share for the preferred stock without taking into consideration the cost of the company's plants, which are carried on the books for more than $26,000,000. After allowing for all charges, together with the sinking fund available last year for the preferred stock, were $969,974, or 7 3-10 per cent. on the 7 per cent. cumulative preferred. Business for July and August, according to an insider, showed larger sales and profits than a year ago, when general trade was hit by the outbreak of the war. Assuming that earnings for the current year are $1,500,000, and those for the succeeding year about the same, surplus revenues for the three years, 1914, 1915 and 1916, would be almost sufficient to take care of the bonds. This would then leave earnings available for preferred dividends and then bring up the question of providing for the arrears.

MARCONI, THE LIFE-SAVER, IN UNIFORM OF AN ITALIAN LIEUTENANT—Without doubt, the wireless, which was adapted and produced for the world by Signor Marconi, has saved thousands of lives since it was first used in 1899 to flash a message across the English Channel. Although the talented inventor has joined the colours in his native country, he says his business is still the saving of life, and he is perfecting new wireless apparatus for Allied ships. In an interview recently he said that if his invention was responsible for the taking of lives as Zeppelin's was, he would die in disgrace. His wife is a daughter of one of England's prominent families.

DOCTORS TO LEAVE SERBIA.

Americans Will Depart Oct. 10, as Disease is Conquered.

NAPLES, Sept. 25—Dr. Richard P. Strong, head of the American Sanitary Commission in Serbia, who is on his way to the United States and expects to take the next steamer from Naples, said to-day that the majority of the American doctors engaged in Red Cross work in Serbia would leave that country on Oct. 10, feeling assured that, because of the measures that had been taken, it was unlikely that another epidemic of disease would afflict Serbia, particularly as the Serbians themselves were now fully informed of the best ways to prevent contagion.

The entire Serbian army and number of the people had been vaccinated against cholera and typhus, Dr. Strong said, the vaccine being manufactured for the most part in the American Red Cross laboratory. By August 20th last virtually all the epidemics that had been raging in the country were suppressed, and the spread of typhus in Montenegro had been prevented by adopting energetic sanitary measures.

Dr. Strong described the work of the commission in Serbia as a "hard but victorious struggle."

Wifie—"D'ye know you're growing quite handsome, lovey dear?" Hubby—"Yes; it's a way I have when it gets anywhere near your birthday."

Smash Up—"What sent Algy to the insane asylum?" Tom—"A train of thought passed through his brain and wrecked it."

More Prizes For Bread Contest

An interesting feature of the exhibits at the Peterborough Industrial this year was the splendid showing of bread made by fifteen contestants for the special prizes offered by the Peterborough Cereal Company for best two loaves made from Reindeer Flour.

Mr. E. F. Mason, who officiated as judge, was obliged to confess his inability to so discriminate between the fine samples of bread on exhibit, as to place them in a proper order of merit. His quandary was communicated to the mill, with the result that he was authorized to add three second prizes to the list. Since then, Mr. Meyers, the manager of the Cereal Company, has authorized the secretary of the Fair to award the third prize, a 25-pound bag of Reindeer Flour, to all exhibitors who did not have any of the six prizes previously offered, awarded to them.

Germany's New War Loan Will Finance Country Till March

BERLIN, September 25.—The German war loan raised September 21st, is the largest financial operation in the world's history, said Dr Karl Helfferich, Secretary of the Imperial Treasury, to the Associated Press to-day. With a total of twelve billion marks ($3,000,000,000) and some small sums not yet reported, the secretary said it exceeds Great Britain's last loan.

"The present loan," Dr. Helfferich continued, "enables the Government to liquidate Treasury bills taken over by the Reichsbank and other banks, provides Germany with money for the winter campaign and renders unnecessary the raising of another loan before March.

"England hitherto has raised $4,662,500,000, and Germany $6,250,000,000 in long term loans, whereas England's war expenditures up to the present time are hardly less than Germany's, and soon will exceed Germany's, for England is now spending nearly £5,000,000 daily against Germany's not much above £3,000,000. That means that Germany is spending 16s per capita daily and England 8s."

In conclusion, the secretary said that a shortage in supplies of some raw materials like cotton and wool, might cause inconvenience, but the people were learning to economise. Old woollen clothing was being reworked into shoddy and coats could be worn shorter. Substitutes for some materials were being wound, he added.

"THE LITTLE OLD TOWN"

There are fancier towns than the little old town,
There are towns that are bigger than this;
And the people who live in the tinier town
All the city contentment may miss,
There are things you can see in the wealthier town
That you can't in a town that is small—
And yet, up or down,
There is no other town
Like your own little town, after all.

It may be that the street through the heart of the town
Isn't long, isn't wide, isn't straight,
But the neighbours you know in your own little town
With a welcome your coming await,
On the glittering streets of the glittering town,
By the palace and pavement and wall,
In the midst of the throng,
You will long, you will long,
For your own little town, after all.

It was here by the stile in your own little town
Father courted your mother, a maid;
It was here in the vale in your own little town
That he builded a home in the shade,
It was here on the hill in your own little town
That the school and the books you recall—
Ev'ry step of the way,
So your memories say,
It's your own little town, after all.

For it isn't by money you measure a town
Or the miles that its border extends;
For the best things you gather, whatever the town,
Are contentment, enjoyment and friends,
If you live and you work, and you trade in your town,
In spite of the fact it is small,
You'll find that the town,
That your own little town,
Is the BEST LITTLE TOWN, AFTER ALL.
—Douglas Malloch.

WEDDING BELLS

JOHNSON — GOODWIN.

A pretty military wedding was solemnized on 14th September at St. Mark's Church, Victoria, B.C., the bridegroom being Mr. William Stanley Johnston, of Northumberland, England, late of the Canadian General Electric Co., Peterborough, but now stationed at Esquimault.

The bride was Miss Adelaide Leslie Goodwin (Queenie), third daughter of Mr. Henry Goodwin of Peterborough, formerly of Liverpool, England.

The bride was attended by Miss Denis Tyrse as flower girl, and the bridegroom by his brother officers attired in khaki.

The young couple will return to Peterborough at the end of the war.

BULGARIAN PLANS STILL A MYSTERY

Mobilized Her Troops For Her Own Protection Only—Premier's Explanation

LONDON, Sept. 25.—As a "measure of elementary prudence," Greece has ordered the mobilization of her naval and military forces. Thus the action of Bulgaria in making military preparations has brought the last remaining Balkan State under arms, for Roumania, while not fully mobilized, for some time has had her troops ready for an emergency.

What plans Bulgaria really has in mind and what Greece and Roumania will do when these plans mature are still matters for speculation. One thing seems clear, however—Bulgaria and Turkey, for so many years sworn enemies, have composed their differences.

A statement cabled to the Bulgarian Legation here yesterday by Premier Radoslavoff announces that Bulgaria does not intend aggressive action against any of her neighbors, and that her mobilization is not to be construed as indicating that she is about to enter the war. Premier Radoslavoff explained his Governments action as explained his Government's action as tries adjacent to the belligerents, like Switzerland and Holland, which were under arms for their own protection. This view has been officially conveyed to the various Governments by the Bulgarian Ambassadors.

The successes which the Russian General Ivanoff has been having in Galicia and Volhynie, it is considered in military circles here, may still have an influence in more than one way in the Balkans.

A despatch to the Exchange Telegraph Company from Athens says:

"Decree has been promulgated convoking the Chamber of Deputies on Wednesday to pass an Act of Martial Law and to put at the disposal of the Government all the State railways. The transportation of merchandise has been forbidden."

SWEEPING VICTORIES BY FRENCH AND BRITISH ALONG THE WESTERN FRONT

Allies in Smashing Attacks On Enemy's Lines Gain Over 2 Miles

Long-expected Drive by Allies Started on Saturday--Results Victorious on Every Side With Thousands of Germans Taken by the British and French.

GERMAN CASUALTIES 100,000

PARIS, Sept. 27.—The British and French took 20,000 unwounded prisoners in a series of successful attacks. The British captured five miles of trenches and two villages near Hooge and La Bassee. The French seized 15 miles of the Champagne front, penetrating the enemy's position to a depth of two and a half miles. They stormed and captured Souchez and other works to the north of Arras. The German losses have already reached over 60,000, it is estimated.

GENERAL MOVEMENT STARTED.

LONDON, Sept. 27. — The general offensive movement so long waited for on the Western front was inaugurated by a series of Allied victories on Saturday morning, which were maintained and extended to-day. The net result of the first two days' operations was: Over 20,000 unwounded Germans were taken prisoners, of whom the British took 2,600. The French troops penetrated the German lines in the Champagne along a front of 15 miles and for a depth at some places of two and a half miles north of Arras. The town and cemetery of Souchez were taken by storm and the last trench still held by the Germans to the east of the Labyrinth was captured. The British forces captured German trenches along a front of five miles south of La Bassee Canal and east of Vermelles. In some instances the British troops penetrated the German positions for a distance of 4,000 yards (two and a quarter miles), capturing the quarries north-east of Hulluch, the village of Loos and the mining works around it and Hill No. 70. In Flanders the British carried the German trenches over a front of 600 yards near Hooge. The object of the fighting in the Champagne region is the railway line running from Neufchatel through Somme and north of the Argonne district to the town of Varennes. The French are now only about two miles from this railway, and once it is captured a great retreat in this region will be absolutely necessary. This railway line runs along the rear of the entire German position north of Rheims to the Argonne forest. Its capture would also necessitate a retreat on the part of the Crown Prince's men in the Argonne.

CAPTURE FORTIFIED POSITION.

The scene of the French attack is in the district around Perthes, Beausejour and Suippes, in Champagne, where in December they made a considerable gain of ground. Saturday's attack, however, backed by a tremendous artillery fire, gave them possession of more territory than they had retaken from the Germans since the latter dug themselves in after the battle of the Marne.

The fighting north of Arras is a resumption of the French offensive which took place in that district last spring. The French were able to capture the strongly fortified position near Neuville, known as the Labyrinth, and the outskirts of the village of Souchez, which, on account of its peculiar position, was extremely important strategically. The Germans, by an unusually strong counter-attack, were able later to retake and hold the Souchez Cemetery, which they had turned into a fort. As a result of last night's operations, the French have been able, not only to retake the Cemetery of Souchez, but the village itself, and push forward a considerable distance to the north-east in the direction of Givenchy. In conjunction with the successful attacks, the British, under Sir John French, took the offensive east of Vermelles and Grenay, south of the La Bassee Canal, and succeeded in driving back the Germans on a front of more than five miles, penetrating the enemy's lines at some places a distance of more than two and a quarter miles. The village of Loos was captured, while the British reached the quarries in the western outskirts of the village of Hulluch, which lies a short distance to the north. The latter position changed hands several times, being finally retaken by the British. The German reserves were drawn into the fighting by the fierceness of the British attack, thus materially aiding the French in their attack farther south to the Arras region. The push gives the British possession of the road from Lens to La Bassee, which was used by the Germans for moving troops and supplies north and south and threatens to outflank the German troops which hold the town of Lens. Hill No. 70, one of the positions taken on the road, is less than a mile directly north of Lens, while Hulluch, which also fell into the hands of the British, is at the end of the road near La Bassee. It is only twelve miles from Hulluch to Lille, the capital of Northern France.

THE BRITISH OFFENSIVE.

Another and not less important offensive by the British was launched in Flanders. This was a general attack on the German positions along the Ypres-Menin road. South of the road the British carried the German trenches over a front of six hundred yards. So far, the British have taken 2,000 prisoners and nine guns.

GREAT BATTLES STILL RAGING

Fierce Fighting Continues From Arras Northward to the Sea and in Champagne--No Other Battles Have Seen Such Savage Bayonet Fighting.

TRENCHES FILLED WITH DEAD

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, Sept. 27—Despatches from Paris and from Dutch points to-day say that great battles from Arras northward to the sea and in Champagne, raged without interruption throughout Saturday and Sunday night, and are continuing to-day.

The Anglo-French batteries are spraying the German works with blasting fire. Perhaps no other battles of savage hand-to-hand bayonet fighting.

Thousands of dead and wounded lie amid burning ruins of the village of Souchez, now entirely in the hands of the French. Other thousands lie unburied on the slopes of Hill 70 captured by the British in an impetuous charge.

GERMANS ADMIT THE REVERSES

Special to The Examiner:

BERLIN, Sept. 27 - The Germans officially admit serious reverses on the west front.

Not Known That The Canadians Were in Fight

Special to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, Sept. 27—It is not yet definitely known that the Canadians were in the great fight on Saturday.

MERELY FOR HER OWN DEFENSE

SOFIA, Bulgaria, Sept 27—Bulgaria has addressed a note to all the Great Powers, stating that mobilization is purely for defensive. She will negotiate with both sides.

The Best Crop of Ensilage Corn of Any District

Mr. W. H. Merrill who has covered a good deal of the farming district from Orillia to Cobourg since the 1st of July, states that the Peterborough district has the best crop of ensilage corn of any district that he has seen. Mr. Merrill has his eyes open to the interests of the farmers. His whole life has been to foster agriculture. For about twenty years he has been one of the leading seed makers of Ontario. From the point of merit for ensilage, he says, the beautiful rich loading with the big crop of close set ears. Where the different varieties are under test, under the same conditions, the next harvest is pretty evenly divided with the Early Leaming, White Cap Yellow Dent and Wisconsin No. 7, with chances slightly in favour of Yellow Dent for third place. This is speaking generally of the crop as the Leaming and Wisconsin are too slow maturing the area. He says there will be some very heavy tonnage in this district.

THE TIDE OF WAR HAS TURNED FOR THE ALLIES ON EVERY FRONT

Russians Too Have Halted the German Offensive in the East---Von Hindenburg Thrown Back in His Attempt to Reach Dvinsk and Riga---Italians Also Claim Fresh Successes.

LONDON, Sept. 27 — The tide of the war has turned for the Allies on every front. The greatest artillery onslaught of any war is still blowing whole sections of Germans-France-Flanders front to bits. Allied troops are smashing their way toward the railway lines, by which the Teutons hold their grip on Belgium and Northern France. The German losses in the Allied drive that began on Saturday morning already are believed to total more than 100,000.

The Czar has halted the German offensive in the East. Von Hindenburg has been thrown back in his attempts to reach Dvinsk and Riga. The Russians are on the offensive on two-thirds of the Eastern battlefront, recapturing villages and taking a heavy toll in prisoners. The Italian War Office claims fresh successes. Serbia artillery is holding up the Austro-German advance. And despatches from Athens to-day asserted that Bulgaria three days ago ready to leap into the war with the Austro-Germans, is hesitating. The newspapers called for moderation on the part of a wildly enthusiastic British public to-day. They pointed out that the Allies must have suffered heavily in victorious smashes towards Lens and in Champagne, and that to-day's official may bring news of serious reverses. They hinted that the sudden offensive movement launched on Saturday may mean only "telling out" of German positions, preliminary to real offensive, and that the present attacks may cease before night.

RESIGNATION OF MINISTER HAS BEEN ACCEPTED

ROME, Sept. 27.—Minister of Marine Viale has resigned from the Italian Cabinet because of ill-health. His resignation is accepted, and Premier Salandra will assume the duties of office temporarily.

BIG GERMAN INFLUX WHEN WAR ENDS

London Broker Writes That This Country Must Expect a Swarm of Immigrants

DISAPPOINTED WITH AMERICA

NEW YORK, Sept 25 The overrunning of the United States after the war by Germans, who will swarm here when peace is declared, is predicted in a letter received yesterday by Alexander M. Hudnut of Halsey & Hudnut, stock brokers, from their London correspondent, a well-known broker of that city.

The letter echoes the opinion which according to recent arrivals from the other side, is coming to be widely shared, that the United States, in spite of its course as to the Lusitania and the Arabic incidents, has not fulfilled expectations in its policy in regard to the war. The writer says in part:

"The hour that the first German soldier set foot in Belgium was the commencement of Germany's defeat. In fact, I go further than that, and say the ultimatum (if it can be named that) which was sent by Germany through Austria, was the beginning of the death of German strength and might.

"Germany, by revoking her honour, has met her doom and we must remember that in this war frontiers have no bearing, only men, munitions and money count. We have nearly as many men as our enemies. We shall soon have a greater supply of munitions, thanks a great deal to the United States, and as to money, Germany is bankrupt, and our credit is hardly traded upon. That is the whole position.

"Germany, in her snakelike fashion had poured out millions to stir up rebellions and trouble in all her enemies' colonies. She totally failed. India was to rebel. Africa was to rebel. In the Far East her influence was to be paramount. Millions of pounds spent in forming her empire all gone.

"But there is a grave danger that America will be swarmed with her people. America has, I think, her troubles to come after peace, and she will need to give more attention to the defence of her real people. I am not sure but what America has failed in her mission as an English-speaking nation. It is a great and grave question.

"One day, when the world reads of Germany's dastardly and unspeakable acts against all and sundry, I think the best of the Americans will regret that they did not bestir their manhood in the protection of humanity and assistance in punishing this vile war party of Germany."

PLIGHT OF RUSSIAN REFUGEES

Their Distress Described as Frightful in Appeal for Aid

LONDON, Sept. 26 An appeal sent by [illegible] morning, the letter which is a resident of Moscow seeking to [illegible] relieve the refugees points out that [illegible] describes the distress as frightful.

The Russian Relief organization mentioned in the despatch, according to a despatch from Boston, 2,000 persons [illegible] that city, is totally unable to cope. It is stated that the authorities are unable to cope with the situation as they already have taken care of one-third of the total of Russian wounded. It is suggested that a fund be raised in London and turned over to the American Consul General.

The distress "frightful," says the appeal "Women and children are in their summer clothes with winter coming. Immediate preparations must be made to provide soup shelter and warmth. The English community is doing its utmost, together with the Princess Baratinsky Fund, but it is quite difficult to meet the situation.

Moscow already has received one-third of the total wounded, and the authorities are overwhelmed by this to increase the influx of refugees. Outside assistance is vital to cope with the terrible situation.

The Petrograd correspondent of the Daily Telegraph, in commenting on the political conditions in Russia, says that the real danger that threatens Russia at present is not whether it will exceed its normal interest or other aspect of the war. Members of the Cabinet and of the Duma are said to be [illegible] conference over the situation.

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

The first time that he tries milking a man does not see why it is said that a cow "gives" milk.

A cigar in the vest pocket is worth two in the showcase.

The seasick man has but one modest desire: he wants the earth.

A careful search of the patent office would disclose the fact that house cleaning was not invented by man.

Origin of the Name Automobile.

The word automobile comes from two words, one Greek and the other Latin. The two words are auto and mobile. The former is derived from the Greek autos, meaning self, and the latter from the Latin mobilis, adverb, movable. This is originally derived from the Latin verb moveo, moveto, movi, motus, meaning to move. We are unable to say who first suggested the name for self propelled vehicles.

For Bachelors.

"My fortune is made!" exclaimed the inventor.

"What is it now?"

"DEATH IN THE POT."

"Death in the pot." That sentence condenses the story of a tragedy. A little family gathering. A fine dinner cooked in the large copper kettle long disused, and the entire family poisoned by the accumulated verdigris. The story was told by the newspapers. The moral of it is, that the purest of food, put into a foul vessel, may become a minister of death.

If the stomach is diseased it is like the poisonous kettle, which taints everything that goes into it. The symptoms are irregular appetite, undue fullness after eating, distressed feeling in the stomach, of fluttering and sinking sensations, palpitation, dizziness, ringing in ears, sour or bitter risings and constipation. Not all these symptoms may be present at the same time, but any of them show disease in the digestive or alimentary tract.

The intimate relation of the stomach to the blood, heart, liver, and lungs makes it a medicinal maxim, "Start with the stomach." It is upon this principle that Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery effects so many and such remarkable cures. It cleanses the stomach and the system is cleansed. It increases the action of the blood-making glands, and the body is enriched by the purified blood. It's a tonic and body builder that strengthens the digestive or nutritive organs and these strengthen the whole body by increasing the quantity and quality of its nourishment. It carries off the poisonous, effete matter. In this way it re-establishes health, banishing the bodily aches, which are but symptoms of the stomach's condition.

Get Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery from any medicine dealer to-day, in either liquid or tablet form. Send Dr. Pierce, Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y., 50 cents for "Medical Adviser," cloth-bound and illustrated.

Constipation causes and seriously aggravates many diseases. It is thoroughly cured by Dr. Pierce's Pellets. One a laxative; two or three a cathartic.

He merely commanded me to give you his compliments and to tell you to go to blazes. I told him that you would doubtless be at home a little later on and it would sound very much better if it came from him instead of from me. Whereupon he told me to accompany you, giving rather explicit directions. He appeared to be in a tremendous rage."

I laughed heartily. "I must have got under his confounded skin, after all," I said.

The countess gave a little sigh of relief when I dashed in upon her a few minutes later. She had it all out of me before I had quite recovered my breath after the climb upstairs.

We sat down at the table. "Now tell me everything all over again," she said.

CHAPTER XV.

I Am Informed That I Am In Love.

POOPENDYKE stared for a long time at the portrait of Ludwig the Red. "Isn't it odd that the countess, an American, should be descended from the old Rothhoefers? What a small world it is, after all!"

I became wary. "Nothing odd about it to me. We've all got to descend from somebody."

I'll dare say. Still it is odd that she should be hiding in the castle of her ances"—

"Not at all, not at all. It just happens to be a handy place. Perfectly natural.

"Perfect rot," I added without rime or reason.

He grinned. "Nevertheless it's the general opinion that you are," said he.

I sat up very straight. "What's that?"

"You're in love," said he succinctly. It was like a bomb.

"You're crazy!" I gasped.

"Don't think we're all blind, Mr. Smart."

"We?" I murmured, a curious dampness assailing me.

"That is to say, Britton, the Schmicks and myself."

"The Schmicks?" It was high time that I should laugh. "Ho, ho! The Schmicks! Good Lord, man—the Schmicks!"

"The Schmicks are tickled to death over it," said he. "And so is Britton."

Collecting all the sarcasm that I could command at the instant I inquired, "Are you, Mr. Poopendyke—are you not ticklish?"

"Very," said he.

"Well, I'm not!" said I savagely. "What does all this nonsense mean? Don't be an ass, Fred."

"Perhaps you don't know it, Mr. Smart, but you are in love," said he so convincingly that I was conscious of an abrupt sinking of the heart.

"The deuce you say!" I exclaimed rather blankly.

"Oh, I've seen it coming! For that matter, so has she. It's as plain as the nose"—

I leaped to my feet, startled. "She? You don't— Has she said anything that leads you to believe— Oh, the dence! What rot!"

"No use getting angry over it," he said consolingly. "Falling in love is the sort of thing a fellow can't help, you know. You are heels over head in love with the Countess Tarnoway and"—

"Shut up, Fred! You're going daffy from reading my books or absorbing my manuscripts or"—

"Heaven is my witness. I don't read your books, and I merely correct your manuscripts. God knows there is no romance in that! You are in love. Now, what are you going to do about it?"

"Do about it?" I demanded.

"You can't go on in this way, you know," he said relentlessly. "She won't"—

"Why, you blithering idiot," I roared, "do you know what you are saying? I'm not in love with anybody. My heart is—is— But never mind! Now, listen to me, Fred. This nonsense has got to cease. I won't have it. Why, she's already got a husband. She's had all she can stand in the way of husb"—

"Rubbish! She can stand a husband or two more, if you are going to look at it in a literal way. Besides, she hasn't a husband. She's chucked him. Good riddance, too. Now, do you imagine for a single instant that a beautiful, adorable young woman of twenty-three is going to spend the rest of her life without a man? Not much! She's free to marry again, and she will."

"Admitting that to be true, why should she marry me?"

"I didn't say she was in love with me. I said you were in love with her."

"Oh," I said, and my face fell, "I see!"

He seemed to be considering something. After a few seconds he nodded his head decisively. "Yes, I am sure of it. If the right man gets her she'll make the finest, sweetest wife in the world. She's never had a chance to show what's really in her. She would be adorable, wouldn't she?"

The sudden question caught me unawares.

"She would!" I said, with conviction.

"Well," said he slowly and deliberately, "why don't you set about it, then?"

He was so ridiculous that I thought for the fun of it I'd humor him.

"Assuming that you are right in regard to my feelings toward her, Fred, what leads you to believe that I would stand a chance of winning her?" It was a silly question, but I declare I hung on his answer with a tenseness that surprised me.

"Why not? You are good looking, a gentleman, a celebrity and a man. Bless my soul, she could do worse."

"But you forget that I am—let me see—thirty-five, and she is but twenty three."

"To offset that, she has been married and unhappy. That brings her about up to your level, I should say. Her father ought to pay what he owes. He gave a million to get one husband for her. He ought to give a million to be rid of him, so that she could marry the next one without putting him to any expense whatsoever. I told her I thought it was the cheapest and quickest way out of it, and she said, 'I wonder!'"

"Have you been discussing her most sacred affairs with her, you blithering"—

"No, sir," said he, with dignity. "She has been discussing them with me."

I have no recollection of what I said as I stalked out of the room. He called out after me, somewhat pleadingly, I thought:

"Ask Britton what he has to say about it."

Things had come to a pretty pass! Couldn't a gentleman be polite and agreeable to a young and charming lady whom circumstances had thrown in his way without having his motives misconstrued by a lot of snooping idiotic menials whose only zest in life sprung from a temperamental tenden cy to belittle the big things and enlarge upon the small ones?

Unexpectedly I met Britton!

"Britton, what's all this gossip I hear going the rounds of the castle behind my back?" I exclaimed.

Confound him, he looked pleased! "It's quite true, sir; quite true."

"Quite true!" I roared. "What's quite true, sir?"

"Isn't it, sir?" he asked, dismayed.

"Isn't what?"

"I mean to say, sir, isn't it true?"

"My God!" I cried, throwing up my hands in hopeless despair. "You—you—wait! I'm going to get to the bottom of this. I want the truth, Britton. Who put it into that confounded head of yours that I am—er—in love with the countess? Speak! Who did it?"

He lowered his voice, presumably because I had dropped mine to a very loud whisper. I also had glanced over both shoulders.

"Begging your pardon, sir, but I must be honest, sir. It was you as first put it into my 'ead, sir."

"I?" My face went the color of a cardinal's cap.

"Yes, sir. It's as plain as the nose on your"—

"That will do, Britton," I commanded. He remained discreetly silent. "That will do, I say," I repeated somewhat testily. "Do you hear, sir?"

"Yes, sir," he responded, "That will do, you says."

"Ahem! I—ahem!"

Five minutes later I was at her door, my heart in my mouth. A sudden, inexplicable form of panic took possession of me.

After some deliberation I came to a decision. The proper thing for me to do was to show all of them that their ridiculous suspicions were wrong. Resolutely I marched downstairs.

For some two long and extremely monotonous days I toiled. I could not deny to myself that I was missing those pleasant hours with the countess. I did miss them. I missed Rosemary and Jinko and Helen Marie Louise Antoinette and Blake.

Blatchford came to the door.

"A note for you, sir, if you please," said he. He was holding the salver almost on a level with his nose.

My heart—my incomprehensible heart—gave a leap that sent the blood rushing to my face.

"Thank you, Blatchford; that will do."

"I beg your pardon, sir, but there is to be an answer."

"Oh!" said I.

I tore open the envelope.

I managed to dash off a brief note in a fairly nonchalant manner. Blatchford almost committed the unpardonable crime of slamming the door behind him, he was in such a hurry to be off with the message.

BAPTISM INTO CHRIST WHAT DOES IT MEAN?

Blessings That Are Ours As Christians.

Each Must Make His Own Calling and Election Sure — Baptism Into Christ's Death Not Completed Until Life's Close—The Opened Heavens—Powers of a Perfect Man—Results of Spiritual Illumination—The Saviour Makes Up for Unavoidable Deficiencies of His Disciples — Membership in Christ's Body—Counting Earthly Things Dross—Miraculous Gifts of Spirit Temporary—Spiritual Fruits Permanent.

[The matter under this heading is supplied by the Pastor Russell Lecture Bureau, who conduct the Brooklyn Tabernacle (unsectarian) Bible Studies, and who have arranged for its publication.]

Providence, R. I., Sept. 26, 1915. —Pastor Russell was here to-day. He delivered a very impressive discourse from the text, "By one Spirit we are all baptized into one Body." (1 Corinthians 12:13.)

He said in part;

The blessings that are ours as Christians are first, the possession of the hearing ear, when the majority of people have no ears to hear; second, the great favor of God in that He has made all the arrangements by which we who have the hearing ear might receive the begetting and anointing of His Holy Spirit. But after we are begotten of the Spirit, although we have still more abundant favor, the issue is with us. It is an individual matter. Each must make sure his own calling and election. God is doing His part in leading, and in covering, making up for all our blemishes, through Christ. The primary thing that God requires of us is loyalty of heart. We had this loyalty of heart at the beginning of our course; by one Spirit we were all baptized into the one Body of Christ, the Church. And it is by keeping this same Spirit that we are to make our calling and election sure.

Christ's Baptism Finished on Calvary

It is a good thing to be able to say, "I have made a full consecration to God." But that consecration must continue; it is a daily matter. The same Spirit that led you into the baptism must remain with you in the baptism to its completion. "Is not our baptism complete when we have taken the step of entire consecration?" asks one; "was not Jesus' baptism complete when He had been immersed by John in Jordan?" I answer, You remember that when Jesus came to the close of His ministry, three and a half years after His baptism in Jordan, He said, "I have a baptism to be baptized with, and how am I straitened until it be accomplished!" (Luke 12:50.) You see His baptism was not fully accomplished at consecration. But He was anxious that it should be accomplished, and it was completed the following day; for on the cross He exclaimed, "It is finished!" His baptism was there fully consummated.

So our baptism will be finished only in death. It may be that as we come down nearer to the close of our earthly experience we shall realize that there are dregs in our cup for us to drink, as there were in the Master's cup for Him. It is of his cup that we are to partake. But there should be no alarm. We wish to share the Lord's cup of sufferings, and we are glad that he is letting us have similar experiences to His own. The Master will say to each of us, as He said to St. Paul, "My grace is sufficient for thee; My strength is made perfect in weakness." (2 Corinthians 12:9.) We have a sure promise that covers every circumstance and condition. Our baptism into death will not be finished until we expire. Our wills must continue to be immersed into God's will unto the end.

"The Heavens Were Opened Unto Him."

Let us note how fully our Lord Jesus received the Spirit of God. You remember the account is given us in the Gospels that when Jesus came up out of the water, after He had been baptised of John, the Holy Spirit descended upon Him like a dove, "and the Heavens were opened unto Him." (Matthew 3:16.) This means that the higher things were opened to Him, the spiritual things.

As a boy Jesus had lived in Nazareth where He habitually attended the synagogue. Although He had never had any schooling, He was able to read fluently; and so it seems to have been customary for Him to be called upon to serve as public reader. He would stand up and read the daily Scripture. Not many could read. But being a perfect man, Jesus would have talents and powers above all the others; for He was perfectly balanced. During the time that Jesus was in Nazareth, up to thirty years of age, He was still reader in the synagogue when present. (Luke 4:16.) This brought Him into contact with the people. The custom was that one part of the lesson would be chosen from the Law and another part from the Prophets. In this way Jesus gained full knowledge of all the Old Testament.

We have known people of our fallen race who after one reading of a poem could repeat it verbatim. We are sure that our Lord would know every word of the Scriptures from Genesis to Malachi. No wonder that at twelve years of age He was in the Temple questioning the Doctors of the Law! He wished to know the meaning of all He had read. As He asked these questions, they were astonished. Think of a boy of twelve knowing all about the contents of Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, the Psalms and all the Prophets! No wonder they were astonished, just as were the people of His home town when they asked, "How knoweth this man letters, never having learned?"

When Jesus went up from the baptismal waters, and the Heavenly things were opened to Him, this meant, we understand, that He began to see more deeply into these statements of the Old Testament than ever before. Up to this time Jesus was a man—a natural man, not a sinful man, however. He was "holy, harmless, undefiled, and separate from sinners." The Apostle says that the natural man [even though perfect] receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, neither can he know them, for they are spiritually discerned." (1 Corinthians 2:14.) Jesus had known about these things before. As a thoughtful man He had studied over all these matters in the Scriptures, but He could not understand them clearly, because He had not yet been begotten of the Holy Spirit. But now, after His anointing of the Spirit, these Heavenly things that had seemed strange and obscure began to open up to Him without measure.

Our Lord, being perfect, could upon His begetting receive the full measure of God's mind, God's Spirit. Immediately following His baptism and illumination, His mind being active, He was driven by the Spirit into the wilderness. It was thus His own Spirit that drove Him there. He said to Himself, "My mind is opening; all these hitherto obscure Scriptures are unfolding before Me. I must go away into the wilderness alone to think over these things." And there he had a forty-day Bible study. The Scriptures imply that during that period while he was thinking of the types of the Law and the prophecies, He did not even get hungry.

Some of the Heavenly Things Unfolded.

The account states that Jesus "afterwards ahungered." He was thoroughly absorbed in Bible study. We can surmise what Jesus was thinking of during all that time. One of the subjects must have been the Passover—what it meant—who it was that was to be passed over. Whom did the lamb typify? Why was not a bone of it broken? What did the bitter herbs eaten with the Passover lamb signify? What did the coming out of Egypt prefigure? What was the significance of the overthrow of Pharaoh and his hosts in the Red Sea? What was the meaning of the giving of the Law at Mount Sinai? What the wilderness journey and the entrance into Canaan? What the fiery serpents in the wilderness and the lifting up of the brazen serpent on a pole?

You and I would not have known had not the Holy Spirit through the Apostles shown us these things. So Jesus, until He was Spirit-begotten, knew not the significance of all these wonderful types. Then, coming down to the Psalms and the prophecies, Jesus thought of the Scriptures, "Thou wilt not leave My soul in Sheol, neither wilt Thou suffer Thine Holy One to see corruption"; "He was led as a lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheep before her shearers is dumb, so He opened not His mouth." (Psalm 16:10; Isaiah 53:7.) Now He began to see the meaning of these Scriptures that He had long wondered about. He saw that He was to be the Lamb dumb before its shearers. He saw that He was to be the Passover Lamb; that He was to let evil men take His life from Him and not interfere, not even ask God to hinder them, simply yielding up His life in harmony with the Father's will. Then He considered the typical Day of Atonement—the bullock and the Lord's goat for sacrifice, the scape goat, the burning of the fat, the kidneys, etc., upon the altar, the carrying of the blood within the second veil of the Tabernacle, the sprinkling of it there, the burning of the carcass outside the camp; He saw that these were all to be fulfilled in Himself and in His followers.

How We Are Made Perfect in Him.

We are only copying Jesus' course here to a small degree when we have Bible study classes and conventions for Bible Study. We can have the Holy Spirit only by measure, can understand only by measure, because of our imperfections. But it is the privilege of each to have his vessel filled to its capacity. As you keep it full you will find your capacity increasing, so that you can contain more.

The Apostle Paul says, "We are all baptized into one Body." Again, of himself, "If by any means I might attain unto His resurrection." (Philippians 3:10, 11.) Was there any doubt about St. Paul's attaining unto Christ's resurrection He realizes the possibility of failure. "Then what chance have I?" some one may ask. We reply, As good a chance as the Apostle. The Lord manages this matter most wonderfully. Our Lord had one hundred points of character, we will say. That represents perfection. We blemished by sin, may have only ten, fifteen, twenty, or even thirty-five points. That is about as far as we dare go, we think. Humanity has fallen far below the perfection in which Adam was created.

You say, Those who have thirty-five points have the best chance. No they will not have one whit more chance than those who have ten. God makes up in Christ's merit to each one as he needs. The one who has only ten points of character needs that the Lord supply ninety points. The one who has thirty-five points needs sixty-five supplied. Where one has greater need, grace so much more abounds, the Apostle declares. (Romans 5:19-21.) It is just as easy for you and me as for St. Paul. He said, "I count all things but loss and vile refuse that I may win Christ and be found in Him." How could he be in Christ? How could He be in Christ?

Counting All Things but Dross.

The thought is this: The word Christ is not merely a personal name. The name Christ is the name of the Office. Jesus is the Head of The Christ; the Church are the members of the Body. What St. Paul means is, "If by any means I might attain to membership in The Christ." This clarifies the passage. What are the terms for gaining this membership? The Apostle knew—he must give up everything. Had he done it? Yes. What had he to give up? A great deal. He had been a lawyer. He was favored in being a Roman citizen by birth. His family was wealthy. (He used some of his wealth in Rome when he was for his own hired house.) He had a good education. Yet he said, "I count all this but loss and dross."

Some one might ask, "Do you not often feel sorry, Paul, that you had to give up so much? I wonder that you did not think of how much you were sacrificing when you gave up these opportunities. "I count these but dross, if by any means I may win a place in The Christ, and be found in Him, a member of His Body," he replies.

Then he continues, "That I may attain unto the resurrection out from among the dead"—the First Resurrection, the highest resurrection. That was St. Paul's hope. May we have that resurrection? Yes. The Body of Christ are to share the same resurrection that Jesus had. We are to be exalted from the fallen, human condition to a condition far above angels—even to the Divine nature. The Apostle tells us the conditions: "That I might know Him, the power of His resurrection, and the fellowship of His sufferings, being conformed unto His death."

Christ's death was a very special death. Other people die because they have to die, because they share Adam's death penalty. The Christ class do not die because they share Adam's penalty. We have been redeemed from this. We are dying voluntarily with Jesus. We might have had share in the future Restitution. But we gave up all these earthly interests that we might be included with Christ in the Mystery hidden from the ages—that we might share His nature and glory. For this reward we follow in His sacrificial footsteps.

What is the Holy Spirit?

Let us each maintain this one Spirit by which we were all baptized into this one Body. Let us abide in Christ. How may we do this? By cultivating the fruits of the Holy Spirit, through study of the Word and prayer. "But," says one, "this matter of having the Holy Spirit is so confusing. We have heard people say that the Holy Spirit enters into each of us. How can one person enter into another, or into many persons?" We reply, It would show that there was something wrong with your reasoning faculties if you could get anything out of that idea. It is just as the Bible tells us.

The Holy Spirit is the mind, disposition, energy of the Father. It is also the mind, energy, disposition of the Son, received from the Father. We are partakers of the same Spirit, if we have been begotten of the Spirit. It is the Lord's animating power in each one of us. It will manifest itself if we have it. The fruits of the Spirit are love, joy, peace, long suffering, gentleness, meekness, faith, self-control.

Fruits and Gifts of the Holy Spirit.

Are the fruits of the Spirit and the gifts of the Spirit the same? No. The early Church received the gifts of the Spirit in addition. The Apostle declared that the gifts would pass away. (1 Corinthians 13:8, 13.) They did pass away when the Church had become fully established. The fruits remained, and these are far more important. These fruits, if present, are manifest in the life. Meekness is one of them, gentleness another. You find that you are not so rude as you used to be. You do not slam doors so often. You speak more gently. Sometimes you make a slip, but you make amends for it. You say, "Please pardon me, I will try to be more gentle the next time." Every time you tell some one you are sorry you did something wrong it cultivates patience and humility. It humbles one to apologize; but each time you thus apologize for a thoughtless word or deed, you are growing in meekness, gentleness, and love.

If you have these qualities abounding, "they make you that ye shall be neither idle nor unfruitful in the knowledge of the Lord." You thus have more of the Holy Spirit. The Holy Spirit is not a person. No Scripture, properly translated, gives any such thought. We need a supernatural illumination to understand the deep things of God and our relationship to Him. If these spiritual fruits abound in you, "an abundant entrance shall be ministered into the everlasting Kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ."

Now, dear friends, I leave the matter with you. We have been baptized with this Holy Spirit of God. We received the Spirit when we made our consecration. We were then begotten as New Creatures. It is under this Heavenly influence that we are developing the fruits of the Spirit. This brings us into closer and closer fellowship with God. His Truth is sanctifying us more and more as the days go by. Shortly, if we thus continue on, we shall hear the Master's, "Well done, good and faithful servant. Thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things. Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord!"

DOGS OF WAR.

The following information has been taken from an article appearing in the Bulletin of the Saint Hubert Club de France, and written by Dr. Humbert, a member of the club, now in charge of the hospital at Bussang:

Ever since the Germans attached a team of dogs to each Jager (rifle) battalion, the employment of dogs in the German army has steadily increased, thanks to the close co-operation of the military authorities with practical dog men. Foremost in this respect is the Verein fur Deutsche Schaferhund (German Sheepdog Club), founded in 1889, and now having more than 4,000 members. This society, whose studbooks contain up to now about 45,000 entries, also keeps a special register "in view of mobilization." While already in the studbooks the entry of each dog is accompanied by an abbreviated indication whether the sheepdog in question has been trained for police duty, ambulance work, patrol work, or domestic duties, this special war register gives a more detailed information on the same points.

About 4,000 dogs are said to be on the register, which is carefully kept up to date. Side by side with the German Sheepdog Club exists the German Club for Ambulance Dogs, specializing, as its name indicates, in the breeding and training of dogs suitable for retrieving wounded soldiers. The dogs kept by members of the two societies form the reserve of the canine units of the German army, and their owners were warned shortly before the mobilization to hold them in readiness for requisition by the army.

While the Jager battalions specialize in the employment of dogs for patrol and sentry duty, they are employed by other regiments as well, up to ten dogs being attached to each battalion.

The ambulance detachments, which form part of each German regiment, have generally four ambulance dogs that are taken out at the same time as the stretcher-bearers go out. The breeds chiefly employed are the so-called German sheepdog—they actually come from Alsace and Switzerland—the Doberman Pinscher, the Airedale terrier, and more rarely the Rottweiller, a kind of cattle dog, and the boxer, which latter has a long strain of bulldog in him.

A Joke That Recoiled.

Professor Ikeno of Tokio university is well known for his absent-mindedness. One evening on his way from school, says the East and West News, he struck his head against a telegraph post. "Pardon me, pardon me," he said, and quickened his gait. A certain colleague of the same university happened to see this from the other side of the street, and the following day said to the professor: "I was surprised last night by your carelessness, Mr. Ikeno. You dashed against me in the street and I feel the pain still."

"Oh, was it you?" was the reply. "Please excuse me. I did not know it was you. It felt wooden." Then a roar of laughter went round the professor's room, but at the expense of the colleague.

Photographs on the Wing.

Germany has employed many ingenious devices in the Great War, and surely one of the most unique is that of employing carrier pigeons for taking military photographs. Some years ago the camera employed for this purpose was exhibited in Germany. It was invented by Dr. Neubronna, and was a wonderfully light instrument, weighing only 2½ oz. The lens was only 2in. focus, and the photograph produced measured 1½in. square. One of these models could take eight pictures in succession on a film, while another consisted of two distinct cameras. The lens of one pointed forward and the other backwards when the "carrier" was in flight. In each case the exposure mechanism consisted of a rubber bulb containing compressed air, by the slow escape of which through a minute aperture a lever was operated to release the shutter at the end of an interval of time which could be determined in advance.

Never a Spare Leg.

The cabby and the chauffeur had a slight altercation, and the former, in approved sarcastic style, inquired:

"And what's that pretty thing stuck up on the side?"

"Why, that's a spare rim and tyre in case any of the wheels go wrong—as any sensible man knows."

"Well, I've drove 'osses for nigh on twenty years, an' I never carried a spare leg for one of 'em yet!"

A WISE JUDGE

By OBSERVER

When the war between the States ended and the slaves had been endowed with citizenship, there was opportunity given for the ignorant to qualify themselves for the duties of citizenship. In one of those legists where the negroes were very numerous and the white men very few one of the latter found himself in possession of a justice's court.

The makeup of this dispensary of justice was somewhat grotesque. A judge was found who had won the cleaning of the courthouse, a prosecuting attorney in one who had belonged to a lawyer, but for counsel no one could be obtained except a few darkies who had been tried for various offenses and had by observing lawyers' methods picked up here and there bits of court routine.

Moses Doggett, late the property of Colonel Redhead Doggett, was the judge before whom a negro with no other name, so far as was known, than Pete was brought on a charge of having ill treated his wife, Susan. She as the principal witness was called to the stand.

"Tell the co't wha' Pete gone done to you," said the judge.

"Pete he de mos' good fo' nuttin nigger in de state of Alabama. Now he got free he t'ink he hain't got nuttin' to do but sit out in de sun an' sleep. I says to Pete, 'Git up an' go to wo'k. How yo' spec' dese chil'n gwine to git anyt'ing to eat ef yo' don't earn nuttin'?' Pete he say, 'I hain't got no wo'k. Yo' go on wid de washin', an' I tak' it to do owner an' bring back de pay.' I jist pick up a rollin' pin, an' I split it on he skull."

"Yo' honah," said the defendant's counsel, "I thought it was Pete mistreated Susan, not Susan mistreated Pete."

"Yo', Pete," said the judge, "yo' take de stan' an' tell de co't yo' side ob de question."

Pete obeyed the order and stood rolling his eyes about till admonished to speak in his defense of the charge made by his wife.

"Hain't got no wife," he said.

"Hain't got no wife? How dat?"

"Ma wife, Chloe, wha' I married fus' down in Louisiana, air de only wife I got. When I was sold an' separated from her an' de chil'n ma heart was broke. De nex' year I married one ob de nigger women belongin' to ma new marster."

"Yo' didn't get no divo'ce from yo' fus' wife?" asked the defendant's counsel.

"I didn't get no divo'ce. I jest married ag'in. Two years arter dat ma marster lose a cotton crop an' we was all sold out, me an' ma wife bein' sold to different marsters. Den I married anudder wife."

"An' yo' didn't get no divo'ce from de second wife?" asked Pete's counsel.

"No, sah. I didn't get no divo'ce from de second wife. I didn't keer fo' no divo'ce from none ob 'em. Ma heart was true to ma fus' wife, Chloe."

"How many wives have you got?" asked the prosecuting attorney, with a view to condensing this diffuse statement.

"I don't know. I had de bad luck to change marsters mighty often, an' every time I was sold I married a new wife."

"Is Susan de las'?"

"Sue, she de las'."

"Yo' honah," said defendant's counsel, "I ask fo' de discha'ge ob de prisoner on de groun' dat he couldn't mistreat he wife when he hain't married to de wife he mistreated."

"How many husbands have you had, Susan?" asked the judge.

"I got one in Mobile, anudder in New Orleans an' anudder somewha' in Souf Carolina."

"How do you know they are in those places?"

"I don't. I married 'em dar."

The judge looked up at the boards which constituted the ceiling in mute deliberation. He was a grave looking old darky and in his heart aimed to be just. But the problem was how to be just legally. The two in this case seemed incompatible.

"De persecutin' attorney will sum up an' de counsel fo' de prisoner will sum up, den de co't will gib her decision."

"I hain't got nuthin' to say," said the prosecutor, "'cept dat Pete won't wo'k, an' his wife an' chil'n am sturvin'. De co't oughter make him wo'k or go to jail."

"An' I ain't got nuthin' to say," said the prisoner's lawyer, "'cept dat in de fus' place Sue an' Pete hain't married, Pete bein' true to Chloe, somewha' in de souf. In de secon' place, it wa'n't Pete dat mistreated Sue, but Sue mistreated Pete when she split de rollin' pin on his head."

The judge again looked at the boards above, rolled his eyes and finally gave his decision.

"De new law of marriage among us niggers since he 'mancipation proclamation am different from de ole law. Under de new law Sue am Pete's wife, an' he boun' to tak' keer ob her an' de chillun. De co't derefo' decides dat Pete got to go to wo'k or go to jail."

"I 'peal de case," cried Pete's counsel.

"Yo' kin jist go on 'pealin' de case till kingdom come," said the judge. "Pete, yo go to wo'k. Sue, ef he don' go to wo'k you split anudder rollin' pin on his head."

"I hain't got no mo' rollin' pins, but I got some flatirons."

"De co't decides dat flatirons am as legitimate as rollin' pins. Call de nex' case."

Some new British warships and French and Belgian batteries have heavily bombarded the German positions on the coast between Zeebrugge and Nieuport. The stiffening of the Russian defence within the last few days at a point where the enormous German forces advancing into Russia were far from their own railways, and the new Anglo-French offensive campaign which began early on Saturday morning are taken here to mean that complete accord exists between the high command of the Allied armies.

Paris to-night was unusually gay after long weeks, and even months, of anxious waiting for good news from the front. The early reports indicate that the battle of Champagne is only second to the battle of the Marne, and it is hoped that its results will be as far-reaching. It is believed that during these long weeks of waiting, General Joffre has stored up sufficient ammunition for a prolonged offensive. The German losses are described as terrible. The roar of cannon can be heard ceaselessly at places well inside the Zeeland frontier, and an endless procession of German wounded is pouring into towns and villages behind the enemy's line in Belgium.

Recapture of Lille The Objective

LONDON, Sept. 27—It is believed the immediate objective of the Allies is the recapture of the City of Lille

BELGIUM

Mr. Duncan J. Robertson of Glasgow, Scotland, a kinsman of the late W. B. Scarth, Deputy Minister of Agriculture in Ottawa, wrote the following poem on Belgium and forwarded it to relatives in Canada

The Kaiser and his Warlords
They pose the words of fate
That loosed the raving eagles
Set free the hounds of hate
They thought to crush the heart of France,
To break Britannia's pride,
And Belgium little Belgium,
To take her in their stride.

The Kaiser and his Warlords
They laughed their oaths to scorn,
Their path is strewn with broken vows,
With sacred treaties torn
Who for a scrap of paper
Today would draw the sword?
But Belgium little Belgium,
Held to her pledged word.

She knew the fate that faced her—
The scourge of steel and flame,
But higher than her life she held
The honor of her name
In fort and trench and city,
Up rose her valiant sons,
And Belgium little Belgium,
Checked the advancing Huns

The Kaiser and his Warlords
They felt the staggering shock,
As when some ocean billow
Falls shattering on the rock,
They heard the bugle calls afar,
Where the free people woke,
For Belgium little Belgium,
Had foiled the tyrant's stroke.

The Kaiser and his Warlords,
They heard the bugles blow;
"Our German honor Belgium knows,
Our mercy she shall know."
Their legions, like a tidal wave,
Fell foundering on the land,
And Belgium, little Belgium,
Reeled from her gallant stand.

They burned her storied cities;
They saw and they defiled
The priest before the altar
The mother by her child.
"The maiden to the Uhlan's lust,
The babe to flesh his steel"
Till Belgium little Belgium,
Writhed neath the madrid heel.

For honor and for freedom
Her sons have shed their blood,
Their widows and their little ones
No shelter have nor food
The smoke of farm and homestead
Is darkening her skies,
And Belgium, little Belgium,
In blackened ruin lies

If, in our quiet islands,
It is no cause to feel
The taunts of the eagles,
The scourge of flame and steel,
Remember, oh remember,
In our homes inviolate,
That Belgium little Belgium,
Met the foeman in the gate'

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

LADY'S MATERNITY DRESS.

By Anabel Worthington

These dresses have a double use. Not only are they pretty and comfortable for the mature but they are most delightful for the woman who lays aside her corsets at home and who wishes to look well and not to wear a wrapper.

The foundation of the gown is a fitted waist lining. This has the centre front closing and the single darts arranged to lace at the edges, so that they may be loosened or tightened at will. If corsets are not worn it will be found better to bone the edges where these lacings are placed, otherwise the material will wrinkle and be very uncomfortable.

The outer waist is gathered along the shoulder seam and has a simple vest which can be stitched to the edge of the outer material or applied upon the lining. This leaves the neck a little open and the edge is trimmed with a wide, flat collar. The sleeves are loose and shaped to the arm, ending in a cuff at the wrist.

The waist has a peplum, which may be used or omitted. It is cut away in front and is rather full, but the figure of the individual must decide whether or not it shall be worn.

The full skirt is gathered at the top and has an extension in the centre of the front. The gathers at this point should be put in by hand, so that when ripped out the marks of the stitching will press out without leaving any trace.

The dress pattern, No. 7321, is cut in sizes 34 to 44 inches bust measure. Medium size requires 5¼ yards of 44 inch material.

This pattern can be obtained by sending 10 cents to the office of this paper.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

Address: The Examiner Pattern Service, The Examiner, Peterborough.

Would Work Both Ways.

It would be difficult to find a region where the ups and downs of fortune have been so sudden and extreme as in California. In its early days, before its production of grain was equal to the demand, wages of farm hands were high, but as production increased the prices lowered faster than the rate of wages. A farmer employed an industrious Irishman for five years, at the rate of $50 a month "and found" board, lodging, washing, and mending. At the end of the term he said to his man,

"I can't afford to pay you the wages I have been paying. You have saved money, and I have saved nothing. At this rate you will soon own my farm."

"Then I'll hire you to work for me," said the other, "and you can get your farm back again."

Where She Differed From Paul.

A Scotch clergyman called upon a parishioner, an old woman who was not possessed with many virtues, but who possessed a very varied assortment of vices. He took the latter as a text for a sermon and spoke to her at considerable length upon the subject, concluding with some extracts from one of St. Paul's epistles which he felt to be apropos.

She didn't speak for several minutes after he had finished, and he thought that he had made an impression upon her at last. He was mistaken, however, for she suddenly turned round with the remark, "Humph! That's just where Paul and I have differed these ten years."

Musical Advice.

A concert in aid of the fund for something or other had been arranged in the village schoolroom, and all the local "stars" were booked to appear. The favorite soprano, before she appeared to sing, apologized for her cold. "Then she started. "I'll hang my harp on a willow tree—ee—ahum—on a willow tree—ee—oh!" Her voice broke on the high note each time. Then a voice came from the back of the hall. "Try hanging it on a lower branch, miss."

BATTLE GROWS IN INTENSITY

GERMANS RUSHING REINFORCEMENTS

THE FRENCH GAIN NEW GROUND IN CHAMPAGNE

FRESH PROGRESS MADE BY FRENCH IN SPITE OF ENEMY'S BIG REINFORCEMENTS

Our Allies Are Attacking on Whole Champagne Front and Three Hundred German Officers Have Been Captured --Enemy Has Thrown Thousands of Reinforcements Into the Struggle and Are Resisting Stubbornly--Everywhere the Battle Is Raging With the Greatest Fury --At Some Sections Both Sides Are Relying Almost Solely on Bombs.

ALLIES HOLD GROUND THEY WON

PARIS, Sept. 27.—(French Official).—The Allied troops have occupied some more German positions in the furious battle now being waged in the Champagne region. The French attacks continue on the whole Champagne front, and it is stated that three hundred German officers have been made prisoners. Under heavy German counter attacks the French are maintaining the newly won positions at Souchez and elsewhere in the Artois region.

In the region to the north, the Allies made important progress north of Thelus, but have not yet succeeded in passing the edge of the La Folie and the Arras-Lille road. The Germans are making a stubborn stand in this region. German batteries are violently cannonading the French positions near Quennevieres farms, south of Arras, and the French artillery are making a vigorous reply. An intense bomb and artillery duel is proceeding between the Meuse and the Moselle. In the Vosges all infantry operations were halted by a great wind and rain storm.

German reinforcements have been thrown into the front by the thousands since the Allies swept forward. It is officially admitted this afternoon that at many points the enemy is successfully resisting the efforts of the French to continue the advance. Everywhere the battle is raging with the utmost fury, the most desperate fighting occurring between Brico and the sector north of the Wacques farm, both sides resorting to the use of both high power explosive shells and shrapnel. The Germans have brought up a number of heavy pieces and are bombarding the Allies, evidently in preparation for a counter-attack. On many sectors both the Germans and Allies have abandoned their rifles and are relying almost solely on bombs. The ground between the trenches in several sectors is full of struggling figures.

ROME, Sept. 27.—The Balkan situation is apparently deadlocked to-day. Bulgaria is waiting for final proposals from the Allies, while Serbia and Greece were awaiting word from Rumania, which is said to have demanded explanations from Bulgaria. Nish was very uncommunicative. Carefully censored despatches from the Serbian capital carried no comment on the Bulgarian statement issued Saturday.

OTTAWA, Sept. 27.—Major-General Sam. Hughes this morning said he had received no advices which would indicate that the Canadian divisions took part in the British fighting in Northern France in the last few days. The Minister of Militia pointed out that the Canadians are supposed to be holding part of the line some distance north of where the severe fighting took place. Saturday's attack was pressed at a point where the British line joins the French. A small list of Canadian casualties was received to-day, not indicative of unusual movements.

LONDON, Sept. 27.—The British casualties published this morning indicate twenty-nine officers and 744 men dead and seventy-four officers and 3,136 men wounded and missing in the recent operations. All English and Irish regiments. This is not thought to be a complete list of the casualties from the recent engagement.

PETERBORO' WILL CELEBRATE ALLIES' VICTORY TO-NIGHT

Arrangements Made For an Impromptu Celebration That Will Recall the Days of the South African War—Citizens Generally Urged to Take Part in the Rejoicing Over Great Win on the Western Front.

Peterborough will celebrate the great victory of the Allies on the Western front to-night with an impromptu demonstration that promises to recall the days of the South African War. Every citizen is asked to take part in the celebration and to bring along fireworks, flags and horns. The procession will be marshalled at the Armouries at 7.30 o'clock to-night and parade the down town streets. The parade will include the local company of the 80th Battalion, the 80th Band, the 57th Band, the two bands of the Salvation Army, all the school children of the city, in charge of their respective teachers, and citizens generally are asked to fall in line. After the parade there will be a mass meeting in Central Park, at which addresses will be given by His Honour Judge Huycke, Mayor Buller, Lt.-Col. Johnston and others.

The wave of patriotic enthusiasm that has swept over the city since the news of the splendid victory was received will be given vent to to-night, and every one is asked to help.

Remember the parade will be formed at 7.30 o'clock. It is expected that all the church bells in the city will be rung at that hour, while the People's Chimes will play appropriate airs.

The marching song of the 80th, "We'll Never Let the Old Flag Fall," will be the feature of the evening. Here are the words of the chorus, so that everybody may join in:

"We'll never let the Old Flag fall,
For we love it the best of all;
We don't want to fight to show our might,
But when we start we'll fight, fight, fight.
In peace or war you'll hear us sing,
God Save the Flag, God Save the King.
At the end of the world the flag's unfurled.
We'll never let the Old Flag fall."

No Further Developments

Investigation in Connection With Dummer Case is Being Continued

County Crown Attorney G. W. Hatton stated to-day that there were no further developments in the investigation that is being conducted in connection with the death of Lilian May Lindsay, whose demise occurred on September 17th at Centre Dummer, under very suspicious circumstances. The jury rendered a verdict to the effect that the girl's death was caused by foul play and recommended further investigation into the affair. Provincial Detective Boyd is working on the case, and an arrest is expected any day. There seems to be little doubt in the minds of the authorities as to who will be apprehended when the proper time comes.

WORRY OVER WAR KILLED KIER HARDIE

Examiner Special:

LONDON, Sept. 27.—James Kier Hardie, Great Britain's leading Labour-Socialist Member of Parliament, died of a broken heart because of the war. The doctors certify the cause of death as pneumonia, but Kier Hardie's friends say worry and disappointment over Socialist attitude toward the war so weakened him that the normally robust constitution could not throw off the illness. Kier Hardie opposed the war from the beginning.

BRITISH THREATEN BIG RAILWAY CENTRE HELD BY THE GERMANS

Hill No. 70 Captured in Saturday's Drive Dominates Lens and Enemy is Rushing New Divisions Through Belgium to Meet the Attack

FIERCE FIGHT ON

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, Sept. 27.—The Germans are rushing new divisions through Belgium to meet the British attack on the important railway centre of Lens.

The enemy is pouring a steady stream of shells over the summit and down the western slope to prevent the British from bringing up guns for the bombardment of Lens, which town is dominated by Hill 70. A furious fight for the possession of the hill is now on.

The German works on Hill 70 were wrecked by the steady, hammering shell fire that lasted two days before the British troops stormed the position in face of a terrific fire.

The British are digging themselves in near the summit.

High hopes are held out here that the fifteen-mile advance of the French in the Champagne region is preliminary to a great smash that will force the Crown Prince from in front of Verdun.

The Allies' successes have caused a wave of intense patriotism to sweep over London. All the newspapers gave the greatest prominence to the Anglo-French successes, and at the same time urged the necessity for more recruits and more war munitions. There was a noticeable increase in recruiting this morning.

ADVICE FROM WAR OFFICE RE TROOPS' COMFORTS

Urgent Needs Are Detailed--Authorities Issue a Warning Against Unofficial Bodies

SEND PARCELS FREE

OTTAWA, Sept. 27.—The National Service Committee, the executive body of all nationally organized women's societies in Canada, and under whose direction the collection of comforts for the troops overseas has been placed, has received an important announcement from the Canadian War Contingent Association in London. The message states that the British War Office is contemplating the formation of a central organization for co-ordinating the work of various committees and individuals engaged in supplying comforts and luxuries to the British troops. Meanwhile the War Office recommends the women of Canada to concentrate on the following garments:

Mufflers 58 inches long, 10 inches wide, grey, khaki or heather mixture.

Each overseas force is represented in London by a war contingent association, and the Canadian organization is presided over by Sir George H. Perley and J. G. Colmer, C.M.G., is Secretary. The duty of the Association is to distribute all comforts to the troops, and contributions from Canada are sent forward by the National Service Committee. The latter announces that no attention should be paid to appeals from individuals or private enterprises, but all comforts should be sent either direct to the headquarters of the Canadian Red Cross Society, Toronto, or to any of the Provincial branches, marked "Comforts" from where they will be immediately sent forward.

Sending Parcels to Soldiers.

The local branch of the Red Cross wishes to announce again that arrangements have been completed to receive and pack parcels to be sent free to soldiers abroad.

Parcels may be left at the Public Library every day Sunday excepted from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Senders of parcels are asked to mark parcels with the word "Comforts," and address in plain writing as letters sent to soldiers would be addressed.

Parcels must in no case exceed seven pounds in weight.

Mrs. Peter Campbell, convener of the committee, will give any further information as desired. She may be reached by telephone Number 252.

It is to be distinctly understood that parcels marked "Comforts" will be sent forward to their destination absolutely free of charge.

The local express companies will send them to Red Cross headquarters at Toronto free and from there they will be forwarded to their ultimate destination, also absolutely free of charge.

RECEPTION TO CAPT. ACKERMAN TO-MORROW

Arrangements Are Being Made for a Demonstration Worthy of the Occasion—Military and Civic Authorities to Take Part

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

Capt. Charlie Ackerman of the 57th Regiment, and the 23rd Battalion, is invalided home from the front, after being severely wounded by shell fire early in June, will arrive home in Peterborough on the 3.17 C.P.R. train to-morrow afternoon, and arrangements are being made to give the gallant officer a civic and military reception worthy of the occasion. The citizens are asked to cooperate with the authorities in making the reception of a scale suitable for the return of a brave citizen who has done great work on the firing line. Capt. Ackerman is the first of the Peterborough detachment in the first contingent to return from the front and every citizen should be on hand to pay him the tribute that is most certainly due him.

The wishes of Capt. Ackerman's parents were at first that there should be no public reception, but they have yielded to the wishes of the public generally in this respect. It is with pleasure the Examiner is able to announce that his condition is now such as to permit the people of Peterborough to give vent to their feelings.

The details of the reception have not been completed yet. Capt. Ackerman will be met at the station by the civic and military authorities, the bands, the local infantry recruits, and other bodies, and a triumphal procession will be organized. The returned hero will be taken to Central Park, where addresses will be presented to him.

The reception should be a record breaker with all citizens taking part.

Mr. T. W. Fenney, 270 Charlotte street, has generously placed his car at the disposal of the Speakers' Bureau for the transporting of the speakers to-night to several meetings at Centreville. The speakers will be Rev. T. R. Webb and Lt. C. Miller.

The local overseas infantry detachment attended divine service at the Park Street Baptist Church this morning, when they listened to an earnest and helpful sermon by Rev. Dr. Boyd Brown. The men, in their new service uniforms, presented a much different appearance than on their last Church parade, when the fatigue clothing were worn.

Lieut. G. M. H[illegible] of the 83rd Battalion, Bracebridge, spent the week-end with friends here.

Bandsmen P. G[illegible] and R. H[illegible] of the Eastview Band, Ottawa, are visiting friends in Peterborough.

Great coats for the troops in France are expected to arrive shortly. They will be issued after the present stock of waterproof clothing.

The local recruiting office is now in evidence at the corner of the old Victoria Hall on Townsend street, under the auspices of the Soldiers' Wives and Mothers' Club. The proceeds are to be devoted to comforts for the boys at the front.

The Examiner will be glad to receive photographs of local soldiers for reproduction. In the past few months the Examiner has printed photographs of over 300 of Peterborough soldiers, but there are many others whose [illegible]

MONDAY, SEPT. 27, 1915

CHRONICLES OF CANADA.

Glasgow, Brook and Company, Toronto, have issued twenty-two volumes of the "Chronicles of Canada." This is an enterprise that might be very properly amplified and made to include, what for lack of a better term than the moment suggests, the folk lore of Canada; that is, intimate incidents of the scenes, happenings, habits and social peculiarities of the early days of the country. Therein lie concealed a great deal of romance of reality, stories of stern struggles, with primitive conditions. In a collection of naratives of these conditions would be found many historical nuggets and much valuable material that would lighten the heaviness of dull and otherwise prosaic historical records. Such narratives would contain material for a great al of fiction and poetic writing. he present is an unfavourable time or considering such an undertaking, ut if we have many literary men or women of leisure they might find ich employment remunerative in he literary sense. It is a wonder hat this field has not been more ully developed, and more systemtically dealt with. The opportunities to work this mine to the best dvantage are fast passing away. The elder race if citizens, the only depositories of much of the information referred to is rapidly being gathered home. By every death, the viva voce sources of information are being closed.

A LITTLE FORETASTE.

If the news from the several fronts proves to be well founded, and of this there is little doubt, it represents a hard blow to the enemy at home, the pessimist as well as the enemy in Europe. We have been hearing for a time news that were not cheerful, and discouraging to those of little faith. But we, who believed in the justice of our cause, the strength of our resources, and the spirit of our forces, felt that there is truth at the bottom of the saying—"One cannot make omelets without the breaking of eggs." With one of the strengest military organizations in the world for our enemy, strengthened for actual warfare by a generation of preparation, no one thought that the work of conquest over such a foe would be easy. We had to think that there would be up-hill work, even reverses. We had to think that the way to victory was no primrose path. Kitchener, who knows, told us that he war would be long; and we have found it long, and like "Joey Bagstock," "devilish touch"; but we seem to have been not only holding our own, but steadily advancing—with the resistless but slow grind of a glacier. We have been accumulating strength, while the enemy has been wearing down under the attrition of the steadily nibbling the perpetual push we have been making. The avalanche gathers slowly, to the moment of its destructive leap, which comes suddenly sweeping everything before it. Something like this we may expect in the course of this war. It may come sooner or later, but it is sure to come. The news of to-day has given us a foretaste of perhaps greater happenings, which we have a right to expect. The Quadruple Entente forces of all kinds have been gaining strength. We have been making big armies faster than they wore out. Germany and Austria's forces, inexhaustible as they seem to be, have been decimated. We have been adding to our store of munitions, and we have our arsenals full of silver bullets, the great factor in victories. We sometimes stand aghast at the tremendous cost of war to Britain and her allies, but Britain's financial position is sound, and the sources of her fighting strength in this regard are unimpaired. On the other hand Germany is bearing a much more grievous burden. The people have had to bear the brunt of an immense annual expenditure, for war preparations during the past forty years. To this has to be added the immediate burden of the war. In the words of Karl Helferch, Finance Minister: "The German people has furnished 6,250 million dollars in the form of a consolidated loan for carrying on the war." With such a draft upon her financial resources with no aid from outside, it will be seen that in the fight of the silver bullet, as in the fight in the field, Germany is in for a drubbing. After long waiting, and weary waiting, the tide seems to have turned. The great and long-promised drive has opened brilliantly, and we are sure that we shall not have to wait so long for another winning stroke.

KEEPING TOGETHER.

It is only elementary common sense to recognize the value of the spirit of unity. We have advocated national untiy, unbroken by the calamity of a general election, as absolutely essential to the success of Canada's aspiration to do her full bit in the prosecution of our share of war and our share in the success of our cause. Such a spirit of unity in its moral reaction stimulates to increased effort and enthuissam of effort. The Examiner long ago advocated as a valuable stimulus to enlistment, the keeping of military units together, so that the spirit of comradeship being deferred to a new and powerful esprit de corps would be created. Whatever value such an arm-chair opinion might have, has been strengthened by the approval implied in the declaration of General Sir Sam Hughes, to the officers at Niagara Camp, that battalions would be sent forward as units when they had attained the necessary efficiency. Upon this point the Toronto Star, in confirmation of our contention says:

> "It appears to be quite evident, for instance, that if the staff officers of a battalion expect that the organization will presently he sent away to England and perhaps from there to the war, they will desire to build it up into as fine a body as possible. That being so, if a call comes for a draft of a few officers and a couple of hundred men, those selected to be sent away will not necessarily be those best trained and ripest for service at the front. They are more likely to be those whose going will least impair the perfect organization that the commanding officer and his staff ar trying to build up. They cannot be blamed for trying to make their battalion the finest in the service. They ought to try to do that. But those higher up ought to be trying to see that the officers and men who go abroad are the finest available, the readiest, ripest, best trained. If they can only be got by sending battalions as units, then surely battalions as units ought to be sent."

Not only will the decision to which the military authorities are said to have arrived, tend to stiffen the battalions now enlisted, but will help materially in the enrollment of new battalions. The feeling that men from a town or district will be kept together, and that the comradeship existing will be maintained, will remove some of the objections to being shifted about and dumped amongst strangers with loss of identity and impairment of esprit de corps that must otherwise come from daily association and cooperation.

STEALING IS STEALING.

E. P. B. Johnson, K.C., in a newspaper interview, is reported to have made the statement that the ex-members of the Manitoba government, who are now being criminally prosecuted for their alleged part in the recent plundering of the provincial treasury, were being hounded, and as evidence he adduced the fact, real or alleged, that these men had not profited personally to the extent of one cent by the "million-dollar steal." It is to be feared Mr. Johnson's conception of crimes committed for party purposes is one which is altogether too prevalent in Canada, and explains why offenders of this class almost invariably escape other punishment than that of deprivation of office. Our people have yet to be taught that stealing is stealing, no matter the object for which the theft was committed. Brantford Expositor

Ready Made.

She smiled so sweetly on the lad,
He thought she loved him and was glad.
He did not know the artful lass
Used drug store smiles as firm as glass;
That on her face, bright, young and fair,
The smile so sweet was frozen there.

Blissful Ignorance.

"Do you think a man should tell his wife everything he does?"

"Certainly not. It should be his business to make her happy."

Simple.

"What is good for a sick horse?"

"Medicine, I should think."

The reformer who is ahead of his time and the foreigner who tries to speak English the first week after his arrival are both apt to be misunderstood.

THE BRITISH POLICY OF FAIR PLAY WINS NATIONAL FRIENDSHIPS

It is entirely within the province of a neutral to remark the standards of hate that dominate the fighting men of the belligerent countries.

Between Germany and England, for example, there is the difference of from pole to pole. The span is marked in the one case by Herr Lissauer's "Hymn of Hate," which the human, concrete Germany composed of men and women, essentially like ourselves, will not care to remember. The other is distinguished by Kipling's fruitful admission that to write a hymn of hatred would be to ruin his reputation.

England knows better than to hate. It's a ten-yard handicap in a 100-yard dash; it's a stone weight in a swimming match; it's a shortage of ammunition on the battle line.

It is no indictment of Germany to say that she hates — hates heartily, fullsomely and without restraint. She is not old in the ups and downs of existence as is England. In two generations she has attained a military place that should have 500 years of education behind it.

England has not hated since the Revolution that cost her the Western colonies the costliest bit of pique in all history. Because she has learned to deal with men and not with territory as one reason for the territorial response in the present war. Concerning this and illustrating the conciliatory policy of England toward her possessions L. P. Jacks tells of a circumstance in current Yale Review that is much more than an ordinary story:

"One early morning," says the writer, "an officer found an ancient Burman squatting on his heels in front of his bungalow in Burma. He recognized him as the headman of a village distant fifty miles in the hills.

"Master," said the headman, "my villages wish to make some return for the favours bestowed upon us by the British Government. The government has lessened our taxes, killed the leopards, given us good water and appointed a most discriminating policeman to visit us when need shall arise. And now I am come to tell you that we have in our village eight guns, ancient and well tried. We have also four pounds of excellent gun powder in a bottle, and a baz of bullets. Moreover, there are in our village two trackers who have proved their skill in the capture of dacoits. We have heard a rumour that the British government is in great trouble with its enemies, wherefore our villagers have empowered me to say that the eight guns, the bottle of gunpowder and the trackers are freely at the disposal of the British government."

Wars of conquest and subjugation that are marked by hatred do not breed loyalty of this degree in the full years of peace that follow. Hundreds of years of varying national fortunes of defeats and victories have taught Britain a lesson of inestimable value — to refrain from hatred. Buffalo News.

The Cellar or the "Tall Timber," The Place For the Pessimist

"The war is not going well," said a Toronto man this morning. His face was gloomy; his tone was hopeless. On being asked for an explanation, he said that Russia would soon see the Huns in Petrograd. He said that the Germans would smash through Servia to the Dardanelles and relieve Turkey, and that on the Western front neither French nor British could stir a step. Therefore was he determined to sit in sackcloth with ashes upon his head.

The German advance in Galicia began about May 1st. Sweeping down through Jaroslaw, Przemysl and Lemberg, it drove back the Russian army, but utterly failed to break the line, and was forced to meet the vigorous fighting of a series of facile and determined Russian rearguards. Bear in mind that this was not trench warfare. Heavy artillery paved the way for successive advances by the enemy, but in every case the advances were costly.

The Russians declare that the Germans lost 10,000 a day in this advance and similar numbers on the Narev, and in Courland. Cutting the estimate in two, the German loss is discovered to be over a million in three months. Today the Russian line is still sound, the German advance has been halted in the south, and damaged seriously in the north. Autumn is here, and neither flank of the enemy line in Russia is sufficiently well anchored to justify confidence.

Russia is still full of fight. There is no suggestion from any Capital, save that of Germany, that peace is a desirable thing. The Allies see the enemy beating himself to death in a succession of attacks which never can make up for the great loss on the Marne, when Paris was saved. On the Western front the men who know most about the enemy are the most confident. The spirit of the British and French soldiers in the trenches is superbly cheerful. Tests of the enemy's strength have brought pleasant information to the commanders and some day we may expect to witness a sweep forward which the Huns will not be able to resist.

No man who considers the position of the German navy should say that the war goes badly. None of us would have dreamed two years ago of the possibility of a clean sea the world over within a few months of the outbreak of war. Even the submarine campaign has been a complete failure, and the precious Dreadnoughts of the Kaiser are huddled fearful in the Kiel Canal. The war is not going badly. It goes well. We must recollect that Lord Kitchener warned us to be ready for a long struggle. Scarcely more than a year has passed since the Expeditionary Force landed in France. We need patience, courage and faith in the men who defend our cause.—Toronto News.

Economy in Canada.

Canada has been economizing. This is well indicated in the official detailed report on imports into this country for the three months ending 30th June. In most lines that may be classed as luxuries, imports have fallen off from 2 to over 50 per cent. These include liquors, spirits, jewellery, tobacco and its manufactures, fruits, automobiles, fancy goods and toys.

Fraser River Salmon.

In the course of a private letter to Aemilius Jarvis, vice-president of the British Columbia Packers' Association, one of the western directors states that the salmon run this year on Puget Sound and the Fraser River was disappointingly small, but that on the northern rivers it was heavy. He added that he expected the association would experience quite as profitable a season as they did last year. The 1914 pack totalled 281,367 cases.

Hudson Bay Sale.

Upwards of one hundred purchasers of property on the Hudson Bay Reserve at Edmonton are bringing an action against the Hudson Bay Company for rescinding of contracts representing property purchases of $1,700,000, and the return of about $500,000 which has been paid to the company. It is reported that the purchasers claim that the company has not lived up to the representations made in the prospectus issued in connection with the sale and has not spent the money on improvements specified in the same.

Outlook in China.

P. K. Wellington Koo, Chines Minister to Mexico, in an address at the luncheon given in his honour by Henry Clews at the Bankers' Club, in New York, said the finances of China had undergone most salutary changes in the past few years. One feature of the policy of the republic, he said, is that China no longer borrows funds for the payment of administrative expenses. This has put a stop to a fertile source of indebtedness and enabled the Government since 1st January, 1915, to pay every obligation in full as it matured.

China has begun to realize the investment resources of her people. Last year a popular loan of $16,000,000 was offered and the subscriptions received were $24,000,000. The disappointment at the failure of subscribers to get the full amount was such that a supplementary loan of $8,000,000 was made to complete the full subscription.

Last July another loan of $16,000,000 of a popular character was floated with equal success.

Taking the whole field of investment into account, Mr. Koo regards China as having unequalled attractions. He says the country has 6,000 miles of railway in operation, has 2,000 miles nearly completed, and 3,000 miles building.

TRANSPORTING HORSES.

Scenes on Board Ship When They Are Embarked.

Not the least arduous task which confronts those responsible for the transport of Australian and Canadian troops is the conveyance of the horses. Sometimes as many as seven or eight hundred horses are stowed away on one ship. The phrase "stowed away" is no figure of speech for on a transport there are horses everywhere—on deck, underneath the deck, in every nook and corner where it is possible, or seemingly impossible, for an animal to be put.

On making an inspection of a ship which has been fitted for the conveyance of horses, one would at first think it impossible that the animals could ever be got on board, or that they would survive under such conditions, for the voyage. Each horse is placed in a narrow stall, exactly 2 ft. 5 in. wide, and separated from his neighbour on either side by two narrow top and bottom slip rails. The animal can never lie down during the voyage, and is prevented from moving backward by the back of the stall and forward by a piece of timber, breast high, upon which his portable manger of wood is hooked.

The animal stands on a movable wooden floor which can be lifted out for cleaning purposes, leaving the iron deck underneath. The embarkation of the animals is an arduous task. They have to be led, coaxed, and pushed by main force up the steep and narrow gangway, and down another until they reach the places allotted to them. The main difficulty is to get the animals to go up the gangway, but, strangely enough, once a horse gets its four feet on it he is content to move right on.

There are some horses, however, which cannot be persuaded to go up the gangway, and these are first blindfolded and pushed by main force into a wooden cage, and hoisted on board by a steam winch, generally marking their displeasure by kicking furiously.

The horses are watered four times a day and fed three times. Feeding-time is announced by trumpet calls, and the animals soon get to know the call, announcing their readiness for meals by loud stamping, whinnying, and stretching their heads out of their stalls, reminding one of the excitement shown by the wild animals at the Zoo at feeding-time.

Whenever possible, ten minutes' walking exercise is given each animal every day. For the first few days of the voyage the work of exercising proceeds very slowly and is very difficult, but when accustomed to his novel surroundings the horse soon comes to know what is expected of him, and will then scramble like a cat over all kinds of obstacles.

Delayed Her Appearance.

Amateur theatrical companies are proverbially courageous, and perhaps that is the reason why the Puddlecombe Thespians selected "Iolanthe" as the means by which they would astonish the natives. As every lover of Gilbert and Sullivan is aware, one of the most effective scenes in the opera is the rising of Iolanthe from the bed of a beautiful river, and it seemed that this scene would go particularly well. The queen and fairies had sung their welcome well, the limelight was full on.

"Iolanthe! Come, Iolanthe!" sang the fairies.

But Iolanthe did not appear.

"Iolanthe! Come, Iolanthe!"

It was a tense moment, and the excitement had communicated itself to the audience. Again the invitation was repeated, and then a petulant voice from beneath the water's silvery surface was heard:

"Oh, do be quiet!" it said. "Can't you see I'm caught on a nail?"

The Emblem He Selected.

Lord Saye and Sele is a very strong opponent of "votes for women," apropos of which fact he has told an amusing story.

He once attended a book dinner, at which all the guests were expected to appear with an emblem, denoting the title of a book. Lord Saye and Sele went in an ordinary evening dress, but he carried a lady's petticoat over his arm. No one could guess what book he represented, but when he told them every one was greatly amused.

Submarine Position-Finder.

A new device, which will enable a submarine to find her own position under water, and will do away with the dangerous necessity of coming to the surface for that purpose, is announced by Mr. Hudson Maxim, the inventor. Mr. Maxim says that the implement permits the commander of a submarine to find his position on a map at any time, within a hundred feet or so. A position indicator, of a cruiser design, Mr. Maxim claims, is now in use in practically all the navies of the world. Its installation in a submarine costs about $17,000, whereas Mr. Maxim's device could be installed for only $1,000.

The Very First Time.

The amateur theatrical performance was being discussed.

"You know that part of the new play where the man seizes the woman, forces her into the cupboard and turns the key on her?"

"Yes."

"Well, last night a fellow in the audience applauded it so much that they had to put him out."

"I don't think there was anything to applaud about it."

"Yes, there was. It turned out that the fellow was the husband of the actress, and it was the first time he had ever seen anybody shut her up with the cook."

If brasses are rubbed every day with a chamois cloth they need only occasionally be polished with a cream or liquid.

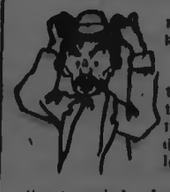
In spite of the Don't Worry clubs all the people worry some of the time, and some of the people worry all of the time.



A man isn't funny when he works hard at it.

Some men's heads are so swelled that it is a shame to have to crowd them into a two dollar hat.

Job would hardly have succeeded in making a record if he had lived in a flat.

The man who never argues, simply lays down the law.

If golf were not fashionable it would be work.

In the Country.

When the rattle of the reaper
Wakes the echo of the hill,
Rousing me, an idle sleeper,
Down behind the old sawmill,
Lazily I turn me over
On my bed of fragrant clover.

Seems to me, our country cousins
Don't appreciate the tunes
That the birdies by trees and downs,
Warble through the leafy June.
Very simple all the reason,
They are grubbing all the season.

Not for me the rasp and rattle
Of the reaper in the wheat.
I had rather watch the cattle
Of the fragrant clover eat.
Rather lie here cool and lazy,
Than to labor like a crazy.

Draughts of perfume sweet as honey,
Loose me lying round us here
But the hired man (Ain't it funny)
Says he'd rather have some beer;
Says the stuff that nature mixes
Isn't what the barkeep fixes

Did You Ever?

Did you ever wake up in the morning with a start under the impression that you had overslept yourself, jump up and on looking at your watch discover that it was a half hour earlier than usual and then crawl back for a little nap?

It is just like finding money. You had expected that you would have to jump into your clothes, hurry through your breakfast and run to catch the train, and you find instead that you have time for one more dream and then sufficient time to tie your necktie and leisurely discuss the coffee and rolls.

Few joys are equal to this. Meeting an old friend or discovering a stray dime in the pocket of an old vest cannot match it.

You stretch yourself thoroughly, lay out plans for the day and when the half hour has about expired you slowly arise and look at your watch again and find that it has stopped and that according to its count you still have that half hour.

Drink What You Can.

Such sayings always make one cry "Enough."
For one should take a drink, however small
So it's enough on which to hang a bluff.

Words Would Fail.

"How does it feel to be disappointed in love?"

"Ever run over by a railroad train and then have some one come and rub salt on the sore places?"

"No."

"No use trying to tell you."

Not Strange to Him.

"Radium is not such a wonder. I have known of a substance that would give off heat for years."

"Well, you missed your chance for fame. What is it?"

"Jamaica ginger."

No Thought of the Future.

He praised her hands, for they were fair;
He did not know he did not care.
So to discover did not try
If they could frame a pie

Wouldn't Mind Her.

The Plain Girl—I never allow men to kiss me.

The Pretty One—I wish I could find some men of that sort.

Turning the Tables.

"John, are you going to church with me this morning?"

"I should like to, my dear, but really I have nothing to wear."

ARMORED SOLDIERS.

Steel Helmets and Leg-Shields Now in Common Use.

This war has at least proved one thing. It has shown the utility of war devices, invented hundreds and in some cases thousands of years ago, when adapted to modern conditions. The hand-grenade dates back several hundred years, while Caesar used the ballista, a catapult arrangement which is being effectively utilized by the Germans to-day for throwing bombs against enemy trenches.

Perhaps the most striking feature of the war, however, in regard to the use of ancient devices is the wearing by the troops of steel helmets, breastplates, and leg-shields, not unlike those used by the knights and crusaders of old, for protection against flying shrapnel. The French and Russians were among the first to protect their troops with helmets and breastplates of thin steel, copying the idea from the Japanese, who, at the siege of Port Arthur, covered their engineers, who were sent out to cut the wire entanglements, "with metal shields reaching as far down as the legs, strapped in front of their bodies."

The Germans tried similar devices at Ypres, and several correspondents have related that the Huns used gigantic shields, each capable of sheltering four men. Two of these carried the shield, a third fired through a special opening, while the fourth threw hand-grenades.

Many of the French troops look like Cromwell's Ironsides when wearing the steel skull-caps and breastplates while delivering attacks with hand-grenades. The caps are light and bullet-proof, and are being rapidly added to the regular equipment of the French soldiers. They are painted grey-blue, harmonizing with the French uniform, and give protection against spent bullets and shrapnel fragments, which inflict so many wounds in the head in trench fighting.

The value of such helmets may be gathered from the fact that, according to Dr. Devraigne in The Lancet, of fifty-five cases of wounds in the head which he examined, forty-two of the wounded wore no helmet, and thirteen were protected with it.

Fine Anyway.

He—Have you any fine tooth combs? It—No, but we have some fine tooth-brushes.—Cornell Widow.

A WORD TO OUR PATRONS IN PETERBOROUGH

It is a well known fact that this war has caused havoc in the tailoring trade especially those firms who import their goods from the Old Country, notwithstanding this, however, the GLOBE TAILORING CO. through their buying agents in HUDDERSFIELD, ENGLAND, secured huge orders for delivery August 1st and although some of these goods are a little late in arriving, nevertheless, we have received a fair amount of these shipments. This places us in a position to still supply our Well-Known Suits and Overcoats at the same price of $14 CUSTOM MADE-TO-MEASURE.

Our finances not being tied up in Real Estate, we were able to pay cash for the majority of these goods and therefore our price REMAINS AS BEFORE. Please ask to see our WELL KNOWN BLUE SERGE AT THE OLD PRICE, $14, also Tweeds, Worsteds and Cheviots. OVERCOATINGS in Chinchillas, Witney's Cheviots, Meltons and Beavers.

A Word to the Wise: You can still buy a Suit or Overcoat with the same high class trimmings and workmanship ($25 value) that has made the Globe Tailoring Co. known throughout Ontario for Fair Dealing at the Old Price of $14. See and judge for yourself.

LAWN BOWLING

The two last tournaments on the green for this year will be held tomorrow evening and on Tuesday of next week.

Every member is expected to be present and wind up the season with the usual enthusiasm.

It is expected that the rob game will be decided to-night.

The big fight will be between the Brightman and Maynard rinks, providing that the Brightman rink winsout in the preliminary with the Pratt rink.

THREE PLAYERS WILL GIVE McGRAW MERRY HA-HA

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 27.—If Pat Moran's Phillies win the National League pennant this year, as it appears they will, three members of the team are going to laugh themselves sick.

They are Al Demaree, the well-known cartoonist, Milton Stock and George Whitted. McGraw considered the latter pair driftwood, so he cut them loose last season, while the Giants were leading the league, with every prospect of finishing first. Stock and Demaree were pretty peevish, as they figured they were being cut out of a world's series melon. When the Giants didn't win the pennant they snickered audibly. And now that it appears McGraw traded them to a probable winner, they're following suit, but—

Whitted's case is almost a tragedy. George was sore when Stallings, of Boston last winter, to the Phillies, the Major deal, for the Braves figured sure to repeat. Now that the Pauls look like they'll finish in the Cellar percentage, George has joined the cheering chorus.

Correct And Authentic Styles In Women's Warm Winter Coats $13.50

THESE Coats "live up" to the advertising. They are as a matter of fact, better than we "say" they are—we admit an enthusiasm about them, because they are such stylish, such good looking and such good value coats.

YOU will not find Coats as good as these at the price anywhere around $13.50.

THOSE statements are based upon accurate knowledge of market conditions.

THE materials are extra fine, and there is sufficient variety to enable you to pick a distinctive and yet a becoming style. Sizes for Misses and Women at the price $13.50.

PARIS, Sept. 27.—Reports from the front say that a space of only twenty minutes was required for the French infantry to complete the victory prepared for by sixty hours of violent shelling and over-run the first line of German trenches north of Perthes in the Champagne.

"After a few hours of intense fire our hopes that our batteries were dominating the situation were transformed to certain conviction," says a wounded officer who took part in the battle. "The moment for the attack was set for dawn. When the charge was sounded, whole battalions, reinforced by reserves, bounded forward. The rush was so impetuous that the Germans, still alive and unwounded in the battered works, seemed dazed and unable to resist. They were disarmed and pushed back for our reserves to pick up while the attacking line went on. There was little or no musketry. The bayonets did most of the work. The proportion of dead to the wounded and prisoners was large. What was left of entire companies threw up their hands at the sight of the deadly execution by Zouaves.

NEW YORK, Sept. 27.—A wireless despatch from Berlin to-day says that the German shore batteries sunk one British warship and damaged two others on Friday in the fighting off Zeebruge. The German official statement, which came through London, made no mention of any such losses by the British.

Few Signs of Life Remaining In Drear Dead City of Kovno

Will Be a Long Time Before Usual Business is Again Resumed---Has Been Thoroughly Cleaned Out.

The following is a translation of an article by the Berliner Tageblatt war correspondent, describing the thoroughness with which the Russians cleared the country behind them on their retreat, and the difficulties of the roads the Germans have before them, and appeared in the Montreal Standard:

Zymory, between Vilna and Kovno,
Aug. 27th.

"We are advancing!" that is the encouraging feeling that fills the heart of every German soldier in the eastern army. This feeling that the worst is over gives the soul encouragement, and enables everyone to do his utmost. We want to be ready before winter, and we know that much must be accomplished. Thus everyone works with a will.

We see again here that an advance movement works wonders with the troops. The besiegers and conquerors of Kovno saw but little of the city. The town was only a place of halt for them, where they passed a couple of days. They only saw closed shops and forsaken houses, for the Russians had sent the Germans and the Jews away in the months of April and May. They bought hardly anything as the few things that were for sale were shamefully dear. Officers and men were not unwilling to leave the forsaken city.

We too found the time in Kovno very long. We saw how thoroughly it had been cleared out. The dead city was just beginning to show signs of life as we left, one shop after another opened fearfully, but it will be long before the usual business will be done.

RUINED FACTORY.

The great Dullman screw factory is totally destroyed. The German owners had developed the business, and employed 1500 workmen and 1000 machines. The Russians were just plundering the factory as our troops marched in; machines and tools were already on the streets, just as they had been passed through the windows, ready to be placed on a light railway especially constructed to convey them to the railway stations.

Everything is just as it was left. The machines are lying across the beams, it is useless to take them back into the factory, which is a mere shell left from the fire. A large brewery is burned to the ground. Giant barrels still lie in the cellars, and our soldiers are delighted to taste beer again. As long as it lasts it is being served out to the troops in great jugs. They crowd around the spot with noisy enthusiasm.

The public buildings of Kovno have suffered from the siege, the churches especially. The Greek Catholic church in the market place has suffered greatly. When I visited it all the valuable objects and vestments lay in confused disorder one on top of another; costly altar sticks, bishops' mitres, silver candlesticks, gilded crucifixes and other objects. Mass was being celebrated again in the Catholic churches, while the Protestant pastor was getting his flock together and comforting them in their troubles.

"BOTTOMLESS SAND."

The attempt to catch up to the division of troops going eastward from Kovno was most difficult. The roads are in very bad condition and can hardly be traversed in wet weather. The marching by of the troops and the endless columns of vehicles did not improve them. It is hardly credible, had we not been on the spot ourselves, that a big city like Kovno, with 100,000 inhabitants, and Vilna, with 250,000, are connected only with a sandy country road that shows almost no trace of artificial manipulation.

The Russian statement that the frontier roads were neglected for strategic reasons not not apply to the roads between Kovno and Vilna. Quite on the contrary. There is every reason for good communication being established between the cities. But here, too, they prefer to go through bottomless loose sand instead of constructing a proper road. In this region the Russian administration is only remarkable for its defects. It has neglected everything, from the schools to the high roads.

On the other hand it must be acknowledged that Russia employed all her great strength in preparing for the great war. It is quite a mistake to talk of incomplete arming, equipment and provisioning of the army. The Russian soldier is well clothed and well fed even to-day, made bread, buttered lavishly, at a penny a slice. A similar repast would cost sixpence in London. Parade follows. In England we cherished the illusion that life abroad would be an easy business, merely consisting of firing practices in the trenches, followed by intervals of idleness in rest camps, where cigarettes would be obtained for the asking, and lots of rum would be served out ad infinitum. This rum would have a certain charm of its own, make everybody merry, and banish all discomfort due to the frost and the cold for ever. Thus the men thought, though most of the fellows are teetotallers. Parades are endless; we never have worked so hard since we joined the army; the minor offences of the Londoner are full grown crimes under long artillery range; a dirty rifle will cause its owner to meditate in the guard room now!

Dinner consists of bully-beef and biscuits; now and again we fry the bully beef on the farmhouse stove, and cook an egg with it, when cash is plentiful. The afternoon is generally given up to bayonet fighting, and our day's work comes to an end about six o'clock.

In the evening we go to the nearest village and discuss matters of interest in some cafe. Here we meet all manner of men—Gurkhas, fresh from the firing line; bus-drivers, exiles from London; men of of Army Service Corps; Engineers, kilted Highlanders; men recovering from wounds who are almost fit to go into the trenches again; French soldiers, Canadian soldiers, and all sorts of people, helpers in some way or another of the allies in the great war.

Voice of The People

To the Editor of the Examiner.

Sir,—To settle a dispute will you or some of your many readers give us your views on the following. When the Custom House was erected in this city provision was made for ingress to it by means of cut stone steps erected on the west side, and which has been in constant use until this summer, when a system of planks was placed over them, and some showing marked signs of decay. My adversary's contention is that the planks on the steps is Government regulation, as the building is in care of a Government employee, who is no doubt acting under instructions. My argument is that the old stone steps are good enough yet, and that the rotten planking should be removed forthwith before some person gets his or her neck broken in trying to ascend them.

Kindly enlighten us, and oblige

Worrying Ones.

When cooking a piece of bacon housewives should try the plan of baking it instead of boiling it in the usual way. If baked it eats richer. The tough part of the skin should be removed before the bacon is put into the oven.

RECENT NOTE OF BULGARIANS AFFIRMS FRIENDSHIP TO POWERS

LONDON, Sept. 27.—The Bulgarian Government yesterday morning officially communicated to the powers a note stating in the most categorical fashion that the mobilisation of the Bulgarian army was ordered in the national interest, and that it had not the slightest offensive character.

The note states that "the entry of Bulgaria into a state of armed neutrality is explained by changes which recently occurred in the political situation," and that "Bulgaria has not the slightest aggressive intention, but is firmly resolved to be fully armed to defend her rights and independence."

The official note to the powers was despatched from Sofia on Sept. 23, so that it was framed before Greek mobilization had been decided upon.

Dr. Ghenadieff, ex-Bulgarian Foreign Minister, whose inclusion in the Sofia Cabinet is reported to be a possibility, has been known lately for his pro-Entente views, and it is believed here that unless he was certain of the Government continuing its good relations with the Entente powers he would not have assured them of his support.

An official statement from Sofia sent here by wireless says that the Bulgarian mobilisation order does not mean that Bulgaria has hostile intentions, but intends simply to enter a state of armed neutrality.

This step, the despatch says, is explained by changes shortly to be made in the political and military situation, and to general conditions in the Balkans.

Sunday's Storm Snapped Wires

Damaged Trees, Fruit and Others, and Worked Other Damage

Sunday's gale lashed the surrounding countryside yesterday with equinoctial fury that tested the resilience of the saplings and creaked the stiff old trees. In its van was a driving rain, which kept many front doors shut in the morning. Evidently the householders feared that if they ventured forth they would be unable to close the doors behind them. In the afternoon the sun tempered the conditions, but it was anything but a welcome Sunday.

Several reports state that orchards suffered seriously in some places, and as a result, windfalls should blow into the city during the next few days.

Struck by a Wire.

Just as people were going to church yesterday morning during the high gales, a live wire in front of St. Paul's Presbyterian Church came tumbling down with a loud report and flash of fire, striking a pedestrian on the shoulder as he was passing on his way to church, fortunately without injuring him. He immediately put a man on guard while communicating with the police, who in turn got in touch with the proper authorities, and the danger was removed before the church crowds came out. At a late hour last night the vicinity of Water and Murray Streets was still in darkness.

Knox and All Saints' Churches also suffered the inconvenience of darkness at seven o'clock, presumably due to a fallen wire. The former had to resort to the use of "ha'penny dips"—in other words, oil lamps. The lights came on later in the service.

Raised Roof Covering.

The wind discovered a loose spot in the roofing on the C. G. E. main building, and finally worked loose a considerable section, which was whipped over the apex. Several workmen, however, soon restored it to its original position.

Wind Made Five Breaks In the Power Lines

Yesterday's high wind snapped the electric power lines in five widely distributed places at the following corners: Lewis and King Streets; Simcoe and Stewart Streets; Rubidge and Townsend Streets; Rubidge and Sherbrooke Streets; and Murray and Water Streets.

The Fire Department was called out for each break, and rendered each location safe. Chief Howard received two of the calls while at the morning service at Charlotte Street Methodist Church.

IMMACULATE CONCEPTION CHILDREN'S EXHIBITION

Will Hold a School Fair in Parish Hall To-morrow

The children of the Immaculate Conception School will hold a school fair to-morrow afternoon in the adjoining parish hall. They have been engaged in amateur gardening during the summer and will exhibit vegetables and fruits. Fancy work will be shown by the girls. The hall has been decorated for the event which it is believed will stimulate interest among the boys and girls in both these branches of endeavour.

Large Sunflowers

Mr George Robertson of Otonabee has four of the largest sunflowers that have been seen around the country this summer. They are to be seen in the window of Mr. R. Dennes flour and feed store. The stalk on which one of these grew measured twelve feet four inches in height.

SUNDAY SCHOOL RALLY AT MURRAY STREET CHURCH

The Murray Street Baptist Sunday School held its annual rally yesterday afternoon when the speakers of the occasion were Rev. Mr. McKenzie of the Knox Presbyterian church, and Colonel Duncan Walker.

Colonel Walker gave an address on "Things to which we should Rally," while Rev. Mr. McKenzie gave an address on "Enbalment." In spite of the inclement weather the attendance was larger than a year ago and very much interest was taken by the school as a whole in what was said by both speakers.

During the afternoon a number of the pupils from the Primary Department were given certificates which entitled them to come into the Sunday School proper.

CITY HALL PARAGRAPHS

The Legal Committee of the City Council will meet this evening at eight o'clock.

STORM DAMAGE

The Board of Works Department had a number of men out this morning cleaning up after yesterday's high wind which among other things blew a number of the power wires down.

LAYING THE ASPHALT

The paving companies are laying the wearing surface, which consists of asphaltic concrete.

A CIVIC RECEPTION

The city is arranging a civic reception for Captain C. Ackerman who is due to arrive in the city to-morrow afternoon.

A QUICK CHANGE

His Worship Mayor Baller was forced to make a quick change from his travelling costume to a Prince Albert while in Lindsay last week. The change was made at the station in the presence of an admiring throng.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES

To-night the older boys of the Association will have their first corn roast, at the residence of Mr. R. Ivey's. A big time is promised around the fire, where games will be played and stories told. Every boy of the "Y" is requested to meet at the building at 7.30 sharp and proceed in a body to Mr. Ivey's residence.

Saturday morning the Junior Collegiate boys paddled down the river in the war canoe to T. A.'s park, where they had a good time. The boys were in charge of Physical Director Roper, and report the new Physical Director to be a good fellow with boys. A big fire was built and corn roasted, games were also played and a general good time spent.

The junior school boys and Junior employed boys' Bible classes will commence this week. Last year these classes were a great success, and we expect all the boys back at the start this year.

The alterations to the building handicappes the inside activities at the present time and the boiler is being overhauled, and the rooms are entirely without heat except what is got from the grate in the front parlour. A dozen or more openings in the brick walls that are being cut for new windows, give the building a surplus of ventilation. The dormitory men are up against many inconveniences, but it is expected that by the end of the week we may adjust ourselves to the present conditions, and that the boiler will be in condition to heat a portion of the building. As fast as we are able to do so we wish to call our committees together for the purpose of outlining the season's work in the various departments and while the activities must necessarily be somewhat delayed still we believe that the completion of the building changes will give the activities of the Association a big impetus. It is expected that the new dormitories will be ready for occupancy within three weeks, so young men who are interested in securing a comfortable room with the many facilities that our building offers are invited to drop into the Association Office and select a location in the dormitories within the next few days. There is an advantage in having a first choice in location.

HOW "TOMMY SPENDS HIS TIME WHEN HE IS OUT OF THE TRENCHES

The farm house stands about a hundred yards away from the main road, with a cart track, slushy and muddy, and running across the fields to the very door. The whole aspect of the place is forbidding; looks squalid and dilapidated, and smell of decaying vegetable matter, of manure, and every other filth that can find a resting place. But it is not dirty; its home made bread and beer are excellent; the new laid eggs are delightful for breakfast; the milk and butter fresh and pure, are dainties that an epicure might rave about. We easily become accustomed to the discomforts of the place, to the midden in the centre of the yard, to the lean, long eared pigs that try to gobble up everything that comes within their reach, to the hens that flutter over our beds and shake the dust of ages from the barn roof at dawn, to the noisy little children with the dirty faces and meddling fingers, who poke their hands into our haversacks, to the farm sergeants who inspect all our belongings when we are out on parade, and even now we have become accustomed to the very rats that scurry through the barn at midnight and gnaw at our equipment and devour our rations when they get hold of them. One night a rat bit a man's nose—but the tale is a long one, and I'll tell it again when I have time.

THE UNIFORM OF THE TRENCHES

We came to the farm, forty of us in all, at the heel of a cold March day. We had marched far in full pack with rifle and bayonet. An additional load had now been heaped on our soldiers—we carried sheepskin jackets, the uniform of the trenches indispensable to the firing line, but the last straw on the backs of overburdened soldiers. The march to the barn billet was a miracle of endurance, but all lived through it and thanked heaven most heartily when it was over. That night we slept in the barn, curled up on the straw, our waterproof sheets under us, and our blankets and our sheepskins around our bodies. It was very comfortable, almost heavenly, a night indeed when one might wish to remain awake to feel how glorious the rest of a weary man must be. Awakening with the dawn was another pleasure the barn was full with the scent of corn and hay and of the cowshed beneath. The hens had already flown to the yard and the dovecot was voluble. Somewhere near a girl was milking, and we could hear the lilt of her songs as she worked. A cart rumbled off into the distance, a bell was chiming, and the dogs of many farms were exchanging greetings. The morning was one to be remembered. But mixed with all these medley of sounds came one that was almost new. we heard it for the first time the day previous, and it has been in our ears ever since then, it is with us still, and will be for many days to come. Most of us had never heard the sound before, never heard its summons, its murmur or its menace. All night long it was in the air, and sweeping around the barn where we lay, telling all who chanced to listen that out there where the searchlights quivered across the face of heaven, men were fighting and killing one another, soldiers of many lands, of England, Ireland and Scotland, of Australia, India and and Germany, were engaged in deadly combat. The sound was the sound of guns, our farmhouse was under the range of long artillery.

THE MORNING ROUTINE.

We get up about six o'clock every morning and proceed to wash and shave. All use the one pump; sometimes five and six heads stick under it at the one time, and an eager hand works the handle and pours a plentiful supply of very cold water on the close cropped pates. The pain of the farmhouses window make excellent shaving mirrors, and incidentally I may mention that rifle slings generally serve the purpose of razor strops. Breakfast follows toilet, most of the men buy cafe-au-lait at a penny a basin, and home

GERMANS IN CZAR'S DOMAIN

Hundreds of Thousands of Teutons in Russia When the War Broke Out

Specially Entrusted with the Work of Developing the Empire Industrially.

"Hundreds of thousands of Germans were living under the scepter of the Tsar when the world-war broke out, the Teutonic subjects of Russia being greater many times in number than the combined German sojourners of all the other allied nations," according to a bulletin just issued by the National Geographic Society. "Until very recent years, the condition of these German colonists in Russia was that of favoured citizens, of citizens specially entrusted with the work of developing the empire. With the strong revival of the Great Russian policy, that of the Russification of the whole monster land, however, German schools were suppressed and other measures were adopted toward making the Teutonic citizens good Slavs.

"The Tsar's German subjects formed a much more important element in Russia than is generally considered. From their ranks were recruited the model artisans and peasant proprietors, while they furnished a significant quota to the ranks of Russia's professional men, business men, and technical workers. Descendants of the German colonists who were brought into the empire by Catherine the Great, herself a German princess, were prominent lawyers, university teachers, scientists, engineers, army leaders, captains of industry and of commerce, and members of the Russian bureaucracy and diplomatic corps.

"For generations, these German colonists and their Slav neighbours, have gotten along amicably with one another. Their attitude, on both sides has been one of tolerance and good nature. The German language everywhere, whether at Petrograd or Vladivostock, at Archangel or Kherson. The colonists mostly persisted in the use of their mother tongue; sent their children to German schools; celebrated their religion in Lutheran churches, presided over by the old-type German Lutheran pastors, and kept to the customs which they had brought with them from Saxony, from Bavaria and from Westphalia.

"Russian Germans were divided into two classes: The colonists, the business classes, the intellectuals, and the nobility. The German nobility, the owners of vast estates, were mostly confined to the Baltic provinces. The history of their services to the land of their adoption forms no unimportant part in Russian annals. On the other hand, Russia has been lavish with her favours to her German citizens. Courland, Livonia and Esthonia were the provincial seats of the powerful Teutonic Russian nobility, and German families with ancestral lines clear through centuries. They have filled the high places in the Russian state honourably and ably, and here has never been any question of their loyalty. Practically all of them were Lutherans.

"The intellectuals—lawyers, doctors artists, engineers, scientists, architects, pastor, and so on—and the business classes of Germans in Russian dominions formed the Tsar's most important division of Teutonic subjects. In many of the towns, the German intellectuals furnished occupants for all the best posts, while from the ranks of the same people came a preponderating number of the millionaires. Teutonic tradesmen, manufacturers and commercial travellers, have been business in the development of every corner of the empire. Before the war they were to be found in all parts of the land doing a thriving business.

The German colonists were agriculturists. They were first brought into Russia by Catherine the Great, in the hope that they would serve as teachers of better and more scientific farming to their new fellow citizens, and vast grants of land were made to them. One belt of settlement reaches down the Volga Valley, from Tver, branching south from the Volga, to Kharkof. Many privileges were given to these settlers, and their colonies rapidly grew rich. Their villages were planted with fruit trees; their farms were operated with Germanic thrift, and attention to business, and the more advanced methods of agriculture in use in their old homes were put into practice. Their Slav neighbours, in many cases, profited by example and learned much from Teutonic management. The position of the colonist, however, was better than that of his neighbour. He was never a serf, but a peasant proprietor; and, therefore, he enjoyed a many year' handicap over the Russian peasant. It is these colonists in Central Russia who have been the backbone and the sinew of Russian agriculture."

Magistrate Dumble Strikes Terror in the Hearts of About Fifteen Bailbirds

"Any of you men want work?" inquired Police Magistrate Dumble of about fifteen men who occupied seats in the spectators' gallery of this morning's police court. Some of the men squirmed in their seats, while others manifested a sudden impulse to get out. Chief Thompson volunteered the information that some of the men were employed at night and were therefore not in need of work.

WAR NOTES

Interesting Items From Various Fields in the War Arena

Figures given out at Berlin for railroad traffic during July, 1915, show that the transportation of merchandise on German railroads was 2.8 per cent. greater than that for the same month of the preceding year, and set a new record. Of the total, 7.30 per cent. represented goods for the army.

Six large American locomotives, bound for Russia, were recently put aboard the Takuyama Maru, one of the new Japanese freight ships lying at the Bush Terminal in Brooklyn. The task of shipping was aided by sending the locomotives in pieces. Three of the big boilers will be put in the steamer's hold and the others lashed to the decks and covered with tarpaulin.

A warrant charging one of the principal French shipowners with defrauding the State, has been issued under complaint of the Minister of Marine. The man accused is alleged to have obtained $30,000 more than their real value on each of several vessels requisitioned by the Government. The money was obtained by the use of false valuation certificates.

Americans in London are taking the precaution of insuring against Zeppelin raids. Neither the United States Embassy nor the Consulate General are insured, but that is the fault of the officials rather than that of the insurance agents, who have been most assiduous lately in offering to write policies for both places. Some time ago Ambassador Page had his residence insured to protect its owners against loss.

Piratical Cruise of Paul Jones

Famous Adventurer Visited the Scottish Coast

Paul Jones was a native of Kirkbean in the Stewartry of Kirkcudbright, and his real name was John Paul. He began life as a sailor in the Friendship, of Whitehaven, America being his destination. He studied navigation every spare minute, and became third mate in another Whitehaven boat when a mere youth.

In 1766, at the age of 19 years, he was a full-fledged mate, and was employed in the American slave trade. He hated the traffic, and set out for home on a Whitehaven boat. On the voyage the captain and mate took ill and died, and Paul brought the vessel home.

In 1773 he went to Virginia to settle up the affairs of a brother who had died. He was then caught in the whirlwind of the American Revolution, and, entering the service of the colonies, became Paul Jones, in place of plain John Paul, and cast in his lot with America. He organized the American Navy, and on 7th December, 1775, hoisted the Stars and Stripes, with his own hands on the Alfred.

In 1778 he commenced his famous piratical cruise. On the Solway Firth he took advantage of his familiarity with the scenes of boyhood, and fired one ship and spiked thirty-six guns. He cast anchor in the Dee, five miles from Kirkcudbright, and there selected a crew of fifteen, and placing them under two lieutenants, ordered the gang to row in a smallboat to St. Mary's Isle, the seat of the Earl of Selkirk, and there demand the silver plate. The Earl was from home, and the Countess had no alternative but to hand the pirates the plate.

The following day Paul encountered the British boat Drake, and after a terrible struggle Jones had a complete victory. He then coolly sat down and wrote to the Countess of Selkirk that the struggle he was engaged in was a fight to force freedom on America, and can end to British misrule. He would return the plate, and he did it.

Crossing to France Jones obtained command of Le Homme Richard. In this larger vessel he sailed with a squadron the Alliance, 36 guns; the Vengeance, 12 guns; the Serf, 18 guns; the Pallas, 32 guns; and a cutter of 18 guns, and he decided on visiting Scotland, the Forth being his destination.

Jones Arrives in the Forth.

On 19th September, 1779, a messenger arrived from Eyemouth in Edinburg, and intimated that in the afternoon of the preceding day three ships of war had been seen in the Forth. The ships were the Le Homme, the Pallas, and Vengeance, the Alliance and the Serf having deserted Jones to take up pirate work on their own book. Despite the desertion Jones stuck to his original plan. He wanted to get into Leith and there burn every ship which lay in the harbour if his terms were not complied with. When off Pittenweem Jones signalled for a pilot. Accordingly a pilot went off on instructions from the burgh authorities, and on getting on to Jones' ship he was met by the famous adventurer. "My news from Fife," asked Jones, and the reply was that the inhabitants of the East Coast burghs were all excitement in case they should get a visit from the "daring buccaneer Paul Jones." Continuing, the pilot said that guns had been mounted near the harbour of Pittenweem, and he would like if the captain would give him some powder and shot so that they might sink any pirate boat that attempted to enter the harbour.

Jones was highly amused at the mistake the Fifers had made, and he presented a barrel of gunpowder to the pilot, but was sorry he must apologize for not including shot in the gift.

The total area sown to wheat in the Canadian prairie provinces is 794,800 acres. This figure represents an increase of 25 per cent. over the area harvested in 1914, or 15 per cent over the acreage sown last year. Not for 28 years has the average yield per acre been so high as that promised by the present crop.

Canada is calling you young women to get up and do your "bit." Learn every practical thing you can. Do everything you can to make you strong of mind and body. Miss Caroline McDonald, Canadian Y.W.C.A. Secretary to Japan, will give an address at the opening Rally on Tuesday night.

All young women of the city are cordially invited.

Miss Carrie Littlefield, the new physical director, will arrive to-day from Ottawa, where she has been teaching swimming for the summer months.

Drawers that open and shut with difficulty are often a severe tax on both time and temper, and the defect may sometimes be very easily remedied with beeswax. The runners, the narrow strips of wood attached to the framework should be well rubbed with a lump of beeswax, previously warmed in front of the fire. Afterwards an occasional application of furniture polish will keep the runners smooth. When this simple remedy fails it is due to some fault in construction.

Not Her Quarrel.

The fact that corporal punishment is discouraged in some public schools is what led Harry's teacher to address this note to the lad's mother: "I regret very much to have to inform you that your son Harry idles away his time, is disobedient, quarrelsome and disturbs the pupils who are trying to study their lessons. He needs a good whipping, and I strongly recommend that you give him one."

Whereupon Harry's mother responded as follows:

"Dear Miss Jones: Lick him yourself. I ain't mad at him. Yours truly, Mrs. Smith." London Tit Bits.

Week of Jam Showers Results in Reaping Bountiful Harvest

Six thousand, three hundred and thirty-one jars of jam and other edible comforts for sick and wounded soldiers, were contributed last week, as a result of the cooperation of the committee of the Red Cross, the Church canvassers, and the generous housewives of Peterborough.

This result is extremely gratifying as the committee received three times the number of jars aimed at.

It is gratifying to state that, contrary to a statement in a local newspaper, the jam and other conserves sent in, were of excellent quality. The committee states that 94 8-10 per cent. of the jam sent in, in such a cheerful avalanche, was perfectly good; in first-class condition.

Among the gifts sent in was fifty pounds of "perfectly lovely honey," contributed by an Otonabee farmer, Mr. William Arnold Taylor, through the Ashburnham Patriotic League.

In the contribution box placed at the door of the jam-jar depository in Messrs. Hall & Son's store, were found the sum of $4.00 in cash, and three packets of cigarettes.

The Committee's Thanks.

The Committee of the Red Cross Society in charge of the jam shower inundation, wish, to very cordially thank those who promoted its success. Thanks are expressed by name to the following:

Messrs. Richard Hall and Son, for their kindness in placing an important part of their establishment at the service of the Committee.

The staff of the store which, without individual exception, was most thoughtful and active in promoting delivery and assisting in every possible way.

Mr. W. J. Thompson, of Davis-Thompson & Co., for the gift of a $1,000 policy of insurance, valid till Oct. 3rd, upon the fruit in storage here.

The Street Railway Company, for relaxation of rules that permitted the display of jam shower announcement bills inside the cars.

Mr. Fred Roy, photographer, for the gift of four patriotic slides, for display in four moving picture houses.

The proprietors, for permitting and making display of them for two weeks.

Mr. Rex. Turner, for free gift of display sign at door of jam shower depot.

RECEPTION TO CAPT. ACKERMAN

was joyfully received by the local recruits, yesterday. The Examiner gave the telegram, which was received while the detachment was at Church to Capt. Watt, who read it to the men on their return to the Armouries. At that time the news of the French victory had not been received.

Capt. R. E. Layfield attended Church parade with the local detachment yesterday.

Mr. George Howarth, the leader of the Grand Opera House Orchestra, also a valued employee of the De Laval Company, has joined the 80th Battalion, and left this morning for the School of Instruction, Kingston, to qualify for a position as armourer-sergeant.

It shows the loyalty of Mr. Howarth to his King and country when he gives up two such valuable positions to go to the Front to do his "bit" for Canada, the land of his adoption, and King George, and England, the land of his birth.

A very pleasant evening was spent last Friday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Skilleter, 308 Mark street, the occasion being the departure of their only son, Trumpeter A. E. Skilleter, 8th C.M.R., overseas. Among the guests were Sergts. Shurety and Harris, 8th C.M.R. and Pte. Mackin, 80th Battalion, accompanied by their wives. Also Mrs. Hutchisson and Mrs. Kearsley, whose husbands are away with their regiments. Singing and dancing was indulged in till the early hours, and after toasts wishing the departing ones a pleasant voyage and safe return, a most enjoyable time was brought to a close.

Kingston, Sept. 26.—Great damage was done at Barriefield Camp by the severe gale to-day, and many tents, including the canteens, were blown down, with serious damage to the contents. The gale was the worst experienced here for a long time.

Considerable progress was made this morning in the organization of the local company of the 80th Battalion this morning, when the company was divided into platoons. Three platoons have been organized, and the fourth will be filled up by the new recruits coming in. All the Lakefield men have been grouped together in No. 3 platoon, while No. 1 platoon includes nearly all the men of the physical drill squad. There were 160 men on the roll this morning. Over 200 have been accepted, but they have not all reported for duty. Several recruits who have been in hospital were discharged on Saturday and will be taken on the strength.

Farewell to Rev. Alex. Haddow Last Night

The pastor and congregation of the Murray Street Baptist Church said farewell last night to Rev. Alex Haddow, B.A., and Mrs. Haddow. Short addresses by Mrs. Hunter, Mr. Harding and Mr. Wearing expressed the sentiments of different departments of the Church. Rev. Mr. Webb also spoke, epitomising the sentiment of the congregation, and wishing Mr. and Mrs. Haddow every success in Bolivia, where they will carry on missionary work. After the service, they held a reception, when they met the congregation, individually, for the last time for many months.

A man's own conscience is his sole tribunal, and he should care no more for that phantom "opinion" than he should fear meeting a ghost if he crosses the churchyard at dark. —Lytton.

Nature has presented us with a large faculty of entertaining ourselves alone, and often calls us to it, to teach us that we owe ourselves in part to society, but chiefly and mostly to ourselves.—Montaigne.

As ship meet at sea, a moment together, when words of greeting must be spoken, and then away into the deep, so men meet in this world, and I think we should cross no man's path without hailing him, and, if he needs, giving him supplies.—Henry Ward Beecher.

ITALY IN FIGHT TO THE END WILL SPARE NO SACRIFICES

Important Political Manifestation---Determined to Rid Country of Pan-German Menace---Italy Unswerving in Its Attitude.

NAPLES, Sept. 28.—Signor Barzilai, civil governor of the Austrian territory occupied by the Italian army, as spokesman for the Government, yesterday in a speech affirmed Italy's unswerving resolution to spare no sacrifices until the country was "delivered from the pan-Germanic menace forever.

His speech was delivered before Premier Salandra, Minister of Public Instruction Grippo, Minister of Posts and Telegraphs Riccio and many members of Parliament and several thousand members of the general public. The address had been eagerly awaited as the most important political manifestation since the commencement of the war.

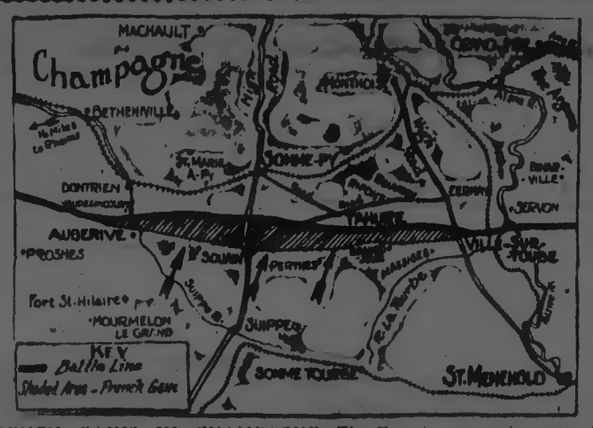
GERMANY'S DUPLICITY.

Signor Barzilai traced at great length the international history of the past year in an endeavour to prove that Austria's object had been to crush Italy and that the present war was carefully prepared with bthe aid of Germany with that end in view. The speaker said that the Marquis Garroni, hen ambassador at Constantinople, received on the 14th of July, 1911, a confidential letter from the German ambassador to Turkey, Baron von Wangenheim, in which it was stated that the note to Serbia would be of such a nature as to make war inevitable. The speaker then justified Italy's entry into the war and pointed out what he declared would have been the dangers of neutrality.

AUSTRIA'S PLOT.

"A Government which had not know how to seize the unique opportunity to erect the essential ramparts for the country's safey and independence and had acceded to suggestions for inertia while awaiting Austria to crush us," said Signor Barzilai, "would have lost, while thinking to assure the national life, our very reasons for existence. The Government sought conscientiously to see if there was any means for avoiding the war by eliminating the principal reasons for it, but after long negotiations Austria made such ridiculous offers that the whole nation, confident in its destiny, rallied round the Government and rejected them in a magnificent wave of revolt."

The speaker, concluding, summed up the results already obtained by Italy, notwithstanding the geographical difficulties. He said further sacrifices would be required to attain the difficult and still distant goal, but they would be unhesitatingly be made.



FRENCH GAINS IN CHAMPAGNE—The French army gains east of Rheims on the 15-mile front from Auberive and Villesur-Toube, are most important. They did particularly well on the roads from Souain to Thure and Somme-Py. The railway shown is the immediate objective of the drive.

Victory on Eve of His Birthday

Allies' Success Results in Hundreds of Congratulations to Sir John French

LONDON, Sept. 28.—Victory for the allies came on the eve of the birthday of Field-Marshal Sir John French and hundreds of messages of congratulation were sent to his headquarters from London to-day. Some telegraph offices were completely swamped by the flood of despatches.

General French will be 63 to-morrow, he having been born on Sept. 28, 1852.

Petrograd Hears Germany is Transferring Five Army Corps

PETROGRAD, Sept. 28.—Five corps of approximately 200,000 men, are being transferred from the eastern to the western theatre of war by the German general staff to meet the allies' offensive, according to reports received to-day.

News of the allies' victories in their opening assaults caused general rejoicing here to-day.

THE REPORTED SINKING OF LINER UNTRUE

BUCHAREST, Sept. 28.—Rumania cabinet at a meeting last night, in which the mobilization of Bulgaria and Greece was discussed, decided that Rumania should continue the course she has followed.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Sept. 28.—Several regiments of Indian troops fighting with the British in Mesopotamia mutinied and were sent back to India.

NEW YORK, Sept 28.—The Anchor Line announced this afternoon that the report of the sinking of the Liner Transylvania was "absolutely untrue."

AMSTERDAM, Sept 28.—Two Zeppelins were reported having flown over Northern Holland in a north-westerly direction to-day, displaying the German battle flag.

LONDON, Sept. 28.—Late Berlin despatches say the Allies' drive has been halted at 'practically' every point, but admits that in some places the Allies are still advancing. It is claimed that the Germans have captured seven theusand prisoners.

BUCHAREST, Sept 28.—Semi-official statement yesterday afternoon said that Rumania would not order mobilization of reserves, but permanent troops will police the frontiers.

PARIS, Sept. 28.—British aviators bombarded Peronne destroying German barracks and stores.

GERMAN'S EFFORTS TO STEM ADVANCE IS UNAVAILING

Enemy Attempted to Drive French Back With Asphyxiating Gases But High Winds Swept Vapour Away--All French Gains Are Being Held--British Making Further Progress

PARIS, Sept. 28.—The greatest battle of the year on the Western front is being waged to-day with even more furious attacks than characterized the beginning of the Anglo-French onslaught. Having staggered the Kaiser's armies with one mighty smash, the Allies drew back and reformed for another blow that explained the apparent slackening of the offensive indicated in yesterday afternoon's communique. The second stroke was made last night with the artillery and cannonading, the infantry leaping to the attack. Despatches received here during the night, said the Germans were yielding ground, yard by yard in Champagne, fighting bravely, but going down before massed charges of French bayonets. The enemy has made several attempts to stem the advance by flooding the area before their trenches with clouds of asphyxiating gases. High winds swept vapours away as they left the German trenches. The chalky hills of Champagne region are throwing up great white clouds of dust under constant hammering of French and German shells. Dead and wounded are being mantled by snow-white powder splotched with crimson. The Germans under Gen. Von Fabeck are battling desperately in Champagne to save the Basencourt-Argonne railway toward which the French armies have been moving since early Saturday. All French gains are being held and newly captured positions improved to meet counter-attacks. To the north the British are reported to be making further progress under greatest difficulties. The strongest defensive line of the Western front reaches from Arras northward to the sea. Against this hard barrier Gen. French is driving with remarkable success.

Russians Have Scored New Successes on the Eastern Front

PARIS, Sept. 28.—Allied successes continue. All new ground held by the British and French and some new territory has been taken. Official capitulation shows 20,000 prisoners have been taken and seventy guns.

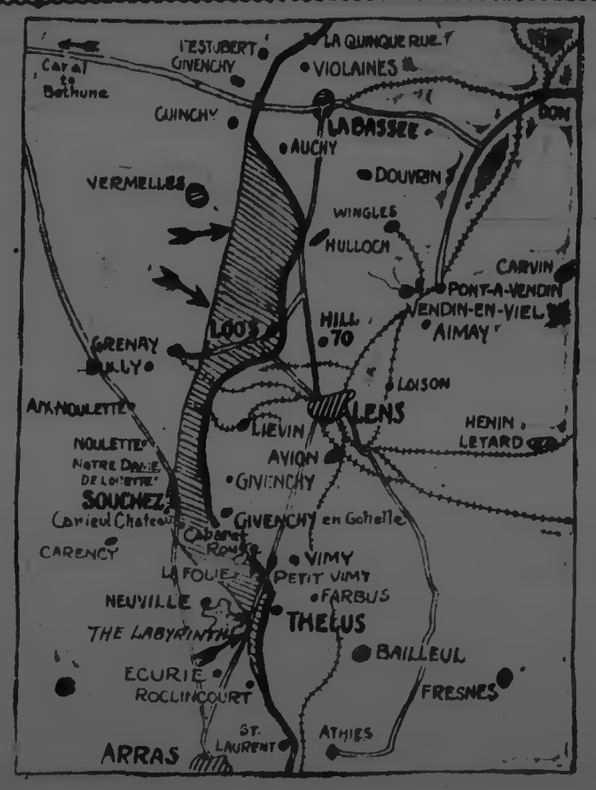
LONDON, Sept. 28.—The British offensive near Lens develops rapidly. It is expected that the town will be taken from the Germans to-day.

AMSTERDAM, Sept. 28.—German papers intimate that the Crown Prince may be relieved of his command because of foolhardy orders.

ATHENS, Sept. 28.—Operations in the Dardanelles have settled into a state of siege for the time being.

OTTAWA, Sept. 28.—Brig.-General Mercer, commanding the Ontario Brigade, has been transferred to the new Brigade of Corps troops, and Lt.-Col. Garnet Hughes has been promoted to the command of the Ontario Brigade.

PETROGRAD, Sept. 28.—Russians have scored new successes on the Eastern front.



BRITISH AND FRENCH ADVANCE—Between La Bassee and Arras (a distance of 11 miles) the Allied armies have commenced another drive similar to the one in Champagne. Both Loos and Souchez were captured that drive last Sunday. The communications broken threaten the [illegible] enemy's occupation of Lens and La Bassee.

LEGHORNS, THE HENS FOR LAYING, HE SAYS

JAMESTOWN, Sept 27 "I raise Leghorn poultry because of their tremendous egg production, and Rose Comb Buff Leghorns because I think they are the handsomest and finest fowls to be found in the world," explained Howard J. Fiske of the Bonna Vista poultry yards at Falconer. He summed up the whole argument in the one sentence, he said

"To make a success with any animal," continued Mr Fiske, "you must love that animal, be willing to study it in every way possible, and take time, effort and attention to carry out what you learn of its needs and habits."

"There are no better poultry for egg production than the buff leghorns, and no birds which mature earlier, or are more easily kept, or turn a larger proportion of their food into egg production."

Mr Fiske has a large and successful business. "I find it profitable, both for the breeding and vigour of my flock, and for the publicity it brings, to breed for show purposes," he continued, "and the Rose Comb Buff Leghorns are particularly adapted to show purposes by reason of their fine lines, handsome colour, and showy heads."

Quick, Safe Way To Remove Hairs

(Toilet Talks.)

Keep a little delatone powder on your dressing table and when ugly, hairy growths appear, make a paste with a little of the powder and some water, apply and let remain on the hairy surface for 2 or 3 minutes, then rub off, wash the skin and the hairs have vanished. This treatment is quite harmless and rarely more than one application is required, but to avoid disappointment care should be used to buy the real delatone

FOR GRAVES OF THE HEROES

The British War Office announces that no crosses or memorials to mark the graves of those who have died overseas can be accepted for transit.

Numerous graves are well within range of [illegible] shell fire which would [illegible] destroy them as [illegible] crosses. The former could not rapidly be replaced, whereas the latter could be erected immediately approach were possible.

Further, many graves are in close proximity to the enemy and can only be approached at night, therefore the weight of the [illegible] erected is an important factor.

Soap is Bad For the Hair

Soap should be used very sparingly, if at all, if you want to keep your hair looking its best. Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle, and ruins it.

The best thing for steady use is just ordinary mulsified cocoanut oil (which is pure and greaseless), and is better than soap or anything else you can use.

One or two teaspoonfuls will cleanse the hair and scalp thoroughly. Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, which rinses out easily, removing every particle of dust, dirt, dandruff and excessive oil. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and it leaves the scalp soft, and the hair fine and silky, bright, lustrous, fluffy and easy to manage.

You can get mulsified cocoanut oil at any pharmacy, it's very cheap, and a few ounces will supply every member of the family for months.

Prisoners Have Reached Paris

PARIS, Sept. 28. — Parisians are frenzied with joy. Everywhere the victory of the allies is being celebrated with cheers and singing of the Marseillaise. The celebration began yesterday and still continues.

Theatre performances were interrupted frequently last night as enthusiastic members of the audience rose and proposed cheers for the French army and its British allies.

All day Sunday, last night and today trains carrying German prisoners passed through the suburb of Le Bourget on their way to various concentration camps. Le Bourget became the Mecca of the curious by noon, thousands of persons going there to get a glimpse of the prisoners.

Aviators to Demonstrate

PARIS, Sept. 28.—At one point in the environs of Paris yesterday 120 aeroplanes went into the air in a spontaneous demonstration of joy over the victories for the arms of the Allies to the north and east.

The point from which they rose is one of the railway transfer stations of the Paris belt line, and the arrival of ten trainloads of German prisoners brought the first indication of the successes.

One airman after another rose waving the tricolour, until 120 machines were maneuvring.

She Knew.

"How absurd you are grandma," protested the girl. "Of course I know what needles are for. They're to make the graphophone play."—St Louis Republic.

WATER WAS BAD.

GOT DIARRHOEA.

Change of water, change of diet, catching cold, eating unripe fruit, etc., are all causes of diarrhoea.

The safest and quickest cure for diarrhoea, dysentery, colic, cholera, cholera morbus, cholera infantum and all looseness of the bowels is Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry.

Mr. W. J. Quinn, Shelburne, Ont., writes: "About two years ago I was out in the West for harvest. The water out there was so bad that I took diarrhoea, and became so bad I was not able to work. I procured a bottle of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, and when I had taken half of the bottle the diarrhoea stopped, and by the time I had taken the entire bottle I was able to resume work. I sincerely recommend it to all those troubled as I was."

There are a great many imitations of "Dr. Fowler's" on the market, so see you get "Dr. Fowler's" when you ask for it.

Our Serial Story Page

Then I went over and stood above Mr. Poopendyke.

"Mr. Poopendyke," said I slowly, darkly, "what do you know about those violets?"

He quailed. "I hope you don't mind, Mr. Smart. It's all right. I put one of your cards in so that there couldn't be any mistake."

Halfway up the winding stairways I paused in some astonishment. It had just occurred to me that I was going up the steps two at a time and that my heart was beating like mad.

I reflected. Here was I racing along like a schoolboy, and for what? What occasion was there for such unseemly haste? In the first place, it was now out a few minutes after 11, and she had asked me for luncheon. There was no getting around that. At best luncheon was two hours off. So why was I galloping like this? The series of self inflicted questions found me utterly unprepared. I couldn't answer one of them.

After ten minutes of serious, undisturbed consideration of the matter I came to the final conclusion that it was not love, but pity, that had driven me to such abnormal activity. It was nonsense to even argue the point.

For an hour and a half by my watch, but five or six by my nerves, I paced the lonely, sequestered halls in the lower regions of the castle. Two or three times I was sure that my watch had stopped, the hands seemed so stationary. The third time I tried to wind it I broke the mainspring, but as it was nearly 1 o'clock not much harm was done.

That one little sentence, "Have you deserted me?" grew to be a voluminous indictment. I could think of nothing else. There was something ineffably sad and pathetic about it. Had she been unhappy because of my beastly behavior?

At last I approached her door. Upon my soul, my legs were trembling! I experienced a silly sensation of fear. I hesitated; then, plucking up my courage and putting all silly questions behind me, I rapped resoundingly on the door.

The excellent Hawkes opened it. I started back in dismay. He stood aside impressively.

"Mr. Smart!" he announced.

I caught sight of the countess. She was arranging some flowers on the table, Blatchford was placing the knives and forks. Helen Marie Louis Antoinette stood beside her mistress holding a box of flowers in her hands.

What was it that I had been thinking out there in those gloomy halls? That she would greet me with a pathetic, hurt look and—

"Good morning!" she cried gayly. Hurt? Pathetic? She was radiant! "So glad to see you again. Hawkes has told me how busy you've been."

"Awfully, awfully busy," I murmured. Was it relief at finding her so happy and unconcerned that swept through me? I am morally but shamelessly certain it wasn't.

"Don't you think the roses are lovely in that old silver bowl?"

"Exquisite!"

"Blatchford found it in the plate vault," she said, standing off to admire the effect. "Do you mind if I do so arranging them?" she asked, and without waiting for an answer resumed her employment.

"Bon jour, m'sieur," said Helen Marie Louise Antoinette over her mistress' shoulder. One never knows whether a French maid is polite or merely spiteful.

"It seems ages since I saw you last," said the countess in a matter of fact tone, jigging a rose into position and then standing off to study the effect, her head cocked pryingly at an angle of inquiry.

It suddenly occurred to me that she had got on very well without me during the ages. The discovery irritated me. She was not behaving at all as I had expected.

"There hasn't been a great deal of news," I said.

She dropped a long stemmed rose and waited for me to pick it up.

"Thank you," she said. "Oh, did it prick you?"

"Yes," said I flatly. Then we both gave the closest attention to the end of my thumb, while I triumphantly squeezed a tiny drop of blood out of it. I sucked it. The incident was closed. She was no longer interested in the laceration.

"So you thought I had deserted you?" I said, and was a little surprised at the gruffness in my voice.

"The violets appeased me," she said, with a smile. For the first time I noticed that she was wearing a large bunch of them. "You will be bankrupt, Mr. Smart, if you keep on buying roses and violets and orchids for me."

So the roses were mine also! I shot a swift glance at the mantelpiece, irresistibly moved by some mysterious force. There were two bowls of orchids there.

"But they are lovely!" she cried, noting the expression in my face and misconstruing it. "You are an angel."

That was the last straw. "I am nothing of the sort!" I exclaimed, very hot and uncomfortable.

"You are," was her retort. "There! Isn't it a lovely centerpiece? Now, you must come and see Rosemary. She adores the new elephant you sent to her."

"Ele"— I began, blinking my eyes. "Oh—oh, yes, yes! Ha, ha! The elephant!" Good heavens! Had that idiotic Poopendyke started a menagerie in my castle?

I was vastly relieved to find that the elephant was made of felt and not too large to keep Rosemary from wielding it skillfully in an assault upon the hapless Jinko.

CHAPTER XVI.

The Count and Herr Schwartzmuller.

Our luncheon was not as gay nor as unconventional as others that had preceded it. The countess vainly tried to make it as sprightly as its predecessors, but gave over in despair in the face of my taciturnity. Her spirits drooped. She became strangely uneasy and, I thought, preoccupied.

"What is on your mind, countess?" I asked rather gruffly, after a painful silence of some duration.

She regarded me fixedly for a moment. She seemed to be searching my thoughts. "You," she said very succinctly. "Why are you so quiet, so funereal?" I observed a faint tinge of red in her cheeks, as she answered confidences in her turn. Was there anger also?

I apologized for my unmannerly and assured her that my work was responsible. Would I come to see her the next day?

"But don't think of coming, Mr. Smart," she declared, "if you feel you cannot spare the time away from your work."

"My dear countess," I exclaimed, displaying a livelier interest than at any time before, "I shall be delighted to come. Permit me to add that my work may go hang."

Her face brightened. "But men must work," she objected.

"Not when women are willing to play," I said.

"Splendid!" she cried. "You are reviving. I feel better. If you are going to be nice I'll let you stay."

"Thanks. I'll do my best."

She seemed to be weighing something in her mind.

"If you don't mind what the servants are saying about us, Mr. Smart, I am quite sure I do not."

I caught my breath.

"Oh, I understand everything," she cried mischievously, before I could stammer anything in reply. "They are building a delightful romance around us. And why not? Why begrudge them the pleasure? No harm can come of it, you see."

"Certainly no harm," I floundered.

"The gossip is confined to the castle. It will not go any further. We can afford to laugh in our sleeves, can't we?"

"Ha, ha!" I laughed in a strained effort, but not into my sleeve. "I rejoice to hear you say that you don't mind. No more do I. It's rather jolly."

"Fancy any one thinking we could possibly fall in love with each other," she scoffed. Her eyes were very bright. There was a suggestion of cold water in that remark.

"Yes, just fancy," I agreed.

"Absurd!"

"But of course, as you say, if they can get any pleasure out of it why should we object?"

"Well, we are bosom friends once more, are we not? I am so relieved."

"I suppose Poopendyke told you the—the gossip."

"Oh, no! I had it from my maid. She is perfectly terrible. All French maids are, Mr. Smart. Beware of French maids! She won't have it any other way than that I am desperately in love with you. Isn't she delicious?"

"Eh?" I gasped.

"And she confides the wonderful secret to every one in the castle, from Rosemary down to Jinko."

"'Pon my soul!" I murmured.

"And so now they all are saying that I am in love with you," she laughed. "Isn't it perfectly ludicrous?"

"Perfectly," I said without enthusiasm. My heart sank like lead. Ludicrous? Was that the way it appeared to her? I had a little spirit left. "Quite as ludicrous as the fancy Britton has about me. He is obsessed by the idea that I am in love with you. What do you think of that?"

She started. I thought her eyes narrowed for a second. "Ridiculous," she said very simply. Then she arose abruptly. "Please ring the bell for Hawkes."

ADVERTISE IN THE EXAMINER

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

A Broken Vow.

By JANE LUDLUM LEE.

Copyright, 1915, by C. H. Sutcliffe.

"Shall I put this gray dress in the trunk, Alice, or do you think it will be too thin?"

This remark was addressed to a disconsolate looking girl who sat huddled up in a big armchair at the window day dreaming. Her dark, red brown hair had not been combed, and her dress consisted of a pink silk wrapper carelessly tied around the waist. No answer was forthcoming to the question.

"Alice, do you hear me?"

"Yes—that is, no, auntie—that is, I don't care. I don't want any clothes."

"But, my child, you can't go to a hotel without clothes. Come; you must help me with the packing. I'll attend to the body of the trunk, and you pack the tray."

Alice moved leisurely from her corner and languidly threw some trifles

"THIS IS NOT MY TRUNK AT ALL!"

in the trunk. She went over to her desk and scratched off a hasty note while her aunt finished her part of the packing. Finally the task was finished, and Alice offered to lock the trunk. This she did, putting the key in her purse.

"Thank you, auntie. I'll be ready promptly at 2, and ask Mary to mail this letter, please."

At about the same hour Willard Kean was walking the floor of his handsome bachelor apartment in a fashionable district of the city.

"I'll be darned if it was my fault, and I'll be darned if I apologize. She can just sulk it out, and I'll leave town where I'll not be tempted. Perry, Perry!" he called, and a little Japanese servant appeared.

"Throw a few of my duds into a trunk, will you? I'm off for a few days at Hot Springs. You know what I'll need—dress suit, dinner coat and a few togs for loafing on the piazza. And, Perry, be quick about it, for I'm going on the first train out."

Perry began his task, bobbing in and out of the room, his arms laden with linen, fancy vests, suits, etc. When the packing was finished he asked for the key.

"I'll lock it," replied his master. "You call a cab. That train leaves about 2 o'clock, and if I miss it there will be just one less Jap in this town tomorrow."

Kean walked to the mantelpiece, picked up something, threw it in the trunk and locked the latter. He caught the 2 o'clock train and settled himself in his section.

Alice and her aunt made the same train and were soon comfortably fixed in the stateroom of the adjoining car. Orders were given that meals should be served to them there, while Kean ate in the regular diner.

After a half hour of absolute silence auntie opened the conversation.

"Alice, dear, you must pull yourself together. Willard Kean is not the only man in the world. We really cannot afford this trip, and you must try to get some benefit from it. Hot Springs is full of young people, and I simply cannot have you going about with that long face."

"I didn't want to take the trip. I didn't want anything except to be let alone. I don't want to get any benefit, and I simply will not try to be pleasant to anybody, so there now."

Auntie dropped the conversation for a time more propitious. The next day brought them to Hot Springs, where they got off and drove to the hotel. The clerk assigned them to a room, and they asked that their trunks be sent up at once. Two trunks were soon delivered, and Alice stopped to unlock hers. The key went in rather hard, it turned harder, but finally it gave to the strength of her hand. She opened the lid, and her own photograph stared her in the face.

"Auntie, did you put that picture in here?"

"Certainly not, my dear. Why should

I? Besides, I have none like that."

"Auntie, this is most peculiar. This is not my trunk at all! Why, see, it is full of men's shirts, vests, ties, etc. It's all a mistake except the picture.

There's no mistake about that. It's mine, all right enough. But what is it doing in a strange man's trunk?"

"Maybe the photographer sold it to him."

"Maybe he did, auntie, but look on the back: 'To the dearest sweetheart in the world—Alice.' That picture I gave to Jack just after we were engaged. The owner of this trunk is a common thief, and I'll report him to the hotel management. Help me fix my hair, auntie. I am going right to the office and have this matter adjusted at once."

* * * * * * * *

Kean dropped off the car at Hot Springs, sauntered up to the hotel and went to his room, where he lit his pipe and began walking the floor. A knock at the door interrupted his thoughts, and he opened it to let in the men with his trunk.

"That's not my trunk, you muttonhead! Get out of here with it!"

"Marked with your name, sir, on the tag. Just try your key and see if you are sure it's wrong."

Kean took out his key ring, all the while talking as he fitted the key in the lock.

"Sure it's wrong! Why, you thick headed chump, don't a man know his own baggage? What is this—a hotel or a batty house? Holy Moses!" he exclaimed as the key fitted and the trunk opened upon a large photograph of himself in a leather frame.

"All right, boys, my mistake," he added as he handed each man a dollar bill.

Left alone, he picked up the photograph and walked with it to the window, pinched himself to see if he was alive, then laughed, then swore. Examining the trunk, he realized it was not his, as he had no use for silk petticoats and lingerie dresses.

"I'll keep this photo, all right, all right, but the lady can have her trunk," he mused as he made his way to the office. The clerk smiled as he made the complaint.

"Come right with me, will you, Mr. Kean? A lady just came down from room 411 who, I think, can explain this mistake and give you your rightful belongings."

"All I want is my trunk, I'm not anxious to see the lady."

"But I'd rather you came along to make it easier for me," and Kean followed in silence.

The clerk's knock at the door of 411 was answered by "Come in," and they entered.

"Here is the gentleman whose trunk you have and who can return yours, Miss Buckingham, and"—

"Billy!"

"Alice!"

"Mr. Kean!"

"Miss Buckingham!"

Auntie seemed to have something private to say to the clerk, for she asked him to step into the hall for a moment with her, thus leaving the two culprits alone.

Alice looked like a wilted flower, and tears came to her eyes. What could a man do, even if it was not his fault, even if he had taken a solemn oath not to apologize? He reached out his arms, and she slipped into their embrace and cried just a few happy tears on a shoulder very dear to her.

"Please don't cry, Alice. Of course I was to blame. It was nasty of me to tease you about that Boston girl; but, really, dear, I only did it just to see how much you cared."

"And I cared so much. But, Billy, dear, how can you explain about these trunks? My key opened yours."

"They enough, darling. We bought these two trunks on that shopping expedition when auntie chaperoned us in Paris at the Bon Marche, and evidently the locks were the same. We won't have that trouble again, Alice, for the next time we take a trip there will only be one trunk for both of us. Where is your ring, dear—consigned to the ocean or the ash barrel?"

"Oh, Billy, you're horrid to find me out! Here it is around my neck. You see, I wrote you saying the engagement was all off, but I kept the ring just for a day or two, you understand, thinking maybe—oh, don't be so mean!"

"Well, I'll forgive you this time, but don't take it off again until the plain gold one goes on under it."

And she promised to do as he said.

Failed Again.

The stout man opened the door of the small waiting room at Bushby station and looked cautiously into the room. As he saw it was apparently empty, he entered, closed the door softly behind him and tiptoed over to the weighing machine. "I guess I've got my chance at last," he muttered as he hastily thrust a cent into the slot and stepped gingerly on the platform at the same instant.

He settled himself firmly and was adjusting his glasses to decipher the number of pounds registered when the door of the ticket agent's room opened, and out he came, rubbing his chilled hands.

"Have to warm up at the stove once in awhile," he said genially and was surprised at the answer he received.

"Any excuse does 'em, I notice," muttered the stout man, and he stepped heavily from the weighing machine without having deciphered the figures.

"You won't find out how much I weigh today!" he said loudly, with a hostile glance at the ticket agent. "This is the forty-fifth time I've tried to use one o' these machines in peace, but now I give it up. If 'tisn't an imposition, I don't know what is!"—Youth's Companion.

ECZEMA ON THE HEAD.

Mr. Peterson, South Bay, Ont., writes: "For years I suffered a sort of eczema on the head. I tried four different doctors, giving each a fair trial, but the disease grew worse and spread to my arm. I got Dr. Chase's Ointment, and it has entirely cured me. I give you my name because I want other sufferers to know about this splendid Ointment."

A MORNING AUTO RIDE.

When the clouds are white and fleecy
And the fields with daisies pied
Then I start the motor humming
For a morning auto ride.
Gliding through the sunny landscape,
Where the balmy zephyrs play,
Care and toil are left behind us,
Pain and grief are far away.

Dipping down in misty hollows,
Skimming merrily along,
Climbing up to breezy hilltops
To the motor's pleasant song,
Don't you catch the fragrance blowing
From the clover and the corn
And a thousand wild sweet blossoms
Offering incense to the morn?

Let her out upon the level
Till the road beneath us reels
And the miles are left behind us
In a rush of roaring wheels.
There are signs to stop the speeder—
In a second they are past—
But we do not read the warnings;
We are going much too fast.

Oh, the joy of rapid motion
When the nerves are tense and trust
Oh, the pleasure to the vision
Of the fast unfolding view!
Oh, the [illegible] that thrills me
Just to feel [illegible] alive
And to know I am the master
Of the thunderbolt I drive!

Now we turn for home and breakfast.
What an appetite I've got!
Hope we'll find the eggs and bacon
And the coffee smoking hot.
For I tell you all the doctors
That upon the earth abide
Would be beggars of each patient
Took a morning auto ride.

Rumor and Philosophy

By DUNCAN M. SMITH

HER REASON.

Fair as the breaking of the dawn,
Graceful as a fawn,
Modest, yet wise,
With downcast eyes,
A blushing cheek,
Meek,
Demure,
Pure
As the winter snow,
And so
Cunning you can't resist her,
Say, mister,
Do you guess?
Yes?
Of course you do.
Who
Could mistake the June bride,
All wool and a yard wide?
All wool, of course, is figuratively speaking.
Were we seeking
Too exact truth we would say
Lawn, muslin and pique,
Soft, fluffy, light as air,
The stuff that angels wear,
With sunshine spun,
And well may she, being one,
Adopt their style of dress.
As we go to press,
We see no reason why
She should not. Money cannot buy,
We are free to aver,
Anything too good for her.
She holds the center of the stage;
In all the rage,
And well deserves to be.
But, let's see,
What of the June bridegroom?
Is there no room
For him?
Yes; in some corner dim
He sits subdued,
In passive mood,
Knowing that he has to play
A poor second, and that he may
Be thankful, though it jars his pride,
To be the annex of the June bride.

Found the Cause.

Mabel was sad. She mused and meditated, but existence refused to scintillate in the roseate realm of iridescent rays, but remained dull, dank and desolate. Life seemed like an endless, boundless prune orchard.

She paced painfully up and down her apartment with impatient No. 6 feet, pausing a moment to look through the polished pane at the wabbly passers on the wet, weird street below.

"It is dark and dreary as my life," she said, flinging herself into a chair and giving her feelings a chance to take a few physical culture exercises. "Why am I so heart weary tonight?" she propounded to herself as civil service question No. 1. "I haven't eaten but three quarts of strawberries and a dozen doughnuts and should feel light hearted."

Involuntarily her fingers strayed to the lower edge of her chair. They touched something, and her whole face lighted up. It was her chewing gum. As a needy widow with sixteen children flies to the county poor agent it glided to her face. Her jaws grasped the treasure, and contentment was written in six inch letters from the toe of her boot to the Grecian coil of her top hair.

A Life Preserver.

"Do you ever use that extra tire you carry fastened to the top of the tonneau?" the motor car enthusiast was asked.

"Queerest thing you know," was the reply. "The other night I ran off a bridge into the river."—Puck.

A Thought Modernly Applied.

"All the world's a stage," said the man who quotes.

"Yes," answered the cynical citizen, "and some of the worst actors in the outfit are doing the most talking about elevating it."—Washington Star.

Last Resort.

"I should think he'll be tired of making love to you."

"I guess he is."

"What—has he quarrelled with you?"

"No—asked me to marry him."—Cleveland Leader.

GERMANY THE LOOTER

Articles of Hague Conventions Deliberately Set Aside

Articles 46 and 53 of The Hague Convention specify that private property must be respected by belligerents, and requisition cannot be claimed for other than the army of occupation. That is, only the invading army on the spot has a right to requisition stores or supplies from the community of which it has gained control, and then only for its own local use. The Germans subscribed to these articles, in common with others, and in the case of Belgium this is how they observed them:

In Antwerp they seized $8,600,000 worth of cotton, $1,000,000 worth of rubber, $1,200,000 worth of woollens, $2,000,000 worth of leather.

In Ghent they seized cotton nets, flax and other raw materials worth $1,700,000.

In Charleroi they seized $200,000 worth of copper, and tool machines worth $3,400,000.

In Duffel they seized $300,000 worth of nickel.

In Malines they seized $500,000 worth of canned goods.

The facts were filed by the Belgian Minister with the United States Government as official. In all, about $87,000,000 worth of raw materials were seized in Belgium, and transported to Germany for the use of German factories.

Cures Biliousness Prevents Brights Disease

The Certified Statement of One Has Proven the Efficiency of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills

Mr. Colin M. Kiel, Craighurst, Simcoe county, Ontario, writes: "My mother and I have both used Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills with great satisfaction. We find that there is nothing to equal them as a prompt cure for torpid liver, biliousness and indigestion. Some years ago my mother came near to death from kidney trouble and has to be careful in preventing Bright's disease. By using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills occasionally she keeps the kidneys healthy and active. Another point favourable to Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills is that they do not gripe and yet accomplish good results. You are at liberty to use my letter."

This statement is endorsed by Mr. Marmaduke Caston, Justice of the Peace, who writes: "This is to certify that I am personally acquainted with Mr. Colin M. Kiel and believe his statement regarding Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills to be true and correct."

If you are interested in this case, write to Mr. Kiel, enclosing stamp for reply, and he will verify his statement. We like to have people to do this, for we are very careful to only use statements from responsible persons.

Should this case not be similar to yours, write to us for the statement of some one whose trouble was along the same lines. We have thousands of letters to choose from. Or better still, put the Kidney-Liver Pills to the test right away. They will only cost you a quarter, and a box lasts for some time.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

LADY'S DRESS.

By Anabel Worthington.

This dress gives us an original costume with many of the new style features. It has a jacket blouse, with an applied vest which extends to the shoulder seams in narrow straps. There is a shaped peplum which is merely a continuation of the waist below the belt. The open neck is trimmed with a frill and the plain sleeves are full length and fitted to the arm.

The two gore skirt is made with considerable fulness. This is gathered at the top, leaving the centre of the front plain. The lower edge of the skirt measures 3 yards in the medium size.

This is a style which will look its best in soft materials, and there is a new soft finish serge which greatly resembles vienna, so silky is its surface, and this will be exceptionally attractive in such a style. The vest may be of faille or of rep silk. It should be heavy and rich, as it is so plain, and little jewelled buttons will make a dainty trimming for it.

A great deal of silk cashmere is seen at present, and this, as well as panne velvet, will be used for handsome costumes. The nature of both these fabrics demands soft, graceful designs in the garments in which they are employed.

The Iress pattern, No. 7,341, is cut in sizes 34 to 44 inches bust measure. Medium size requires 3¼ yards of 50 inch material, with ⅝ yard of 18-inch goods for vest, 1¼ yard of 4-inch edging for collar and 1½ yards of edging for sleeves.

This pattern can be obtained by sending 10 cents to the office of this paper.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

ITALY IS WAGING BUSINESSLIKE WAR

Absence of Jingoism and Bravado Characterizes Its Attitude

DEEP HATRED OF AUSTRIA

All Classes United in Calm Determination to Avenge Age-Long Oppression.

MILAN, Sept 8.—If one recalls the effervescent enthusiasm, the outbursts of popular participation in the war, a visit to Italy to-day will prove instructive.

Italy stands revealed in a new light. An efficient, businesslike activity in matters concerning the prosecution of the war has taken the place of the frenzy of the first days. Italy has now settled down to the arduous task of fighting the battles of the Trentino and the Isonzo in a manner worthy of admiration. No one here underestimates the difficulty of the task. No one minimizes the risks and dangers, or the possibility of reverses. There is an absence of a spirit of bravado, a cool calmness, a clear-sighted facing of facts that is impressive.

To the Italians the war is a serious business not entered upon for vague motive of international policy, which only a few of the initiated can understand, nor waged to defend ethical principles such as the violation of treaties, but the final phase of a struggle for national unity; a continuation of the conflict which freed Venetia in 1866. To-day is it in Trentino and Trieste, the last remnants of Italian soil held in the grip of the hated Hapsburgs, which the people of a united and powerful Italy are slowly regaining from the trammels of Austrian oppression.

A War Against Austrian Oppression.

To the average Italian the warfare that is raging elsewhere in Europe is of little immediate concern. He does not well understand the "cause" of the Allies, nor in any sense feel closely bound to them. The Italians are fighting their own battles against their hereditary enemy, Austria, and this conflict is occupying their undivided attention. It is this national rather than international consciousness which chiefly distinguishes the Italian from the other combatants. The war, as carried on by the Italians, has in it something of the vendetta spirit which is so at home in Italian hearts. It is being waged against "Zecco Beppo," as the hated Emperor Francis Joseph is called—the oppressor of Italian liberty, the tyrant, the scourge of the world to-night to plunge his dagger. And though Italian national feeling never before has flared forth to the significant that there is a total absence of inflamed jingoism.

It would be disguising the truth to say that there is any strong feeling of solidarity on the part of the Italians with France or Russia. For England there is much real sympathy and affection. But the Italian is intent on looking out for himself, and is wary of foreign alliances, as in the past they have not proved an unmixed blessing. It is difficult to realize that Italy is fighting side by side with the Allies. In Milan and other cities the streets are gay with flags; every house has one or more flags flying. Unlike London or Paris, where flags of all the Allies are to be seen, here I saw only invariably the Italian tricolor. Never in conversation did I hear it mentioned that Italy was fighting for a "common cause." The Allies are looked upon as friendly and well-intentioned spectators, but the average Italian puts all his trust in his own troops.

Italy's Scientific Warfare.

Perhaps the most significant achievement of the Italians is the manner in which they have been able to separate the business of making war from their ordinary, everyday occupations. The absence of confusion the methodic manner in which they control the economic and military activities of the country, not allowing the one to interfere with the other, furnishes an object lesson by which the other members of the Quadruple Entente might well profit. Italy is making war in a scientific, unostentatious manner. The Italian Army, officered by men who know and love their profession, is carrying out the tasks intrusted to it as quietly and calmly as though they were mere "grand manoeuvres." There is a total absence of the makeshift and the improvised, which means not merely careful but honest preparation for war.

At first sight it appears that the nation as a whole is unconcerned in the war. The great number of young, able-bodied men who have not been called to the colors, the continuing of work on public improvements, men working in the fields at tasks which might easily be intrusted to women, the relatively few troops to be seen outside the war zone, would seem to point to a half-hearted effort. A brief investigation proves this to be false.

During the ten months before Italian participation in the war, Italy learned the lesson of efficiency, learned from Germany the advantage of providing for every possible contingency to carry on war in a scientific manner. When the European war broke out, Italian arsenals were empty; stocks of war material had been allowed to fall to unprecedented levels of depletion; there were only a few rounds of ammunition on hand; Italy was powerless to assert her will in the council of nation. With tireless energy the Italians have worked to accumulate stores and munitions, rectifying strategic and tactical errors, profiting by the mistakes of all the other belligerants. The ease with which their army has been able to go into battle, fully equipped and provisioned, confirms the thoroughness of Italian preparations, and in a great measure accounts for the undisturbed state of the country.

A small boy seated on the curb by a telephone pole, with a tin can by his side, attracted the attention of an old gentleman who happened to be passing. "Going fishing?" he inquired, good naturedly.

"Nope," the youngster replied; "take a peek in there."

An investigation showed the can to be partly filled with caterpillars of the tussock moth.

"What in the world are you doing with them?"

"They crawl up trees and eat off the leaves."

"So I understand."

"Well, I'm fooling a few of them."

"How?"

"Sendin' 'em up this telephone pole."

THOUGHT SHE COULD NOT LIVE

Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Unionville, Mo.—"I suffered from a female trouble and I got so weak that I could hardly walk across the floor without holding on to something. I had nervous spells and my fingers would cramp and my face would draw, and I could not speak, nor sleep to do any good, had no appetite, and everyone thought I would not live. Some one advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I had taken so much medicine and my doctor said he could do me no good so I told my husband he might get me a bottle and I would try it. By the time I had taken it I felt better. I continued its use, and now I am well and strong.

"I have always recommended your medicine ever since I was so wonderfully benefitted by it and I hope this letter will be the means of saving some other poor woman from suffering."—Mrs. MARTHA SHAVEY, Box 1144, Unionville, Missouri.

The makers of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound have thousands of such letters as that above—they tell the truth, else they could not have been obtained for love or money. This medicine is no stranger—it has stood the test for years.

If there are any complications you do not understand write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

LIVE BAIT BEST FOR FISHERMEN

Natural baits are those which most anglers are accustomed to using. Such baits include worms, frogs, minnows, grasshoppers, grubs, salt pork crickets, and many kinds of real fish food. The most common of all baits is the angleworm, and it is used more than any other because it can be secured so easily.

This bait can be used for all kinds of fish, and is accepted by large and small alike, no matter whether they are surface or bottom feeders. The worms may be used in that condition. But if they are dug a week before, washed and fed with a few bread crumbs soaked in milk, they become toughened and make the best bait.

It is a common saying that the big worm will catch the big fish. There appears to be little if anything in this, but a worm that is just the right size to cover the hook when properly impaled without crowding is the right size, and as a rule any fish will take it.

The grasshopper is another good bait, especially for surface-feeding fish. Perhaps no other bait will cause a lazy old trout to rise so quickly from the depths as will a lively, kicking grasshopper. The hook should be entered just below the head and run lengthwise of the body.

For black bass and other large fish the minnow is the favorite bait. By "minnow" is meant a small fish, for small fish are invariably called minnows by anglers regardless of their species. The small shiner, about four inches long, is a good bait, especially on dark days. A bass takes a minnow bait from behind or from the side, runs some distance with it, then stops strike. The same method of baiting and turns the fish about, to swallow the head first. This is the time to and hooking applies to all kinds of fish when minnow bait is used. Minnows should be carried in a minnow box and handled as little as possible.

Small frogs make good bait for all game fish, and may be used with a single hook by inserting through the lips, like baiting with a minnow. The dobson, or helgramite, is excellent as bait for mank kinds of fish. It is an ugly creature and is found under stones in the streams. In swift streams they are easily captured by turning stones and holding a minnow net below the stone. The current will carry the helgramities into the net.

Crawfish are common as bait used for still fishing. They are best at the time they have shed their shell and in this condition, may be hooked through the body, but at other times should be hooked through the tail. Bass are fond of crawfish. A bait that is quite a favorite for bass is a strip of fat salt pork cut in the shape of the letter C, with the hook through the small end. Caterpillers and other little creatures are sometimes used successfully. The grub is also used sometimes and the legs of a large frog skinned make good bait. The popular bait for salt water fishing are bloodworms, sandworms shrimp, shedder, clams, mossbunkers, fiddlers shedder crab, clams, fiddlers and killers.

A Hard Proposition.

There was a brigadier-general in the Civil War who was so earnest in his religious efforts that in a short time he had converted every man in the brigade except one hardened teamster. Going to his commander one day, the man said solemnly:

"General, I am lonesome. Every man in the camp has been converted except me. I suppose it's the right thing, but I don't see how I can manage it."

"Why, my good fellow," said the general, "I see no difficulty in the way of it, if you will just surrender your own will and ask for guidance."

"That's just it, general," said the teamster, "if I am converted, who in blazes is goin' to drive them mules?"—Philadelphia Ledger.

Tower to be Erected on the Frontier—"Sealing Bonds of Fellowship."

BERNE, Sept. 28.—(Despatch to the London Morning Post.)—The Germanization of Austria continues steadily. The latest development is congress of municipal representatives of German speaking Austrian towns ostensibly for helping the municipalities to adapt themselves to war conditions but really more for the consolidation of the German-speaking elements in the Austrain Empire.

Next Sunday the foundation will be laid on the Austro-German frontier of the so called "Turm der Bunreinenden, or tower sealing the bonds of fellowship between Germany and Austria-Hungary. The building operations will be begun, it is stated, immediately. The stone to be used is to be found locally.

The lower part of the tower will consist of a memorial hall, the walls of which are to be covered with tablets commemorating the names of soldiers of neighbouring districts who have fallen in the war, while the upper portion will take the form of a vast urn in which it is proposed to kindle a fire on all German and Austro-Hungarian national festival days. The tower will be over 400 feet high.

If tea should boil by being put too near the fire while infusing the bitter taste can be removed if a small quantity of cold water be put into the pot.

FURTHER GAINS MADE BY ALLIES ON WESTERN FRONT

By Steady Onslaughts Throughout Last Night French Gained New Ground South of Souchez--Strongly Fortified German Second Line Trenches Stormed at Several Points in Champagne--Crown Prince's Offensive in Argonne Completely Smashed.

GERMAN LOSSES ARE VERY HEAVY

PARIS, Sept. 28.—(French Official).—Despite the utmost resistance the French have made further gains, both in the Champagne region and around Arras, it was officially announced this afternoon. The fighting of the last 24 hours on all sectors of the battle front has been attended by heavy losses on both sides. Steady streams of fire are playing across the Champagne and Artois fronts, where the Anglo-French offensive continues.

By steady onslaughts throughout last night the French gained ground south of Souchez, approaching the hills held by the Germans in those regions. The French troops stormed the strongly fortified German second line trenches at several points in the Champagne region. Slight progress was made toward La Justice, north of Massiges, and a few miles west of Ville Se Tourbe. Further west a French detachment is approaching Hill No. 185, north of the Wacques Farm.

At other sectors of the Champagne front the French inflicted heavy losses on the enemy, though they were unable, in some instances, to pierce the strong German wire defences.

The attempt by the Crown Prince to divert the French from Champagne by attacking in the Argonne region proved fruitless. During last night the French troops took the offensive in the Argonne and recaptured nearly all the French sections taken by the Crown Prince's armies. The Crown Prince threw eighteen battalions against the French lines around the hill known as "The Daughter of Death" and elsewhere in the Argonne. When the Germans finally retired to their trenches, the slopes of "The Daughter of Death" were covered with German bodies.

PETROGRAD, Sept. 28.—The fighting around Dvinsk and in the region south-east of Riga is now becoming more violent. The Germans evidently have received the supplies of ammunition for which they were waiting and are bombarding the Russian positions along the Dvina. The Czar's troops, however, are more than holding their own, and, besides one thousand prisoners mentioned in last night's communique, have made other large captures. From the Dvinsk region to Pinsk, stubborn fighting is going on, with no important changes in the situation.

The Austrians have been reinforced in Galicia.

PETROGRAD, Sept. 28.—Russian warships bombarded the German positions near the Gulf of Riga on Saturday morning, silencing all the enemy's batteries, it was officially announced here to-day.

A chance shot from one of the German guns struck a Russian vessel, killing Commander Prince Wiasemski, Captain Swinin and five others, and wounding eight sailors.

Note.—This affair was reported yesterday from Berlin as a German victory. According to the German version the shell which struck the Russian ship was from an aeroplane.

LONDON, Sept. 28.—The Mussulman population of Adrianople has risen in revolt against Adil Bey, the Turkish Vali of Adrianople, according to an Athens correspondent of the Exchange Telegraph, who cabled to-day that the Vali's two sons and two chauffeurs were killed and his wife injured by the mob.

The correspondent reported that money is being received from leading Turkish banks and transferred to Asia Minor, and that the inhabitants of the villages along the Sea of Marmora have been ordered to hold themselves in readiness to evacuate.

AMSTERDAM, Sept. 28.—An Allied aviator flew over Liege yesterday, dropping French flags and proclamations telling the Belgian population to keep up courage as the hour of their deliverance was soon to come.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 28.—Austria to-day notified the United States Government that Ambassador Dumba had been recalled unconditionally. This removed all possibility of Dumba being recalled only on leave of absence to give an explanation.

LONDON, Sept. 28.—The Exchange Telegraph's Athens correspondent wired to-day it is learned positively at Athens that the Austro-German plan is to begin the invasion of Serbia within a fortnight.

LONDON, Sept. 28.—Sir Edward Grey, the British Foreign Minister, declared in the House of Commons this afternoon that he is convinced that Bulgaria has no hostile intentions toward her neighbours, and, furthermore, that there is no ill feeling in Britain against Bulgaria. Bulgaria's mobilization, he said, was only for the purpose of defending her rights.

This looks significant and may indicate that Britain knows the object of Bulgaria's mobilization, and officially approves of it.

LAUSANNE, Switzerland, Sept. 28.—Berlin papers say all telegraph and railway communication between Bulgaria and Roumania is suspended.

The Hero of the Hour

CAPTAIN CHARLIE ACKERMAN, who arrived in Peterborough this afternoon and was given a grand reception. Invalided home, he is the first of the Peterbrough men to arrive from the firing line.

A ROYAL RECEPTION

Peterboro's Citizens United in Receiving Capt. Chas. Ackerman With a Spontaneous Tribute of Affection and Admiration

THOUSANDS WERE OUT

It was a royal welcome home that Peterborough extended to Capt. Charlie Ackerman of the 57th Regiment and the 2nd Battalion, C.E.F., this afternoon. The citizens turned out in thousands to do honour to the gallant young officer, the first of the Peterborough detachment to return from the bloody fields of Flanders. The civic authorities, the members of the local overseas forces, the 57th Regiment, the bands, the fire brigade, three thousand four hundred school children, and the Cadets of the Collegiate Institute took part in the triumphal parade from the C. P. R. station to Central Park, where addresses of welcome were extended to Capt. Ackerman. Thousands of citizens were at the C.P.R. station when the train from the east arrived, and George street was crowded. The route of the procession was lined with the hundreds of children from the Public schools who joined the procession as it passed by. Flags were everywhere, most of the merchants decorated their business places for the occasion, while every flag staff had the Union Jack of Canadian ensign waiving in the breeze.

Headed by the band, the procession was a noteworthy one. Marching beside the cars containing Capt. Ackerman was an escort of twelve sturdy members of Peterborough's overseas force, while behind marched the gallant lads who are destined to carry on in the European battle fields the heroic work that Capt. Ackerman and his comrades have so splendidly inaugurated. Then came members of the 57th Regiment, the Collegiate Cadets, the fire brigade and school children and scores of citizens in motor cars, cheer after cheer vibrating through the air as the procession made its way up George street to Central Park, where patriotic enthusiasm was at the highest.

The order of parade was as follows:
Overseas Battalion Band.
Peterborough Overseas Company.
First car, Mayor Butler, with Capt. Ackerman, his parents, Col. D. Walker and Mr. R. M. Waddell.

The Band Will Stay Now For the Instruments

Now, people of Peterborough, its up to you. Last week The Examiner appealed for funds to secure instruments for the Overseas Band. A number of citizens generously subscribed money and instruments, but the response was not general. Many citizens said they would gladly subscribe if they knew definitely the band was going to stay here this winter. They did not care about providing a band for Belleville after furnishing Kingston with one. And frankly The Examiner sympathised with that attitude. Well, the band is going to stay here. Major-General Hughes has officially said so. And that puts it very distinctly up to us. Its our band, its our own boys that are playing in it, and its going to remain with us for the winter. We can't ask Belleville or anybody else to furnish the instruments, and we must have them right away. At the present moment the boys are using borrowed instruments generously loaned by the bands of the 57th and Salvation Army, both of which organizations are handicapped on that account. The Overseas Band, our own Peterborough Band, wants $1,500 at once. Are we going to fall down now when the Government has given us everything we asked for? The Examiner will take care of any subscription left with us for the Overseas Band. Last week we asked for 200 recruits by Saturday night—this week we want $1,500 by Saturday night. The recruits did not fail us.. Surely those who stay at home will show the same spirit and contribute generously to the Band Fund. And just one word more; we want that money this week. Get together!

CAPT. CHAS. ACKERMAN TALKS TO THE EXAMINER

Peterboro's Hero of the Hour Met at Tweed by Examiner Representative Who Has Interview With the First Member of the Peterboro' Detachment to Return From the Front

Of the Peterboro boys who formed the khaki group at Cetral Park on that sparkling morning a little more than a year ago, when the citizens bade them farewell and Godspeed, Lieutenant C. H. Ackerman is the first to return home.

He arrived this afternoon on the Montreal express, his left arm in a khaki sling. An Examiner reporter boarded the train at Tweed and found him sitting alone in the smoker.

"Hello there," was the cherry greeting, before the reporter realized the identity of the khaki-clad figure.

After an exchange of salutations, Lieut. Ackerman said. "They tell me I am looking well, and I know that I feel far better than that.

I was just having a smoke. Father and Mother are back in the car."

In regard to the reception which awaited him in Peterborough, Lieut. Ackerman remarked: "It looks as if I'm in for a speech; that's the hard part of it. Really it's very kind of the people, but you know how it would feel. I did not want any fuss, but father got awire on Sunday that something of a reception would be helpful in recruiting and, of course, we are all eager to assist in that.

Injuries in Left Arm.

Lieut. Ackerman, like most other returned soldiers, did not encourage questions about the part he played at the front. However, he said he was wounded on June 15 at Festubert, or as the soldiers term it, Givenchy. He was with the 4th company of the 2nd Battalion and had been sent out in front by the commanding officer as forward observer with Lieut. Laurie of Quebec scout corporal, and McNabb. A high explosive shell burst directly above them. McNabb was instantly killed; Lieut. Laurie received rather severe wounds about the right shoulder and Lt. Ackerman was wounded in various parts of the body by the flying fragments of the shell. He received two scalp wounds on the right side of his head. "Thank goodness I have a hard head," he remarked. His most severe wounds were in the region of his left shoulder and in the upper part of his left arm.

Never Lost Consciousness.

"I thought I was done for. I dropped to my knees, but I did not lose consciousness. This occurred on a Tuesday. Lieut. Ackerman was removed to a dugout in their trenches, and received first aid. On Thursday the men used a kitchen chair to which they strapped two rifles and improvised carrier. On account of the narrowness of the trenches and the fact that other troops were passing a stretcher could not be utilized. He was strapped to the chair and carried through the communication trenches to the rear and then to the hospital at Rouen.

Everything Was Done.

"There were two of the cleverest of surgeons there. It was an old monastery transformed into a hospital. The doctors overseas did everything possible for our comfort. We had splendid care and attention. In fact you could not wish for better.

On August 7th Lieut. Ackerman left Rouen for London and was transferred to Bromley, where he met Dr. A. W. McPherson.

His hospital treatment has left him a trifle, but not noticeably, thin. The left arm, resting in its support, rather heightens the impression of invalidity, which one is prepared to expect. He is just as bright and cheerful as ever. The welter of war has apparently touches him lightly, but in his conversation there are the evident indications of the effect of his experience.

"After all he remarked," I wouldn't liked to have hurried it. The fellowship of the trenches is more than I can express in words."

A Thoughtful Act.

Coming up from Montreal, Lt. Ackerman telegraphed to Havelock to Mrs Silas Green, mother of Private Earl Green, of the 4th Company, who was his batman at the front. It was a characteristic, kindly and thoughtful act. Mrs. Green told the Examiner that she got the message and had barely time to reach the train.

Lieut. Ackerman conversed with her for about 10 minutes and her face was alight with pleasure as she listened to the young officer's words of appreciation of her son, who is alive and well and still with No. 4 Co.. Lt. Ackerman is a living link between Peterborough and its men at the front. He was directly behind No. 2 Co. at the Lauguemarck wood.

Before the German fire the Peterborough Company, No. 2, faded in a few minutes. Lt. Ackerman found Major Bennett's body in one of the trenches, where he had apparently fallen partly into it.

He tells of the splendid behavior of all the men of the plucky stamina of Odley Taylor, reporter. Harold Matthews was in the Givenchy action and was with Lt. Ackerman shortly afterwards he was wounded. Gunner Mordie McGill on arriving at Browley saw Dr McPherson among the group that received the new arrivals. "By Jove, there is a man from the old town," said Mordie, and shouted out "How are you, Doc" The warmth of greeting was fully reciprocated, by the doctor. Sergt. Arthur Ackerman is in splendid condition, his brother states and in fact the men at the front are all fit, their comradeship is wonderful; no grouching, and there is a pervading esprit d'corps, which the civilian at home cannot appreciate.

Lt Ackerman repeated his references to the wonderful fellowship of the men in the trenches. It is something the new recruits have to look forward to as an entirely new experience.

GREAT VICTORY WAS FITTINGLY CELEBRATED

GUNNER GORDON NICHOLLS, one of the many Peterborough boys in the newly formed 33rd Battery at Barriefield.

Overseas Forces and Citizens Generally Participate in Big Demonstration—Triumphal Procession Followed By Huge Gathering at the Armouries.

ENTHUSIASM RAN HIGH

Peterborough had its first celebration since the war broke out last night, when the city turned out en masse to rejoice over the great victory won by the allies. It was really a double celebration, for in the midst of the excitement at the Armouries a telegram was received from Major-General Sam Hughes, announcing that Peterborough would be the headquarters of a new battalion, with five hundred men stationed here for the winter. Needless to say the good news augmented the rejoicing, and the huge crowd went wild with patriotic enthusiasm. It was a great night and should prove a splendid stimulus to recruiting.

Whole City Took Part.

The whole city took part in the demonstration. At half-past seven the hour announced for the commencement of the procession, the downtown streets were lined many deep with people, a large number of whom carried Union Jacks and the Red Canadian ensign. The parade was headed by the combined Overseas and 57th Bands, after which came the Peterborough Overseas Infantry Company, augmented by a squad of Peterborough boys in the Mounted Rifles, 33rd Battery and 59th Battalion, home on leave from Barriefield. The boys in khaki carried hundreds of flags — British, French, Russian, Belgian, and Italian. Behind them were the massed Senior and Boys' Bands of the Salvation Army, leading a party of hundreds of public school children, boys and girls, many of whom carried flags, and all of whom cheered steadily and lustily. A long line of automobiles brought up the rear.

The route of the parade was George Street to Hunter Street, west to Aylmer Street, south to Charlotte Street, east to George Street, and return to the Armouries via George and Hunter Streets. The bands played patriotic airs all the way round. "Tipperary" and "We'll Never Let The Old Flag Fall" were the favourites.

A Memorable Spectacle.

The soldier boys made the welkin ring in their singing of those two songs, while they waved their flags and set off Roman candles and other fire works. The spectacle of the sturdy lads in khaki swinging along as they joyously sang their marching song, was one that the spectators will not soon forget, and the uppermost thought was that it was just such gallant boys as these that had smashed through the German positions and that these same happy-faced enthusiastic citizen soldiers might soon be the central figures in another such glorious exploit. There was something of this feeling in the cheers from the crowd that greeted the overseas boys as they marched by, and that spirit was in evidence at the huge meeting in the Armouries that followed the parade.

Big Crowd Gathered.

The biggest crowd that was ever in the Armouries gathered on the return of the procession. Even the attendance at the rally addressed by Hon. George E. Foster, was surpassed every foot of floor space in the big building being occupied, while hundreds were unable to get inside. It was a jubilant, noisy crowd, bubbling over with enthusiasm, and they cheered on the slightest provocation, with the soldiers leading the demonstration. It was a difficult task for the speakers to make themselves heard, but they did their best under the circumstances. The crowd was too happy to mind a little thing like that, and they cheered anyway, while the bands kept the enthusiasm at fever heat with spirited renditions of patriotic airs that stirred the blood. "O Canada," "Rule Britannia," Tipperary," "We'll Never Let the Old Flag Fall," were played and sung, while hundreds of flags and hats waved in the air.

The meeting itself was impromptu in its nature Fire Chief Howard an

ANNOUNCEMENT OF TRAINING CENTRES FOR THE WINTER

Troops in the Third Division Will Be Quartered at Ottawa, Kingston, Belleville, Cobourg, Lindsay, Picton and Napanee

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

The Militia Department has officially announced the disposition of the troops in the Third Division for the winter. One battalion, the 77th and 40th Engineers will spend the winter at Ottawa. The 32nd, 33rd, and 34th Batteries, C.F.A., will winter at Kingston. Peterborough will have two companies of infantry, with the balance of the battalion at Cobourg and Lindsay. Belleville will also have two companies of another battalion, with the other companies wintered at Picton and Napanee. This latter battalion will be the 80th, which is commanded by Lt.-Col. Ketcheson of Belleville. The battalion with headquarters at Peterborough has not yet been named. The announcement says nothing about the 59th Battalion now at Barriefield, which looks as if that unit is going overseas this autumn.

Another big squad of recruits from the local overseas company were inoculated yesterday afternoon. There were some sore, stiff arms among the lads who waved the flags so vigorously in last night's parade, but they sang "We'll Never Let the Old Flag Fall" with spirit just the same.

The physical drill squad of the local overseas company practised with the band this morning in preparation for their exhibition at the Millbrook Fair on Friday.

The men who were inoculated yesterday had an easy time this morning—that is as easy as their arm would allow them to be.

This is a big week for Peterborough's overseas company. Last night they participated in the demonstration over the allies' victory, to-day they took part in the reception to Capt. Chas. Ackerman, to-morrow night they will be entertained at St. John's church, Thursday night they attend the concert under the auspices of the Soldiers' Wives and Mothers' Club, and on Friday the band and physical drill squad will be one of the main attractions at the Millbrook Fair. Added to all this the balance of the company were inoculated yesterday, while pay day also comes this week.

When the announcement was made at last night's meeting that Peterborough was to be headquarters for a

BULGARIA'S BLUNDER.

There is danger in letting the ruler of a country have too much of his way—danger to the national rights of the people—danger to the state. We, who live under democracy, enjoy its benefits and believe with all our hearts in its meaning and effects, cannot understand a ruler like Ferdinand of Bulgaria having so short a memory and so willing to subordinate the good of his country to the demands of royal relationships. In his family relations he is connected with the Emperor of Germany, and that fact seems to influence his diplomacy and dictate the policy of Bulgaria. One would think that of all countries in Europe Bulgaria would be the last to do anything to help the cause of Turkey, the historical enemy of Bulgaria. A little more than a generation ago, the Turkish rulers of Bulgaria, inflicted upon that country horrible massacres and indescribable cruelties. People of a little advanced age can remember how the world shuddered at the "Bulgarian atrocities," how Gladstone thundered against them, and how Russia fought for and won the relief of Bulgaria and other Slav states from the grinding tyranny of Turkey. Has Bulgaria forgotten all that? Has she forgotten that Russia was her friend, and that even at that time Austria and Germany combined to rob Bulgaria of the fruits of the Russian victory? If she makes common cause with Turkey, and Germany and Austria, she will be putting herself in the power of these countries, and she will find that the tender mercies of the wicked are cruel. If she does this, and if Germany should do the impossible—win in this great war—she has no guarantee that Germany will not regard any treaty that may be made as another "scrap of paper." If Bulgaria mounts the Austro-German charger, she will be riding for a fall. She would do better to take a little counsel with common sense and revive her memories of Turkish rule. She will make a fatal blunder if she casts in her lot with the Huns.

THE POINT OF VIEW.

Representatives of the people, especially, aldermanic and rural, do not always get the proper point of view in their relations to the communities they represent. At a recent meeting of the Board of Works the request of a suburban resident for the previlege of connection with the city sewer system was met with the argument that denial of the privilege would sooner force annexation of outlying suburbs to the city. This may be considered benaficent coercion; but, all the same, it is coercion, which has a little too much the flavour of the German doctrine of force, to commend its spirit to the favour of citizens of a free community. The alderman lost sight to of the fact that while residents of the suburbs are municipally separate, their citizenship is in many ways common with our own — that they do their buying and selling in the city, and thus establish upon us moral claims to the benefit of citizenship to which they may not be technically entitled.

A gentleman the other day pointed out the injustice of excluding residents of the suburbs from the privilage of employment on city works. He claimed that this should not be carried out too rigidly, seeing that the residents of the suburbs patronized the merchants and business men of the city, and in this way established some claim to consideration. We should not be narrow in our recognition of the real relations of citizenship, from the broader point of view.

Another case of complaint has come to The Examiner from a resident of North Monaghan, near the city. It is proposed to improve, or at least deal with the boundary line from Jackson Park, west. The resident complaining says that when similar work was done some time ago, the rights and convenience of pedestrians were ignored. The sides of the highway were filled with stones, earth, rubbish, and blocks and pieces of wood. The whole attention was given to the roadway for wheels, and it is feared that the new improvements may be attended with similar conditions.

Township councillors seem to forget that pedestrians have rights. The law gives them the right of way on public streets and roads, and they should have similar rights in connection with provision for the comfortable use of highways. One side of a public road should be cleared of stanes and sticks, and scrub tree growth, graded or levelled, and gravelled, for the use of pedestrians, especially in the vicinity of the city. Such an action would be recognition of the rights of pedestrians, who, though they may not have horses, pay taxes, and are entitled to consideration in the provision of travelling conveniences.

SPEAKERS' PATRIOTIC LEAGUE.

Bully for the Speakers' Patriotic League! This may not be classical commendation, but it is fitting and well deserved. The League has shown great energy in the fact of, heretofore, none too conspicuous official encouragement. It has shown no little wisdom and diplomacy in its work of promoting the interests of our material assistance in prosecuting the war campaign. By its efforts it has very sensibly stimulated recruiting, and it is no exaggeration to claim that its efforts are to be credited with a large responsibility for the fact that we have enrolled in the comparatively short space of less than two months, 365 recruits for overseas service, of which 200 are the nucleus of a new battalion. When we se these fine upstanding soldiers marching through the streets with the swinging stride of veterans, we have ocular demonstration of one of the results of the activities of the Speakers' Patriotic League.

And that is not all that is to its credit. It is due to the persistence and industrious diplomacy of the League that Peterborough has practically become a military centre. Last night it was announced at the patriotic demonstration in Central Park that Major-General Sir Sam Hughes had given official and formal assurance that Peterborough would be the headquarters of a new battalion, to be organized and stationed here, during the winter at least. The new battalion will be composed of four companies, 250 men each, of which Peterborough will furnish two, and the other two are to be recruited in Cobourg and Lindsay, respectively. In addition to the moral advantage of Peterborough being thus officially and practically recognized as a military centre, there will be the material advantage of the presence of a thousand soldiers maintained in the city, with no inconsiderable advantage in the provision of supplies and the other considerable expenditure of money; not to speak of the credit of the city, in giving practical proof of its patriotism, and in giving evidence of its military and commercial importance.

All this is to be placed chiefly to the credit of the Speakers' Patriotic League; and what is more to their credit, it has done what it has done so well, under the impulse of patriotic spirit alone, without any hope or expectation of personal profit, except the applause of a good conscience. None of the members of the League, with possibly one or two exceptions, are in a position to be materially benefitted by the presence in Peterborough, to which they have mainly contributed, of a battalion. While the League is deserving of credit, one must not forget that the head of the Militia Department has given a practical recognition of the strength of the claims of the League, and of Peterborough's advantages as a military centre. Thus the cooperation of local public and patriotic spirit, with thinking authority, redounds to the credit of both, to the advantage of Peterborough, and the welfare of the interests of Canada's participation in the great war we are waging, and the victories we are gaining, for the cause of the country and the Empire, and the freedom of humanity.

"FREEDOM OF THE SEA."

The command of the sea in time of war is no denial of the freedom of the sea in time of peace. The German flag would still be flying on every ocean had not Germany rashly challenged the sea power of Great Britain. It is well for the freedom of the world that the challenge has been so successfully met.—Philadelphia Ledger.

THE SYMBOL OF DECADENCE.

The German public has been taught to regard the Zeppelin as the climax of Kultur, the very highest point reached in the application of civilisation to war. To the rest of the world these stealthy sky-monsters, travelling at night to drop bombs promiscuously on women in their beds and babies in their cradles, without achieving any military object, appear rather as the symbol of all that is most retrograde in the present warfare, all that goes back most frankly to the days when the distinction between combatant and non-combatant did not exist, and when the murder of women and children had not become the deed of shame that civilized consciences have so long considered it to be.—London Chronicle.

CANADA'S CONTRIBUTION TO RED CROSS RELIEF WORK

If one dollar per head of the population in Canada were contributed as one year's income for the Canadian Army Medical Corps and the Canadian Red Cross Society—our military doctor bill would amount to something like $8,000,000. This would certainly not be considered an excessive appropriation to safeguard the lives of the 30,000 Canadians in Europe.

The income of the Canadian Red Cross in the first year of war was far from $8,000,000 — in fact not much over a quarter of it. This revenue, moreover, could not be used merely as income, that is to pay a year's running expenses in an existing and complete establishment. Much of it had to go as capital expenditure, to build and equip field dressing stations, stationary hospitals, base hospitals and convalescent homes. Motor ambulances and hospital trains had to be provided. Doctors, nurses and orderlies had to be transported long distances. Supply depots and warehouses had to be purchased or constructed. In short a very elaborate organization had to be provided at great expense absolutely from the very beginning.

Yet all this achievement may be rendered utterly inadequate by one large battle. In two or three short days the demand on the Canadian Red Cross may be doubled or trebled. An avalanche of wounded can in a moment sweep away tens of supplies which it takes months to accumulate.

These few considerations give some notion of the need for a large Red Cross income. After a year's work we can not rest on our laurels and declare that the Red Cross is adequately provided for. The present Red Cross equipment is adequate only on the supposition that the war will be brought to an end without further bloodshed.

On the contrary the only reasonable prophesy is that the war will not end without a great increase of bloodshed. The Red Cross has an enormous task in front of it, and the public should contribute generously so that the Red Cross may be able to cope with any emergency however costly and sanguinary.

* * *

One of the most important roles played by the Red Cross is that of consul general, as it were, to prisoners of war. The International Committee of the Red Cross, situated at Geneva, has conducted inquiries into the treatment of prisoners of war in all the belligerent countries. The report of Baron d'Anthouard who visited several camps in Brittany and Vendee bears testimony to the generosity with which the French have treated their German prisoners.

"From the humanitarian point of view, which is the especial concern of the Red Cross," says Baron d' Anthouard, "I have found that the prisoners everywhere receive the treatment provided by regulations. Their essential needs are provided for under satisfactory conditions. The appearance of the prisoners is good. Everywhere I found the commissioned and non-commissioned officers in charge of the camps very painstaking and assiduous in the discharge of their duties. At Fougeres the German officers complain only of being in too cramped quarters. The fact is that in their sleeping quarters the beds are arranged a little closely together. In this camp the tone of the officers appeared to be very arrogant.

At Royardville the officers are allowed personal liberty on parole. Some of them board in the military barracks, others in the town. At first they received a far from cordial welcome from the inhabitants, but at present there is a much better feeling. Their only complaint relates to the attitude of the Protestant clergyman of the locality, who refused to hold any communication with them.

In the presence of these Germans, who receive such humane treatment, and are assured of satisfactory conditions of existence, I could not prevent myself from thinking of the lot of my compatriots in Germany, and making painful comparison. Similar reflections occur to the French officers. They have spoken to me of them but I have never seen in them any desire to exact reprisals from the Germans who are in their power. On the contrary their one endeavour is to discharge correctly their duty as outlined by international conventions, leaving to their enemies all the odium of conduct which is otherwise.

ON THE MAKING OF TOMATO CATSUP

Dear Mr. Editor,—Some people believe anything they see in print, but sometimes ladies write for the papers with a confidence and authority that is often ludicrous in its absurdity when subjected to the test of practical knowledge. "Mrs. Buylow," who writes in the "Woman at Work" in the Globe, writes a lot of good stuff, and also considerable "stuff." When one writes so much on a single subject a little nonsense is sometimes bound to creep in. I notice in today's Globe, now before me, a paragraph about watery tomatoes, written in a tone of discouragement—it took such hours to boil down well."

Now, I am only a simple, everyday housekeeper, and this is the first I ever wrote for a paper.

"Mrs. Buylow" could have saved her fuel and her wasted hours "to boil it down"; she could have overcome the difficulty of economical tomato catsup, by putting her tomatoes, sliced, into a colander, with a little salt. Let them stand over night and the water will drain off, and neither "Mrs. Buylow" nor anybody else will be troubled with either water in the catsup tomatoes, or water on the brain.

Yours, etc.,
HOUSEWIFE.

Stock Markets

Brokers who have studied the character of the buying of the industrials claim the public will follow the rails if they are kept moving. They claim it is only necessary to make a stock active to attract the public, which thereafter takes care of the issue.

Railroads at present, they point out, have the added attraction of yielding a high return on the investment. While brokers have not been successful in diverting speculation into the rails, investors have taken considerable stock out of the market, so that any pronounced demand for the rails from speculative sources might be accompanied by sharp advances owing to the small floating supply.

So delighted was one of the conservative members of the New York Stock Exchange at the improving tendency in railway shares that he said: "This looks like a real market at last. I feel so happy that I am going uptown to order a new suit, the first one in a year."

The amount of foreign liquidation which has taken place in American securities is estimated in round numbers by a partner in one of the banking houses which is handling a large share of this business at over $1,000,000,000. He thinks at least $700,000,000 of our securities have come back from England alone. Differing from some of the other bankers who are in touch with this selling, he believes it will continue for some time yet, although it may not come again in any such volume as it has at periods in the past.

Expects Early End of War.

Judge Gary in a Chicago interview is quoted as saying: "I think the war will end quickly and unexpectedly. I am making no predictions as to exactly when it will end, but I feel confident that it will not be the long drawn out affair that some commentators would have us believe. There is no doubt, I think, that the ending of the war will be the beginning of great prosperity for this country. We are the only nation in a position to supply the needs of the devastated countries. I also believe that we shall have industrial peace in this country for a long time."

International Nickel.

The International Nickel Co., the common stock of which has just climbed over $200 a share, is now considered one of the most prosperous mining manufacturing corporations in the world, on account of the European war.

In 1906, when the company paid no dividends and the stock sold around 110, gross values below the ground were estimated at $450,000,000 which consisted of 15,000,000 tons of ore averaging $30. The company now estimates its ore reserves, as shown by diamond drillings and other approved methods at 57,000,000 tons or more than fifty-year supply.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

LEEDS CITY HAS SECURED THE SERVICES OF WALDEN

Famous International Outside Right Will Remain a Professional—London Crowds Go Wild Over the Football Wizard

After continuously playing association football for many years, Aston Villa, Birmingham, Blackburn Rovers, Middlesbrough, Newcastle United Sunderland, West Bromwich Albion and Wolverhampton Wanderers are grouped in the Handbook of the league under the heading "Clubs Not Playing," says the Athletic News. Some organizations in the Southern League are in the same position. The fact that forty other clubs have arranged themselves in three divisions known as the Midland section, the Lancashire section and the London combination for match play, at once proves that there is not unanimity on this question of policy.

Leeds Fortunate.

The manager of Leeds City is fortunate in being able to announce that the services of "Freddy" Walden, the famous international outside right of Tottenham Hotspur, has been secured for Leeds City.

Walden remains, of course, a professional of the Tottenham club, but under the amateur conditions laid down for all football in these war days, he is permitted to play with the club o this choice. As it happens, he has obtained employment as a motor engineer in one of the best-known motor garages, of Leeds, and as it wil be convenient in every way he is both willing and anxious to play with Leeds City.

A Wizard.

Walden's decision is a rare bit of luck for Leeds City, and realises the hope that has long been cherished by the Elland road management. In October, 1912, Leeds City practically completed arrangements for the transfer of Walden from Northampton to Leeds City at a fee of £1,500 but the public outcry in Northampton against the proposal caused the transfer to be held in abeyance, and subsequently Walden was secured by Tottenham Hotspur at a fee of £1,750.

The London crowds went wild with delight over the skill of Walden, who has been variously, if extravagantly, described as "the little marvel," "the wonder-wizard," and "the twinkling star." Although he stands only 5 feet 4 inches, Walden, in the season before last, provided the sensation of English League football, and it was a popular choice when he was given the outside right position in the English team against Scotland that season.

Odds and Ends.

"We are having a hot time, but we shall win the final," writes Royals, the Manchester United goalkeeper, now in France with the Stafford Territorial Artillery. Royals, in a message to the Manchester United secretary, says he is glad that football is to go on, and will look forward eagerly to receiving football papers.

One of the three soldier sons of Mr. James Methven, the Derby County manager, has been wounded in the fighting in Gallipoli. This is Sergeant Robert Methven, who enlisted in the 9th Sherwood Foresters on the outbreak of the war.

Charles Thompson, the Sunderland captain, expects to keep himself fit by playing for the Edinburgh, St. Bernard's club this season.

Crewe Alexandra has lost one of its best known football players in the Dardanelles. Sapper F. Frances being killed, after being twice before wounded in the greatest fight in the Gallipoli.

LEADER OF "PHILLIES" BEGAN CAREER WITH BALL OF YARN

Serious Minded Leader Fond of Sport While a Mill Hand at Fitchburg, Mass.—Has Had a Successful Year in New Job

Textile workers of Fitchburg, Mass. have unearthed an old ball of yarn, battered, ragged and torn in so many places it is almost unrecognizable. They are having this relic of a score of years ago gilded with 18 carat gold. For a native son of Fitchburg has achieved greatness, and this ball of yarn, say Fitchburgers, started the native son on his journey to fame.

The hero of Fitchburg is Patrick J. Moran. There have been heroes of Fitchburg, Governors, Senators, and the like, but none like Patrick J. who has led the Philadelphia National League club out of the ashes of thirty-six years of buried hopes into the light of 1915 laurels. Fitchburg is justly proud of Patrick J., and therefore the ball of yarn, which will soon be a golden reminder of their esteem.

From the beginning Moran had a hankering for a catching job. He wisely figured he had better control of the situation if he were in the pivotal position. He played many positions in his long diamond career, but catching was his favourite, and it was as a catcher he ended his playing days.

With Boston in 1909.

His first major league assignment was with Boston in 1909, he having been purchased from Montreal of the Eastern League. For five years he was one of the mainstays behind the bat for the Braves and then was transferred to the Cubs. There he was forced to play second fiddle, first to 'Johnny' King and then to 'Jimmy' Archer. That is, he did not get a chance to catch as many games as his ambitions manner demanded, but he did succeed in becoming a lieutenant to Frank Chance. Probably Moran learned more about the inside workings of baseball while with the Cubs than anywhere else. There he was given charge of the young pitchers, and Chance has remarked many times that it was Moran who developed the stars of the Cub mound staff.

He came to the Phillies in 1910 and Charles Dooin, then manager of the Phillies, promptly assigned Moran to coaching duties. Dooin being sagacious and seeing that Moran had an uncanny ability in conditioning pitchers. Last winter Dooin was allowed to drift away from the Phillies, and Moran was appointed Manager by William F. Baker, president of the club. Baker also was a sagacious, judging by the manner in which Moran took a jumbled up lot of castoffs and made them pennant winners.

The most outstanding characteristic of Moran is his executive ability. He never guesses what to do, but knows what to do and does it. He is in rigid command of every player on the field and bench as well, and his men obey him, not because of the force of his voice, nor his pugnacity, for he neither yells nor does he resort to fisticuffs, but because his serious-mindedness and his stern, businesslike orders.

One of his players said recently that taking orders from Moran was like keeping in condition. One could allow himself to get out of shape, but would suffer by it. And one could overlook an order from Moran without personal violence, but in the end he who was so incautious suffered.

Moran's inherent modesty makes him most likeable. He seldom smiles, not because he has not a sense of humour, but because his is a serious nature and he considers his job a most serious affair. He is quiet and at times almost speechless. He never "rides" his players for a mistake but questions them about the mistake and explains so there need be no further mistakes.

Mentally Alert.

He has the faculty of being mentally alert at most critical moments. Many times a game has been won by the Phillies because Moran has intuitively or learnedly grasped the situation, seen a weakness of the opposition and driven toward that weakness with all the strength of his forces. He sees plays with uncanny judgment, and the men have learned it were better to tell 'Pat' about it than risk their own judgment.

Moran has the never-give-up spirit that makes leaders. It is said of him he never knows when to quit. He never loses heart. He always figures there is a way to win and that he must win whatever the way. He is studious and arises to his conviction with spontaneity. He conquers with his personal will.

There still are many arguments that managers do not make ball teams, and that players make managers, but it must be granted that "Pat" Moran has proved his ability to blend twenty-one players of questionable skill into a pennant winning aggregation. It was Moran who guided these men, some of talent, others of mediocre ability, into the ways of championship gaiting. And not a man in Philadelphia nor Fitchburg but believes that to Moran all credit is due.

Just what Moran will do in the series with the Red Sox is yet to be seen. Whether or not he will be able to inject that never beaten spirit into his men for the short series remains a question. But Fitchburg and Philadelphia are behind Moran to a man, willing to gamble money, marbles or chalk that if it be a question of leadership, generalship or captaincy Moran will win easily.

But whatever the outcome of the world's series and whichever team succeeds in grabbing the lion's share of the receipts, "Pat" Moran will have ascended the steps of fame in his first year as a manager, will have made good where a score of others have failed. He may not be the greatest manager alive, but few will ever equal his natal record.

DAD STEWART, FORMER PETE PLAYER ENLISTS

ST. THOMAS, Sept. 27.—Carlton "Dad" Stewart, formerly manager of the Saints, and former member of the London, Peterborough, and Ottawa Canadian League teams, simply cannot keep out of a uniform.

Dad has been wearing one during the summer months ever since he was sixteen years of age, when he first played professional ball, and to-day enlisted for overseas service, and will wear the King's uniform, until Kaiser Bill is put out of the game.

Dad has wanted to join the colours for some time, but being the only member of the family left at home, did not like to leave his mother. However, Mrs. Stewart has consented that he should go.

ONE HALF OF WOUNDED SOLDIERS RETURN TO THE FIRING LINE

Surgical Work on the Battlefield—Wounded Who Reach Operating Table Have a Good Chance—Only Three and a Half Per Cent. Die.

Just now, 50 years after Lister's epoch-making demonstration of antisepsis, surgeons are discussing which would be the method of choice in operating on wounded in battle. Should it be antisepsis or asepsis. Lister's idea was to destroy or render harmles the septic, that is, the taxic or poison-producing germs which get into the wounds, by introducing into those wounds antiseptic, germicidal substances, such as carbolic acid. Since this day the method of asepsis has been developed, by which germs are prevented from getting into wounds at all. Asepsis is quite feasible in ourmagnificently equipped and managed hospitals, where the skin over the region to be operated on is first rendered sterile, and where the air of the operating room, the surgeons' and nurses' hands, the instruments, towels, sponges, dressings and everything else that might conceivably come in contact with the patient's body has likewise been made germ free.

But such sepsis is impossible in the present "civilized" warfare. The rule is no armistice for the removal of the dead or wounded. So the dead remain until they putrefy and themselves breed pestilence; while the wounded lie for days in the wet and manured fields (manure is the most congenial habitat of the tetanus bacillus), and in the semi-flooded and ordured trenches. Besides the lockjaw bacillus and the streptococcus (the pus-producing germ), and the many other pathogenic organisms surgeons have ever to contend with the unprecedented abundance of high-power explosives has also produced wounded conditions ideal for the gas gangrene bacillus to thrive in.

Must Work at Night.

Only at night, and not always even then, can the stretcher-bearers go about their merciful work, and the motor ambulance are under the added difficulty that their lights draw the enemy's fire. The artillery range is now so extensive that the Red Cross on the field hospital has become just a joke. Under such circumstances then, asepsis has just had to go by the board and "Back to Lister" is now the slogan. For how is the ferquent side-swiping wound, where half the face, including the eye, is torn away, to be rendered aseptic? Nor is it possible to make a wound area, consisting of sloughing tissue, blood, mud, masses of muscle ripped from their tendons and extruding through ragged skin, butterfly fractured" bones, severed nerves and vessels and bits of dirty uniform—to make such a wound visibly clean, let alone microscopically clean, that is germ free. Working in any available barn or railway station, however unsanitary, in any town hall or church, in a "hospital" fitted up for 200, into which it is sought within the hour to crowd a thousand, the best the surgeon can do—he and his never enough to be extolled ally, the nurse—is to paint the skin around the wound with antiseptic tincture of iodine, wash the wound with carbolic or bichloride or permanganate of hydrogen peroxide solution, trim around with knife, saw the artery forceps, pack the wound with antiseptic dressing and then to inject emetin (to check possible blind hemorrhage), anti-tetanus, anti-streptococcus and other serums preventive of wound infections.

And what, even so, are the results? The wounded man, if he does not expire in the field or the trench, if he can find place on the surgeon's operating table (or board, or door removed from its hinges), is having better than 24 chances in 25 of living to tell of his glorious wounding, and to honor the surgeon who patched him up. For here is the record: The wounded returned practically at once to the front, 54.5 per cent; sent away for convalescence, 24.5 per cent; under more or less prolonged treatment in hospital, 17.4 per cent.; dismissed from the army as incapable for further service, 1.46 per cent.; dead, 3.48 per cent.

Sailors Have Advantage.

A marked difference, by the way, has been found in the healing of the wounds of soldiers and sailors. The latter, with wounds fully as bad, recover with wonderful promptness, while soldiers from even slight hurts, have died by reason of the wound contaminations here considered. The sailors' wounds are submerged an hour or more in cold sea water. Wherefore, Sir. Almroth Wright and English colleaguers of his have had introduced into military surgery the hypertonic salt solution (5 to 10 per cent. common salt plus one-half of one per cent. citrate of soda), and with considerable success. Here is in point of fact a reversion to the old methods of "drawing out an inflammation"; for this solution determines a flow of lymph and blood serum into the wounded parts, so profuse that both germ and their toxins are either neutralized or carried off in the subsequent dressings.—Scientific American.

Market Salesmen Fail to Deliver Articles They Promise to Send

On the market last Saturday, a farmer selling apples, potatoes, etc., agreed to deliver a quantity of the former at the home of a certain citizen. They were not paid for, simply because the farmer said it was unnecessary and he would collect at the house. From time to time similar stories of delinquencies, neglect to deliver articles bought in this way, have been reported.

Of course there is no one to complain to. The market is without a head and without regulations. There is no method of knowing the names of the salesman who can hide behind uncertain identity. One of these days citizens will ask goods to be delivered, and then refuse to accept them. Two wrongs never made a right and neither step will help build up the maket, but when you have to extemporise retaliation this is the easiest that is presented. Not for a minute is it suggested that citizens should do this, or that they will do it. It is safe to say that they are above this kind of action no matter how they may have been provoked. But let the farmers think this over. If there were proper market regulations, a man who would disappoint purchasers as above outlined, would be called in on the carpet, and if the offense were repeated his license to sell on the market would be revoked. There is a system which might be wrapped around the market affairs for the satisfaction of everyone, but so long as the bulk of the ratepayers remain satisfied with the present makeshift, unmethodical custom, there will always be dissatisfaction and complaints.

Capt. Bernier Is Back From The Arctic

QUEBEC, Sept 28.—Captain Joseph Bernier, the Canadian Arctic explorer, has reached port on his vessel, The Guide, after a successful trip to the new land he discovered in the north, known as Baffin Island, and which, in 1916, will be recognized as a Canadian possession. This newly discovered land, which is located in the Arctic Archipelago, about 3,500 miles from Quebec, comprises 500,000 acres of territory, as extensive as France and Italy combined. The only casualty reported by Captain Bernier on his arrival here was the loss of one of his crew, a German, who, while taking photos on the islands, wandered too far away from the Eskimo settlement and was lost. His frozen body was found thirty days later 150 miles from the station, by a search party setn out by Captain Bernier.

When Captain Bernier and his crew set sail on The Guide for the north the war was not on, and men of all nationalities looked alike to the hardy Canadian explorer, who only learned last month of the stirring events of the times. It was July 4, 1914, that the party set sail from Quebec. Letters and newspapers received last month informed the captain that the powers of Europe were engaged in the biggest war in history. Up to then no tidings from the civilized world were at hand.

Two Patrolmen Shot At McMannus Dance

NEW YORK, Sept. 28—George Dapping, one of the two patrolmen shot while attending a ball given by the Thomas J. McMannus Association, a democratic organization of the Eleventh assembly district, died several hours later in a hospital.

James Bishop, the other patrolman, is reported dying. Daniel Tynan, a clerk, who was also wounded during the shooting, said to have been the outgrowth of a gangsters' feud, is in a serious condition.

The shooting occurred in a room adjoining the dance hall where several hundred men and women were on the floor.

RECRUITING MEETING AT CENTREVILLE

A Number of Local Speakers Present—Red Cross Work Explained

A rousing recruiting meeting was held last evening in the town hall at Centreville. The speakers were Rev. J. R. Webb, Rev. W. T. Wicketi, Rev. Canon Allen, Lieut.-Col. Miller, Mr. R. J. Doake and others. Mr. Roberts of Toronto, was also present. He gave a very lucid account of the Red Cross work and also dealt with the operation of the Patriotic Fund. He explained very fully the manner in which the money was collected and administered, and also commented on the great need. Rev. Canon Allen, who acted as chairman, made a few patriotic remarks respecting the object of the meeting. Both the Rev. J. R. Webb and Lieut.-Col. Miller made stirring speeches of a patriotic nature and were accorded an enthusiastic reception.

The meeting was one of the best that has been held under the auspices of the Speakers' Patriotic League since the campaign commenced. Centreville has contributed a number of recruits, and the indications are that many more will join the colours.

ROUMANIA WILL KEEP TROOPS CONCENTRATED ALONG FRONTIER

Is Determined Not to Change Her Policy---Has Not Considered Martial Law---Will Continue Course She Has Been Following.

LONDON, Sept. 28. — The Balkan "labyrinth" instead of clearing up somewhat has become more dense and mysterious during the last 24 hours.

A Bucharest despatch says: "The Roumanian Cabinet, at a meeting today in which the mobilization of Bulgaria and Greece was discussed, decided that Roumania should continue the course she has been following.

"These new developments, it was determined, were not of a nature to cause Roumania to modify in any way the line of conduct she has pursued up to the present. Consequently Roumanian troops will remain concentrated along the national frontiers.

"The Cabinet did not consider the question of establishing martial law."

An Athens correspondent telegraphs that King Constantine granted a "most cordial" audience to the Italian Minister, and that the latter, after later conferring with Premier Venizelos, sent a special courier to the Bulgarian Premier, M Radoslavoff, explaining Italy's views on the Balkan situation."

Greece Requisitions Ship.

The Greek Government has requisitioned 20 merchantmen, among them three big trans-Atlantic liners, for the transportation of troops. The fleet will not be mobilized for the present.

The outstanding feature of the entire Balkan situation appears to be this. Bulgaria, fully mobilized, which means that she has 400,000 men "ready to march," is going out of her way to let it be known both to Greece and Roumania that she fosters no hostile plans against either of these countries. She makes no effort to imbue Serbia with the same impression, but, on the contrary, has not only not denied, but rather nourished, the notion that her action is aimed against the little kingdom.

The attitude of Greece is primarily that of one who "wants to be shown" — therefore the mobilization following upon the heels of Bulgaria's military preparations. Secondly, Greece has let it be understood— and her earnestness was generally affirmed in diplomatic circles here —that she will oppose with force of arms any invasion of Serbia by Bulgaria.

In this connection a despatch from Rome is significant. This despatch says the Serbian Minister in an interview declared that Serbia is "perfectly unafraid" in the face of "Bulgarian threats" and confident of the loyalty of Greece and the support of the allies.

The only direct reference in the German press today to the Balkan situation is an article in the Vossische Zeitung which sounds a note of alarm, warning the press and public that they "should not be tempted to break forth in premature chants of victory." The paper continues:

"Bulgaria it is true, has always been most friendly to us. Nothing whatever happened to warrant in us the belief that King Ferdinand and the Prime Minister are playing a double game.

"However, we cannot repeat it too often. We must wait before we begin rejoicing, for the Balkan politics are fertile with surprises.

"There is but one thing we ask of Bulgaria That she continue her armed neutrality until the moment when the light which will shortly shine upon the battlefields shall definitely show her the way."

GUNNER CLARKE WRITES FROM THE BATTLE LINE

Mr A J Throop of Adamson and Dobbins, has received a very interesting letter from Gunner Wm. J Clarke of Peterborough, who is at the front with the 4th Battery, 1st Canadian Infantry brigade. Writing on Sept 12th Gunner Clarke says:

I am enjoying the best of health and have been pretty lucky so far. We have been having very fine weather here at present. It is quite warm here today, but I have never felt it as hot as we have it in Canada. There is very little fighting going on just where we are at present so we have a little spare time some days, and have a game of ball or quoits once in a while. We often watch them shelling the aeroplanes. They certainly have some time dodging the shells. Every minute you expect to see them brought down. I have seen three or four hit since I have been out here.

You ask me if there was anything I would like you to send. You might send me a couple of packages of Mogul cigarettes and a good cigar, if you wish, for the cigarettes we have issued out are not of the best.

They are still continuing to give the Canadians leave, that is, the men who came out here with the first contingent, but it is a very slow process two a week and if they don't let more go at a time I think my turn will come about next March.

I met a couple of fellows who are with the 2nd Battalion, and who came from Peterborough. There are not many Peterborough men left in the 2nd now.

We have received cigarettes, chocolate, socks and handkerchiefs from different people in Peterborough. Mrs Duncan Walker, the Progressive Club and the Daughters of the Empire were the ones who sent them, I believe.

How are all the boys getting on at the shop? Remember me to them all. Give my best regards to Mr. Adamson and Mr. Dobbin.

PETERBOROUGH FACTORY WINS GRAND PRIZE AT BIG EXPOSITION

A Peterborough company has scored the highest possible award at the Panama Pacific International Exposition at San Francisco. The De Laval Separator Company's centrifugal cream separators, in competition with all other separators in the world, has been given the highest possible award, the Grand Prize. The award is epitomized by a most elaborate banner printed in gold letters on a purple back ground, and reading as follows:

The De Laval Separator Co.
Montreal, Peterborough, Winnipeg
Vancouver, New York.
Highest Possible Award.
Centrifugal Cream Separators.
OFFICIAL AWARD RIBBON.
Grand Prize Awarded by Pacific-Panama International Exhibition.
San Francisco, 1915.

It is interesting to note too that the De Laval apers predominated among the Panama-Pacific prize winners. The awards at the International milk and cream show held in conection with the Exposition were a high tribute to the De Laval superiority, first and second prizes going to specimens of milk clarified by the De Laval Clarifier—a demonstration of the fact that men who know, dairymen who are capable of winning the world's highest honours for their products, prefer De Laval machines made in Peterborough. It is recognized that no matter whether milk is pasteurized, certified, inspected or guaranteed, it can be made a cleaner, more wholesome food product by De Laval clarification.

With a more thorough knowledge of what the De Laval Centrifugal Clarifier accomplishes, milk producers and health authorities are coming to realize that clarification is not a substitute for general cleanliness in milk production. It is a scientific process of removing from milk impurities that cannot be eliminated in any other way.

It may be mentioned that at the Peterborough Creamery, where pasteurized milk is produced, the De Laval Clarifier is used.

DR. FREDERICK TELLS OF WORK AT THE DARDANELLES

Peterboro' Physician Says British Tommies Are Cheerful, Uncomplaining and Grateful—More Doctors Are Needed

IS GLAD TO BE THERE

Dr. W. A. Baker has received a most interesting letter from Dr. E. V. Frederick, of Peterborough, who is now at the Dardanelles with the British Army Medical Corps. It is as follows:

Dear Dr. Baker,—Now, as far as I know, I have nothing to do until tomorrow. However, I have to sit around as I have a case of compound fracture of the radius from a bullet wound. The patient had two secondary hemorrhages and I may have to operate on him at a moment's notice. I am extra well and enjoying the hardships of active service, although I assure you I will be pleased when I set foot in Peterborough and see a street car and picture shows, etc., again.

The surroundings affect our older members in different ways. One officer just in said: "If I wanted to condemn a man to hell I'd send him to this island. It's worse than St. Helena." However, in some ways, it is very picturesque and interesting. Everything is just as it was a thousand years ago, except where the engineers and the hospitals are in possession.

Then we have 1,700 Egyptian labourers encamped near us, a half-mile away, and about the same number of Turkish prisoners. We have only been here ten days, and at first the sanitary problem was the worst, but in a few days we will have cookhouses with cement floors. Flies are as thick as can be conceived. We're on a nice gentle slope of a valley with an arm of the sea coming in near the foot of our camp, and five little Grecian villages on the opposite slope, with the mountains behind.

Our hospital will in a few days be as large as the Toronto General, with the same staff as we had in France for a 300-bed hospital. We have six swell wards about 17 ft. by 210 ft. I have charge of all surgical cases in one ward. In operating we wear veils like the ladies to keep off the flies, and have fly nets hung around the operating table.

I would regret very much to have missed this experience. Doctors and nurses are still much needed, and I would regret very much to have known of this work and not to have done my share.

I never enjoyed working among any class better than the Tommies. They are cheerful, uncomplaining, grateful and no neurasthenics. Kind regards to all.

Important Cavalry Success Won By The Russians

LONDON, Sept. 28. A Reuter despatch from Petrograd says:

"Fighting of extraordinary violence is proceeding around Dvinsk. An important success for the Russian cavalry is reported, involving the defeat of a strong enemy column near Lake Tchugury.

"The Russians taking advantage of the country, led the enemy to the marshy ground, where they surrounded them on three sides, exterminating or capturing three complete infantry companies and taking much booty.

It is reported from the southern front that the Russians have reached Kovel and that the Russians have evacuated Brody. During the retreat the Austrians threw a quantity of supplies into the River Styr."

THE WEATHER

The frost this morning was sufficiently hard to nip many tender plants, and they are now showing the effects. The temperature this morning was 30 degrees. This is the first occasion below freezing point has been reached this fall. About a week ago some tender plants in low-lying sections were blackened to some extent, but the frost was not so severe as this morning.

Cyclist Sustains A Broken Nose

A fine of five dollars and costs, amounting in all to eight dollars and thirty-five cents, will be remitted to William Faires. Some weeks ago Faires was convicted in the Police Court of using cans that were improperly stamped in connection with his business of scavenger. The Legal Committee of the City Council, which met last evening, concluded that Faires was entitled to a rebate of the fine levied upon him. They contended Faires had conformed to the by-law, which was in conflict with the Weights and Measures Act under which Faires was convicted.

Nose Was Broken.

Sergeant Brown, submitted a report of an accident in which William Westall was injured while cycling north on Aylmer Street. It appears that the bicycle struck a piece of wood, with the result the rider was thrown from the machine and sustained a broken nose, in addition to a number of minor injuries. The report concludes with the statement that "no blame can be attached to anyone." The police were unable to ascertain whether the piece of wood was the property of the city and had been placed there by the city, or that it had fallen off some vehicle.

Claim for Damages.

In connection with the claim on the city made by Herman Zacks by reason of the sidewalk on the east side of the street in front of the Old Protestant Home being built at an excessive height, according to the allegation, City Solicitor Gordon states that it is a question whether Mr. Zacks has a suitable claim or not. He further states that Mr. Zacks intimated that he would be satisfied if a cement walk was built.

Will Take Action.

A letter was read from Peck, Kerr and McKiddery, saying that their client, Mr James O'Connell, would take action against the city for damages caused to his property by the raising of the highway in front of his property.

Government Reserve.

Ald Dobbin was instructed to take up with Mr. Burnham the question of the identification of the Government reserve along the Otonabee River.

MR. JOHN BELL PASSES AWAY

Death of One of the Oldest, Most Prominent and Most Highly Respected Residents of Peterborough

Peterborough lost one of its most widely known and most esteemed citizens by the death of Mr. John Bell who passed away at his residence, 451 Water street, last night at midnight, after a brief illness. Mr. Bell was a native of Cumberland, England, where he was born 78 years ago. He came to Canada when he was a young man of about eighteen years. He was engaged with his brother in railway contracting, and helped build the old Grand Trunk, the first railway of any great importance built in Canada. He subsequently went to New Mexico, where he engaged in farming. His work was interrupted by the outbreak of the American Civil War. He was impressed for service in the forces of the Confederate army and continued in the service till the end of the war. He was connected with the artillery branch ,and although not a soldier from conviction or patriotic motives, he did as he has done through life in all the relations of citizenship, faithfully discharged dis duty and won the commendation and confidence of the Confederate commanders. Returning to Canada at the close of the war, Mr. Bell for some time was employed as a commercial traveller in the stationery line and after a time established a business of the same character in Montreal. He came to Peterborough nearly half a century ago and has since resided here, a prominent and successful business man and a substantial and respected member of the community. He went into the business of market gardening and later into the real estate business, and by diligence and business ability amassed a considerable property, owning at the time of his death a large number of valuable tenement properties. Several years ago he retired from business and since has enjoyed a well earned leisure.

In religion Mr Bell was an Anglican and a member of St. John's congregation. He was a faithful attendant at its services and did much to promote its interests. He, for one term, occupied the responsible position of church warden. His religious qualities were not confined to church association, but were a part of his life. While shrewd and successful in business, he was a man of rigid uprightness and a good living man in all way. He was abstemious in his habits, using neither tobacco nor strong drink in any form. He was of a literary turn of mind and his frequent poems were familiar to his friend and to the public through publication in the press. He was a Conservative in politics and had strong convictions upon political questions. He took a keen and intelligent interest in public affairs and was a great admirer of Sir John Macdonald, with whom he conducted correspondence on public questions, as he also did with Sir Wilfrid Laurier and public men in Great Britain. He was an earnest and tireless advocate of the Trent Valley Canal, and wrote and talked much in promoting its construction and completion. He was deeply interested in Peterborough and always active in promoting its welfare by word and deed. Mr Bell was a staunch Imperialist and an outand-out upholder of British connection in fact in all the relations of citizenship he was sound and true, faithful to strong convictions of duty, and in his passing away Peterborough loses a citizen whose life amongst us has earned the universal respect of the esteem of all classes of citizens.

About fifty-two years ago Mr Bell was united in marriage with Miss Hannah Greer, who survives him, with their sons and one daughter Dr. S. Bell of Vancouver B.C., James B. Bell of Toronto, George M. Bell, stockbroker and Miss Victoria Bell at home.

The funeral will be held on Wednesday, at 2:30 p.m. from the family residence, 451 Water street to St. John's church, with interment in Little Lake cemetery.

A Natural Inquiry

Malone watched the operation of the operator's dressing with great interest. "What you want to do now?" he asked finally.

"Certainly not," replied the operator, pausing to stare. "Only an idiot would think of dressing up together." remarked Malone. New York Evening Post.

Telegram received. Peterborough will have two companies and headquarters of battalion. Third company will go to Lindsay, and fourth company to Cobourg. You will therefore have the band.

SAM HUGHES.

The above telegram received from the Minister of Militia last night in reply to a wire from the Federal member, has cleared up the local situation and there was great rejoicing both in military circles as well as among the members of the Speakers' Patriotic League, whose persistent and untiring efforts have been finally crowned with success. The official announcement sets all doubts at rest. Over five hundred soldiers will winter in Peterborough, and better than was expected this city will be the headquarters of the battalion which means that Peterborough will not lose Bandmaster Hughes and his splendid band as has appeared very likely during the past few days.

Although the telegram does not say, the announcement undoubtedly means that the Peterborough companies will be not part of the 80th Battalion now being mobilized at Barriefield, but will form half of a new overseas battalion which will be representative of Peterborough County, Victoria County and the united counties of Northumberland and Durham. The recruits from the latter will be organized into a company at Cobourg, while the Victoria County recruits will be mobilized at Lindsay, the other two companies to remain in Peterborough. This city has one company well on the way to completion. Another fifty recruits will complete the organization, and now that the matter is definitely settled the recruiting is expected to be even better than it has been. It is up to every citizen of Peterborough to get in behind the Speakers' Patriotic League and the military authorities and fill up the two companies with men from Peterborough County. One company will soon be filled. Let every man work to see that the other company is built up even faster.

It will mean a big thing for Peterborough to have over five hundred soldiers here this winter, the pay roll per month will amount to around $80,000, and the greater part of that will undoubtedly be spent in Peterborough. The decision of the Government to billet the troops be an added benefit. Of course those living in the city will be allowed to remain at home, but the others from the surrounding districts will be placed in boarding houses throughout the city, thus giving assistance to many worthy citizens.

Whether the local company now nearly organized will go to Barriefield for training until the cold weather sets in or not, is not yet known. This was originally intended, but it is possible that they may not leave Peterborough at all until next spring, when, of course, the whole battalion will complete its training at Barriefield.

announced the speakers, calling first on His Worship Mayor Buller.

Mayor Buller Spoke.

The City's Chief Magistrate spoke, but briefly. Every citizen, he said, rejoiced in the grand victory won by the Allies on the Western front. His Worship regarded the exploit as the forerunner of a series of glorious victories for the cause of the Allies. A statement that was received with wild cheering. The enthusiasm was redoubled when Mayor Buller read a telegram from the Minister of Militia, announcing that Peterborough was to be the headquarters of a new Battalion, and that the Overseas Band was to remain here.

A Great Reception.

Lt. Col. Johnston was next called upon. He was given a grand reception, the overseas soldiers leading in three cheers and a tiger for their highly-esteemed officer. Like His Worship the Mayor, Lt.-Col. Johnston's address was a brief one. In a few words he emphasized the need of more recruits. Men were required to make up the wastage of war and to fill up the gaps in the ranks of those at the front, and he called for the assistance of all citizens in the work of securing more recruits.

Adjutant McElhiney, who organized and arranged the details of last night's most successful demonstration and to whom the credit for its success is due, was the last speaker. The work of the Speakers' Patriotic League was just starting, he informed the crowd. "We are only getting steam up." Peterborough is to have two companies of overseas soldiers. (Cheers.) Peterborough is to be the headquarters of the new battalion. (More cheers.) Peterborough is to keep her Overseas Band here this winter. (Prolonged cheers.) And Peterborough is going to raise $1,500 to provide instruments for the band. (Cheers and laughter.) We want the help of every citizen in raising these two companies of infantry. We want 120 men yet, and we're going after them. There are many men with no family ties who walk our streets, accepting the liberty of our country—the liberty that grand old flag stands for and yet who will not fight for that liberty. Those are the men we are going after," concluded the speaker amid great applause.

"Come On and Do Your Bit"

Probably the most effective appeal from a recruiting standpoint was the next feature, a recitation by Master Percy Luther, a brother of Driver Sidney Luther, at the front with the 24th Field Battery's detachment in the 4th Battery C. F. A., C. E. F. The little fellow, garbed in khaki, climbed to the top of a trestle, 10ft above the platform, and gave his appeal for recruits, "Come on Lads and Do Your Bit" with a clearness of enunciation and expression that deeply moved the audience, and he was given an ovation when he concluded.

The National Anthem and three cheers for His Majesty the King brought the big demonstration to a close.

SYSTEM OF BILLETING WILL BE ADOPTED

OTTAWA, Sept 27. Hitherto the recruiting for the different Canadian contingents has been mostly done at large centres, and for the recruiting of the 150,000 Canadian troops at present under arms the larger centres are responsible. In case more men are called for within a short time, it is understood that an opportunity will be given for those living in the rural districts to enlist. For this purpose the system of billeting will be introduced.

It is understood that a plan is under consideration by means of which the smallest communities which contribute men to the cause will have these recruits billeted among them.

Each small village centre raising twenty men will be allowed to have the recruits billeted therein.

Each incorporated village centre of a thousand upwards raising fifty men will be allowed to retain them. Each centre with a population under 4,000 raising 100 men will be allowed to have them billeted therein. Each centre of upwards of four thousand recruiting a full company of 250 men will be allowed to make the same arrangement.

Must Be Up to Standard.

The more raising of the required number of men will not, however, be sufficient. They will have to be medically fit, properly attested, and their history and records up to standard requirements. The men will be uniformed through the usual channel of the district stores.

The system of billeting since the present war started has been tried out in Lindsay, the home town of the Minister of Militia, and it has met there with great success. Seventy-five cents a day will be paid by the Government for each soldier billeted. It is felt that this system will be of particular benefit during the winter months. The soldiers will be surrounded with home influences, which will tend to make the routine of military life less tedious for them.

From a recruiting standpoint the system will enable the authorities to get into districts which hitherto have contributed but few men, and it will give more particularly rural districts, a greater opportunity to send men to the Front. Thousands of cases have occurred where young men in out-of-the-way rural localities wishing to enlist have had to pay their railway fare to a recruiting centre, and it is known that thousands of others have been deprived of their chance to join a regiment owing to the expense entailed in getting to the recruiting point.

Hitherto there has been great difficulty encountered in recruiting men. When the first call came for 20,000 men, 31,000 were sent overseas, and when the second call came to increase the number to 75,000, and a third call to increase it to 150,000, and a fourth call to increase it to 250,000, the best type of men were obtained, and Canada now has over 160,000 men under arms.

THE MANUFACTURE OF SHELL BOXES

The Peterboro' Planing Mill Company Filling Their Contract Satisfactorily and Promptly

The very satisfactory manner in which the Peterborough Planing Mill Company have been executing its contract for supplying 25,000 shell boxes to the order of the Shell Committee of the Dominion government is a credit to the city as well as to the contractors.

The work has been gone about in a business-like manner. Before the preliminaries of the contract were actually settled, work was begun with confidence on the erection of an entirely new building for manufacturing the shell boxes. Large supplies of the particular lumber and hardware required was procured, machinery equipped and installed for the speedy and correct accomplishment of the work, and a staff of between thirty and forty workmen engaged and thoroughly instructed in the different processes of the work.

Just as soon as official instructions were received to proceed, everything was ready and running in a business-like manner and the prosecution of the work has been proceeded without interruption, and without a single hitch or complaint. Regular weekly shipments have been turned out, inspected and forwarded, at a rate which has about half completed the contract; and in all the details of the work the Peterborough Planing Mill Company have merited the hearty approval of all concerned.

It is hoped that on the completion of this contract, the company may be rewarded with another and a still larger order.

Welcome Our Heroes

Our own gallant heroes, we welcome them home
From battle and carnage, beyond oceans foam,
For their Country and King, they have ventured afar,
Their lives to the death, mid the horrors of war.

When the Teutonic tyrant the fierce challenge flung
At our Empire, like heroes to arms, swift they sprung
Undauntedly followed high honours steep track
And fearlessly fought, for the old Union Jack.

Deep indelibly bright, with a diamond of flame
Their names they have traced on the annals of fame
And more worthy than badge, that fair jewels bestar
On the warrior's breast is the glorious scar.

Then welcome them home, with acclaim that shall rise
On the wings of the wind, to the blue vaulted skies
Ring out chiming bells, a glad triumphant note
Aloft let gay streamers, and blue banners float.

May all classes, and creeds, of our city unite
To greet them, whom to honour, we proudly delight,
Let the wild cheer re-echo to heavens far dome,
And right royally welcome, our brave heroes home.

MRS. A. F. CALDER.

Can Now Eat Hot Breads

"Dear Dr. Jackson:

Being a lover of hot biscuits, pancakes, etc., but for years unable to eat them fearing acute indigestion I bless the name of Roman meal, since I can now eat freely of anything in the hot bread line made from it without fear of distress. Incidentally Dr. Jackson's Roman Meal is the most delicious food I have ever eaten. I use it in some form in every meal and as a consequence have been relieved of a life-long constipation."

Roman Meal is sold by all live grocers, at 10 cents and 25 cents.

Advantage With The Allies in Gallipoli

LONDON, Sept. 28.—A British official communication issued tonight says:

"The recent operations on the Gallipoli Peninsula have been confined mainly to attacks from either side by aircraft to bombardments by artillery and to mining.

"On one occasion the Turks opened a heavy artillery fire along our front at Sulva and Anzac, which appeared to be the prelude to a general attack. It was followed by an attack by a small force only on the right centre at Sulva. The enemy was easily dispersed by our rifle fire. Twice subsequently much the same thing happened.

"More than once enemy aeroplanes have attacked our aircraft base, but the bombs dropped did no damage. In return our aeroplanes counter-attacked with bombs and blotted out a hangar and did some damage among the shipping at Burgaz.

"During the night of the 24th the Turks let loose watchdogs against the French patrols. The dogs were all shot."

"Pa what does it mean when a public man is said to be at the zenith of his popularity?"

"It means, my son," replied the defeated candidate ruefully, "that he is about ready to hit the toboggan."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

People Who Read "Ads" Money Savers

By That Wise Practice They Help Lower Prices

If a merchant could be sure that the whole purchasing public of his locality would buy certain goods from him he could, and would, reduce the prices of those goods. This is the unattainable ideal. But we make great progress in this direction by cultivating the habit of reading advertisements. Not all the public, but a great portion of it, is moved by an advertisement well written and well displayed. By this means the merchant wins the custom of a large portion of his public and can afford to and does lower his prices accordingly. The merchant's advertising does for the sale of goods to the public what the drummer does for the sale of wares to dealers. It makes known the prices at which articles are offered and, facilitating business, leads to a reduction of prices. The people who read the advertisements in the daily papers are, in effect, members of a great marketing organization.

THREE CHILDREN PERISH IN FIRE

CORNWALL, ONT., Sept. 28.—While their parents were engaged gathering a corn crop, the three small children, aged five years, three years and three months respectively, of Mr. and Mrs. Cory Hollister of Aultsville, were burned to death, when their home was totally destroyed by fire.

It was not known by the neighbors who endeavored to extinguish the fire that the children were in the house nor were they aware of the whereabouts of the parents, but A. C. Fotterly of Cornwall, who happened to be motoring in the vicinity, located them in a field almost a mile from their home. Mr. and Mrs. Hollister were distracted when they returned and found their little ones had perished.

Dear Friend,—It is with pleasure that such an occasion has offered itself, in which, as brother bandsmen we wish to express our feelings, not only to yourself, but also to the one you have chosen to take as your life partner through the path of life.

Duty calls us to thank again and again of kind words you have spoken and kind acts you have committed to your brother bandsmen.

No words of ours can emphasize too strongly the gratitude we all desire to show and feel toward you in your efforts to make one's life comfortable and happy.

I now have the greatest of pleasure, on behalf of the 59th Band, in asking Bandmaster Peryer to present to you this carving set, also, Band-Sergeant Chambers, this silver match case, as a token of sincere respect from every member of the 59th Batt. Brass Band, wishing you every success in your new life, much happiness and prosperity.

On behalf of the above band, I sign myself,

Yours with best wishes,
Bandsman H. Gilbert.

Bandsman McCabe's reply was as follows:

Dear Friends,—It is with much pleasure that I have the privilege of thanking you for your kindness towards me, and I assure you that I will prize the token of esteem you have bestowed upon me. If I am spared to come back and use your useful gift I will always look back to the band boys of the 59th and the many trials we have had together, both in Barriefield and abroad.

Again thanking you all for your kindness towards me, I am, your sincere friend.

STOCKHOLM, Sweden, Sept. 28. There was heavy firing off the southern coast of Sweden early yesterday. The fog was so dense that incoming skippers could not see what was occurring, but it is believed that German warships were engaged with British submarines attempting to enter the Baltic.

LONDON, Sept. 28. No official confirmation has come from either Petrograd or Vienna of the report that the Russians have recaptured Brody in North-East Galicia, and are about to re-occupy Kovel, southeast of Brest-Litovsk.

LONDON, Sept. 28. Premier Asquith this afternoon appealed to all members of Commons not to raise the question of conscription or success at this critical moment in the history of the war. "It is especially undesired that the recruiting question be discussed now," said the Prime Minister, "when we are watching with intense sympathy and hope the gallant efforts of our Allied forces."

ARDMORE, Okla., Sept. 28. The death list in the gasoline explosion here was raised to fifty today when the bodies of four unidentified negroes were found in the wreckage.

Peterborough Boy Saw Zeppelin Raid Over Heart of London

The following letter has been received by a local relative from Edred Cumberland of the 7th Brigade, C. F. A., now in England who enlisted with the 26th Overseas Battery here.

September 11, 1915.
26th Battery, 4th Sub Division,
7th Brigade, C.F.A., C.E.F.,
Army H. Q., London.

Dear Ern, We have been so busy lately that I don't remember if I wrote to you last week or not. Last Sunday they marched us down to Shorncliffe Station, six miles away, to get our horses. We got lost and walked four miles out of our way. When we got there we found out a mistake had been made and that there were twice the number of horses there than we had expected, which meant that instead of two horses each we had four to bring back. We hung around three or four hours before we got them unloaded, and then started back to camp with four wild beasts each. Of course, we had to lead them and the brutes kept spreading all over the road. The traffic was pretty heavy, too, and it is a wonder that horses and men, too, weren't killed. We didn't get back to camp till 2 o'clock next morning, and then had to picket the horses. We thought we would able to stay in bed next morning, but we turned out at 5:30 just the same.

Did I tell you that the King reviewed us last week at Shorncliffe Lord Kitchener and all the big boys were there, but very few people, as it was supposed to be strictly on the Q. T. K. of K. looks just what he is. I was outside man of our rank, so I passed within ten feet of them and took a mighty good good look at R. It was a grand sight to see about 25,000 Canadians in full marching kit, and with bayonets fixed, march past in perfect order. Our own the 2nd Brigade to march past, so we saw all the rest of the show. The Colonel came up after and complimented our battery on the way they had marched past.

Last Tuesday afternoon we had our second inoculation, so Cameron and I got a 48 hour pass to go to London. We had a peach of a time, and saw all the sights we could in the time. We went down to the tower and went all through it. It did not cost us a cent either as the soldiers are free. The old guide took great trouble to explain everything to us so we had a very interesting time.

Just as we were coming out of a theatre one night we heard several explosions in quick succession. The women began to scream and faint and everybody started pushing back into the theatre. Cameron and I got out somehow and there almost above us was a large Zeppelin. All the guns in the city seemed to be firing at it, and we could see the shells bursting around it, but none seemed to have hit it. We watched it till they drove it away. We were lucky in striking such a time for our innoculation.

Canadian Mills Get Big Orders

OTTAWA, Sept. 28.—The Canadian woollen mills are working on a huge order from the Italian government. The order is for one hundred thousand blankets and no less than six hundred thousand woollen shirts. It was placed through the Italian commission in London and was obtained through the sending of personal representatives to England by the Canadian mills. These representatives dealt directly with the Italian commission and were able to satisfy as to the capacity of the Canadian industry for turning out the quantity and quality desired. An important factor in obtaining the contract was the undertaking of the Department of Trade and Commerce to assume the responsibility for the inspection of the goods. The contract is worth a million dollars. Already deliveries are commencing to be made. The goods will be sent by way of New York to Genoa as the most direct route.

Taxicab and Street Car Collide

The taxicab belonging to Dr. Robinson's livery and a Charlotte Street car collided at the corner of Charlotte and Aylmer Streets, shortly after 12 o'clock, today, at noon. The taxi was going south on Aylmer Street when the accident happened. Damage to the extent of about fifty dollars was caused to the taxicab, the fender and the lamps being smashed. Business men in this part of the city state that accidents frequently occur at that corner, due to the fact that autoists do not pay sufficient attention to where they are going. Only yesterday another auto was hit by a car, and serious injury narrowly averted.

Badly Injured In a Runaway Accident To-day

Mr. James Darling, of Smith, lies in a precarious condition in Nicholls Hospital as a result of a runaway accident on McDonnel street about one o'clock to-day. Mr Darling suffered serious injuries about the head, the skull, it is feared, being fractured. Mr. Darling with his son was returning home and had stopped at Boorman's store on McDonnel street. Mr. Darling, Jr., went into the store to make some purchases leaving his father in charge of the horse.

From some unknown cause, the animal took fright and bolted out McDonnel street. Mr. Darling held the reins until Green's foundry was reached when he was thrown out of the buggy, lighting on the pavement on his head. The ambulance was hurried to the spot and the injured man was removed to Nicholls Hospital, where Dr. Moir attended him. At the time of going to press, Mr Darling was still unconscious.

Great Britain Is Able To Pay In Gold

JOHNNESBURG, Sept. 28.—W. H. Dawe president of the South African Chamber of Mines, called attention to-day to the vital importance of South African gold to the cause of the Allies.

The adjustment of the American Exchange rate, Mr Dawe said, covered ordinary commodities, but the large orders for munitions placed by the allies must be paid for to a considerable extent in gold. The continuance of gold payments, he added, would be possible because the British Empire produced £160,000,000 ($800,000,000) in gold annually, two-thirds of it from the Transvaal.

Passengers Will Travel in Air

LONDON, Sept. 28.—An interviewer quotes Grahame White, the aviator, as saying: "I am quite certain that five years hence I will be running a daily line of aeroplanes, each carrying upwards of 50 passengers, between London and the north of England. In ten years or less I shall be running a daily service of great passenger aeroliners between London and New York. People will use their own aeroplanes as they use their motors now, and it is only a small jump from private to public use. The aeroliner will be as safe as a locomotive or a steamer, and possibly safer."

Music & Drama

ERNIE MARKS.
The Ernie Marks Co. delighted a large audience last evening with their opening attraction of a week's engagement at the Grand Opera House. The play presented last evening was "A Receipt in Full," and the various actors and actresses performed their different roles in a manner that evidenced great talent and ability.

The specialties were of a high order and received well merited applause. The play to-night is "Amy of the Circus."

An Irishman in a Dublin coffee-house was once writing a letter, but was annoyed by a waiter who kept looking over his shoulder and reading what he wrote. Determined to shame the impudent waiter, he continued the letter as follows:

"I should say more, only an infernally impudent waiter is looking over my shoulder and reading every word I write."

"Yes he, yer scoundrel!" shouted the waiter, "Oh haven't read a word

Sergt. Fred Reed Writes From Front

The following card, written by Sergt. Fred Reed of Peterborough with the 3rd Brigade, C.F.A., is of interest. It was received by a local friend to-day, written "Somewhere in Belgium." It is as follows: "Your card received and we were very glad to hear from you again. Recognized a few of the 'mugs' in the picture of the recruiting meeting, and there are a few there who should have enlisted long ago. Business fairly quiet with us, and our batteries are not doing much more than 'register.' Weather last week, 'punk,' this week, fairly good. Living like a gentleman of Paris and no kick coming."

ALLIES' ARTILLERY PREPARE WAY FOR FRESH ATTACKS

BULGARIA IS NOT LIKELY TO SOON ENTER THE WAR

Second Phase of Greatest Battle in World's History Is Now Being Fought

Both in Champagne and Artois Regions, the Allies Have Settled Down to Steady Hammering Attacks—Preparing Way For Another Dash

LONDON, Sep. 29.—A great storm of shells to-day bursting across the Franco-Flanders front in what may be described as a second phase of one of the greatest battles in the history of the world. Both in Champagne and Artois regions the Allies have settled down to steady hammering attacks, counted upon to exhaust and wear down the Germans until way is made ready for another dash.

Unofficial reports from Northern France during the night indicated that the Allied artillery is now making another intensive bombardment of German works from Ypres to Verdun. The whole front is quaking under the shock of big shells aimed at wrecking the German second and third lines. It is believed there may be an apparent lull along the front for 48 hours while the Allied guns pave the way for another surging infantry attack.

Bulgaria Not Likely to Enter War on the Side of the Austro-Germans

Success of Allies' Offensive Movement Has Relieved the Possibility—Bulgaria Alarmed at the Failure of Austro-Germans to Attack Serbia

ROME, Sept. 29.—The success of the Allies' offensive movement has relieved the possibility that Bulgaria will enter the war at once on the side of the Austro-Germans, according to the Sofia correspondent of the Tribune.

Bulgaria is alarmed at the prompt mobilization of the Greek army, the failure of the Austro-Germans to attack Serbia, and the imminent Rumanian mobilization, the Tribune's correspondent wired from the Bulgarian capital.

Diplomatic circles consider German machinations in the Balkans a disastrous failure. It is ascertained that recent events in France have forced the Austro-Germans to reduce the contingent destined for the invasion of Serbia and to adopt a defensive attitude.

LONDON, Sept. 29.—The British in France have taken more territory and are now engaged with the Germans on the third line of defenses.

PARIS, Sept. 29.—It is understood the Kaiser has arrived on the Western front and taken command to stem the Allies' advance.

DROP BOMBS ON BRUGES GAS WORKS

Allies' Airmen Leave Cities Without Lights

AMSTERDAM, London, Sept 29 —Airmen of the Allies again have bombarded Bruges. The sudden cessation of the flow of gas at Sluis (in Zeeland, on the Belgian frontier), which is supplied from Bruges, leads to the suspicion here that bombs from the aircraft struck the gas works.

A message received later from Bruges confirmed the belief that the gas works had been struck by the bombs of the Allied airmen. The whole city has been thrown into darkness, the despatch said.

Two Zeppelins flew over Northern Holland this morning, travelling in a northwesterly direction. Both displayed the German battle flag. They were at a great height and going fast. A few hours later one of the airships returned to its German base.

Big Beef Cargo For Italy Is Damaged

LONDON, Sept. 28.—A Lloyd's despatch from Naples says the American steamship Sarnia, from New York on September 3, reached Naples with her cargo of frozen meat badly damaged. It is reported that the entire cargo is unfit for consumption, the refrigerator appartus of the vessel having been broken down.

German Gold Is Seized at Genoa

GENOA, Sept 28 — The Spanish packet Louis Vives, whose port of registry is Valenzia, has been seized by the police, who discovered on board her 100,000 lire ($20,000) in gold, which it is charged, was destined for Germany. Captain Llorca was arrested.

DEAD MAN NOMINATED FOR CLERK OF COURT

SALISBURY, Md., Sept. 29.—A curious complication has arisen in Wicomico County as a result of the Democratic primary, for the first time, probably, in the history of the State, a dead man was nominated for office. Ernest V. Toadvine, who died suddenly, was returned as nominated over J. Clayton Kelley for County Clerk of the Circuit Court.

As Toadvine died on the day preceding the primary his name could not be removed from the ticket. Although the fact of his death was known generally throughout the county, his name received 200 more votes than his opponent in the party, and the judges of election were compelled to declare him nominated. It is said that Kelley will claim the nomination and will fight out the question in court.

LONDON, Sept. 29.—A Polish newspapers says twelve million Russians, including three million Poles have been driven from their homes through an advance of Germans.

CHICAGO, Sept. 29.—It is officially announced ha a half billion dollar loan to the Allies is settled and only a few details remain.

LONDON, Sept. 29.—An Amsterdam paper says the Kaiser is sounding the feudal rulers in Germany on ideas of war and prospects of peace.

NEW YORK, Sept. 29.—The secretary of the committee on Armenian atrocities says half a million Armenians were killed or driven from their homes by Turks.

PARIS, Sept. 29.—Latest reports last night from the Western front indicate the Allies are holding all new positions.

Kaiser's Headquarters Are To Be Transferred to Luxemburg

LONDON, Sept. 29.—Emperor William intends to remove his headquarters to Luxemburg in October, it is declared in a despatch from Amsterdam. Instructions already have been issued regarding the transfer, according to advices from Berlin, the despatch adds.

The Grand Duchy of Luxemburg, which German troops passed through on their way to the attack on the French at the outbreak of the war, is close to the fighting line at a crucial point on the Western front. The city of Luxemburg, the capital of the Grand Duchy, is hardly more than fifty miles in a direct line from Verdun, at which the armies of the German Crown Prince have been driving at intervals for many months.

EIGHT MEN SHOT IN STREET FIGHT IN OHIO

AKRON, Ohio, Sept. 29.—Eight men were shot, one seriously, in a street fight. Two men have been arrested.

John Lastner, aged 45, was a boiler in his home and his last words. Those under arrest are Paul Harkins, 19, a rubber worker, who is charged with shooting with intent to kill, and Harry Douglass held for carrying concealed weapons. Douglass is also wounded.

Harkins was captured by a squad of police who fought their way into the basement of a house near the scene of the fighting where Harkins had barricaded himself with a shotgun.

Those shot in addition to Justice and Douglass are Lawrence Conklin, William Haag, Clarence Rotan, Jefferson Reed, Charles Root, and Charles Adams.

Police claim Harkins, Douglass and Lester Justice, a son of the man in the hospital engaged in an argument in the street which led to a fight, attracted the other men, and was followed by shooting on the part of Harkins, who, the officers say, fired three into the crowd, seven men fell and Harkins fled.

Chicagoan, Forced Into War, Released

CHICAGO, Sept 29.—American citizenship papers and an active protest failed to prevent Austrian military officials from seizing William Hajduk, a Chicagoan, drafting him into the army, and forcing him into a trench in Serbia. The state department has been asked to demand satisfaction from Hajduk.

Hajduk was released through the influence of the United States consul when he succeeded after several attempts in getting a letter through the lines. He has served nine months when his departure from the trenches was permitted. Hajduk went to Novska, Slavonia, in 1912, to marry the daughter of a wealthy land owner. They prepared to return to the United States but were delayed until the summer of 1914.

LONELY WIDOW TRIES TO SUICIDE

Public Charges Are Not Beneficiaries of Life Assurance

A census was taken about a year ago of the inmates of alms houses, of prisons, of asylums for the care of the helpless, in an eastern state. It was found but three of the occupants of these institutions, who numbered altogether over fifteen hundred, had been beneficiaries of life insurance.

It was somebody's neglect that forced the public to pay higher taxes in order to take care of nearly all these people.

Life insurance limits the needs of poorhouses, prisons, old folks' homes. Life insurance, therefore, reduces the needs of the State in maintaining institutions for the care of the needy.

The man who has sufficient insurance to take care of his own future if he reaches old age, and of his dependents, should anything happen to him, is doing his duty, not only to his family, but to his State.

WOULD YOU CONSIDER

a proposition making provision for your family in the event of death, or, if living, provision for old age?

BERLIN, Sept. 28.—The German war loan issued September 21 is the largest financial operation in the world's history, said Dr. Karl Helfferich, secretary of the imperial treasury, in the Associated Press to-day. With a total of twelve billion marks ($3,000,000,000) and some small sums not yet reported the secretary said it exceeds Great Britain's last loan.

"The present loan," Dr. Helfferich continued, "enables the government to liquidate treasury bills taken over by the Reichesbank and other banks, provides Germany with money for the winter campaign, and renders unnecessary the raising of another loan before March.

England hitherto has raised $4,062,500,000 and Germany $6,250,000,000 in long term loans, whereas England's war expenditures up to the present time are hardly less than Germany's, and soon will exceed Germany's, for England is now spending nearly £5,000,000 daily against Germany's not much above £3,000,000. That means that Germany is spending 25c per capita daily and England 55c."

In conclusion, the secretary said that a shortage in supplies of some raw materials, like cotton and wool, might cause inconvenience, but the people were learning to economize. Old woolen clothing was being reworked into shoddy and coats could be worn shorter. Substitutes for some materials were being found, he added.

I did so. Hawkes appeared. "Clear the table, Hawkes," she said. "I want you to read all these newspaper clippings, Mr. Smart," she went on, pointing to a bundle on a chair near the window. We crossed the room. "Now that you know who I am, I insist on your reading all that the papers have been saying about me during the past five or six weeks."

I protested, but she was firm. "Every one else in the world has been reading about my affairs, so you must do likewise. No, it isn't necessary to read all of them. I will select the most lurid and the most glowing. You see there are two sides to the case. The papers that father can control are united in defending my action; the European press is just the other way. Sit down, please. I'll hand them to you."

For an hour I sat there in the window absorbing the astonishing history of the Tarnoway abduction case. I felt rather than observed the intense scrutiny with which she favored me.

At last she tossed the remainder of the bundle unread into a corner. Her face was aglow with pleasure.

"You've read both sides, and I've watched you, oh, so closely. You don't believe what the papers over here have to say. I saw the scowls when you read the translations that Mr. Poopendyke has typed for me. Now I know that you do not feel so bitterly toward me as you did at first."

I was resolved to make a last determined stand for my original convictions.

"But our own papers—the New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago journals—still voice in a way my principal contention in the matter, countess. They deplore the wretched custom among the idle but ambitious rich that made possible this whole lamentable state of affairs. I mean the custom of getting a title into the family at any cost."

"My dear Mr. Smart," she said seriously, "do you really contend that all of the conjugal unhappiness and unrest of the world is confined to the American girls who marry noblemen? Has it escaped your notice that there are thousands of unhappy marriages and equally happy divorces in America every year in which noblemen do not figure at all?"

Then suddenly she changed the subject.

"I have some pleasant news for you," she said. "My mother will be here on Thursday. You will not like her, of course, because you are already prejudiced, but I know she will like you."

"I hope she will like me," I added, feeling that it was necessary.

"She was a Collingraft, you know."

"Indeed?" The Collingraft family was one of the oldest and most exclusive in New York.

"You will like my father," she said. "He loves me more than any one else in the world—more than all the world. He would buy off the count tomorrow if I would permit him to do so. Of late I have been thinking very seriously of suggesting it to him. A million is nothing to my father."

There came a sharp rapping on the door at this instant. "Goodness! You'd think Sherlock Holmes himself was at the door," she cried.

I went to the door.

"Can you come down at once, Mr. Smart?" Poopendyke said in a voice not meant to reach the ears of the countess.

"What's up?" I questioned sharply.

"The jig, I'm afraid," he whispered.

"Good Lord! Detectives?"

"No. Count Tarnoway and a stranger."

"Impossible!"

The countess, alarmed by our manner, quickly crossed the room.

"What is it?" she demanded.

"The count is downstairs," I said. "Don't be alarmed. Nothing can happen. You"—

She laughed. "Oh, is that all? My dear Mr. Smart, he has come to see you about the frescoes."

"But I have insulted him."

"Not permanently," she said. "I know him too well. He is like a leech. He has given you time to reflect and therefore regret your action of the other night. Go down and see him."

Poopendyke volunteered further information. "There is also a man down there, a cheap looking person, who says he must see the Countess Tarnoway at once."

"A middle aged man with the upper button of his waistcoat off?" she asked sharply.

"I—I can't say as to the button."

"I am expecting one of my lawyers. It must be he. He was to have a button off."

"I'll look him over again," said Poopendyke.

"Do. And be careful not to let the count catch a glimpse of him. That would be fatal."

"No danger of that. He went at once to old Conrad's room."

"Good! I had a note from him this morning, Mr. Smart. He is Mr. Bangs of London."

"May I inquire, countess, how you manage to have letters delivered to you here? Isn't it extremely dangerous to have them go through the mails?"

"They are all directed to the Schmicks," she explained. "They are passed on to me. Now go and see the count. Don't lend him any money."

The count was waiting for me in the loggia.

"It is good to see you again, old fellow," he said, with an amiability that surprised me. "I was afraid you might hold a grievance against me. You Americans are queer chaps, you know."

Consummate assurance! I had not touched a drop of anything that night.

"I assure you, Count Tarnoway, the little tilt, as you are pleased to call it, was of no consequence. I had quite forgotten that it occurred. Sorry you reminded me of it."

The irony was wasted. He beamed. "My dear fellow, shall we not shake hands?"

There was something irresistibly winning about him, as I've said before. We shook hands with what seemed to be genuine fervor.

"I suppose you are wondering what brings me here," he said as we started toward the entrance to the loggia, his arm through mine. "I do not forget a promise, Mr. Smart. You may remember that I agreed to fetch a man from Munchen to look over your fine old frescoes and to give you an estimate. Well, he is here, the very best man in Europe."

"I am sure I am greatly indebted to you, count," I said, "but after thinking it over I've"—

"Don't say that you have already engaged some one to do the work," he cried in horror. "My dear fellow, don't tell me that! You are certain to make a dreadful mistake if you listen to any one but Schwartzmuller. He is the last word in restorations. He is"—

I checked him. "I have virtually decided to let the whole matter go over until next spring. However, I shall be happy to have Mr. Schwartzmuller's opinion. We may be able to plan ahead."

A look of disappointment flitted across his face. The suggestion of hard old age crept into his features for a second and then disappeared.

"Delays are dangerous," he said. "My judgment is that those gorgeous paintings will disintegrate more during the coming winter than in all the years gone by. They are at the critical stage. If not preserved now—well, I cannot bear to think of the consequences. Ah, here is Herr Schwartzmuller."

Just inside the door, we came upon a pompous yet servile German who could not by any means have been mistaken for anything but the last word in restoration.

For ten minutes I allowed them to expatiate on the perils of procrastination in the treatment of rare old canvases and pigments, and then, having formulated my plans, blandly inquired what the cost would be.

"Preserved and restored, complete and unconditional, not to exceed 150 marks, perhaps less," said the expert, rolling his calculative eye upward and running it along the vast dome of the hall as if to figure it out in yards and inches.

The count was watching me with an eager light in his eyes. He looked away as I shot a quick glance at his face. The whole matter became as clear as day to me. He was to receive a handsome commission if the contract was awarded.

"Nearly $40,000, in other words," said I reflectively.

"They are worth ten times that amount, sir," said the expert gravely.

I smiled skeptically.

"Hohendahl was once offered $250,000, Mr. Smart," he said.

"Why didn't he accept it?" I asked bluntly. "He sold the whole place to me, contents included, for less than half that amount."

"It was years ago, before he was in such dire straits," he explained quickly.

A terrible suspicion entered my head. I felt myself turn cold. If the frescoes were genuine they were worth all that Schwartzmuller declared; that being the case, why should Hohendahl have let them come to me for practically nothing when there were dozens of collectors who would have paid him the full price?

"As a matter of fact, Count Tarnoway," I said, resorting to unworthy means, "I have every reason to believe that Hohendahl sold the originals some time ago and had them replaced on the ceilings by clever imitations. They are not worth the canvas they are painted on."

He started. "Impossible!" he cried sharply.

"By no means impossible," I said calmly, now sure of my ground. "To be perfectly frank with you, I've known from the beginning that they are fakes. Count Hohendahl confessed to me at the time our transaction took place that the frescoes were very recent productions. The originals, I think, are in London or New York." I saw guilt in the face of Herr Schwartzmuller. I looked straight into the German's eyes and said, "Now that I come to think of it, I am sure he mentioned the name of Schwartzmuller in connection with the"—

"It is not true! It is not true!" roared the expert without waiting for me to finish. "He lied to you! We—the great firm of Rumpe & Schwartzmuller—we could not be tempted with millions to do such a thing."

I went a step farther in my deductions. Somehow I had grasped the truth—this pair deliberately hoped to swindle me out of $40,000. They knew the frescoes were imitations, and yet they were urging me to spend a huge sum of money in restoring canvases that had been purposely made to look old and flimsy in order to deceive a more cautious purchaser than I.

"Moreover, Count Tarnoway, you are fully aware of all this."

"My dear fellow"—

"I'll not waste words. You are a scoundrel!"

He measured the distance with his eye and then sprang swiftly forward, striking blindly at my face.

I knocked him down.

Schwartzmuller was near the door, looking over his shoulder as he felt for the great brass knob.

"Mein Gott!" he bellowed.

"Stop!" I shouted. "Come back here and take this fellow away with you!"

Tarnoway was sitting up, looking about him in a dazed, bewildered manner.

At that moment Poopendyke came running down the stairs, attracted by the loud voices. He was followed closely by three or four wide eyed glaziers who were working on the second floor.

"In the name of heaven, sir!"

"I've bruised my knuckles horribly," was all that I said. I seemed to be in a sort of a daze myself. I had never knocked a man down before in my life.

Tarnoway struggled to his feet and faced me, quivering with rage. I was dumfounded to see that he was not covered with blood. But he was of a light, yellowish green. I could scarcely believe my eyes.

"You shall pay for this!" he cried. The tears rushed to his eyes. "Coward, beast, to strike a defenseless man!"

Mark Twain Story.

Mark Twain told how, when traveling through India several years ago, he greatly enjoyed the humiliation of a very pompous member of the Bombay judiciary. He was strutting back and forth on the platform of a wayside station when a perspiring Englishman rushed up, touched the judge on the shoulder, and asked:

"Tell me, is this the Bombay train?"

The judge drew himself up, brushed the stranger's arm aside, and cuttingly remarked:

"I'm not the station-master, sir!"

"Oh! You're not?" said the Englishman, evidently surprised.

Then, with an air of extreme exasperation, he demanded:

"Well, what the dickens do you mean by swaggering about as though you were?"

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

Bewitched by a Blond Fairy.

By LESTER ROSE.

Copyright, 1915, by Homer [illegible]

Under ordinary circumstances the trip across the Atlantic would have been quiet indeed. The eastbound traffic was light, and most of it went to the newer and faster boats. There were less than fourscore passengers in the first cabin, and Dorsey Adams looked forward to a long, quiet week with Nell Sommers.

For more than a year Dorsey had sought to win Nell's hand and with fair prospect of eventual success. When he heard that the family was going to Europe for the winter he planned to take the same boat, and the evident pleasure with which Nell greeted the announcement greatly cheered the anxious Adams.

But the boat had not reached the banks before the course of true love showed its customary unwillingness to move smoothly. They had, in fact, been out less than twenty-four hours when the love course began to resemble the serpentine windings of the Mississippi and evince a far greater roughness than the November seas.

Miss Sommers had spent her first night aboard in the agonies of seasickness, and it was late the next morning when a careful steward and a sympathetic stewardess helped the exhausted girl to the deck and comfortably installed her in a deck chair, where Dorsey presently found her.

Dorsey seated himself on a stool beside her chair and prepared to make himself diverting, but it was Miss Sommers who found the diversion. Against Dorsey's dark coat her sharp eyes spied a golden strand. She leaned forward to remove it, and the next moment she was holding it accusingly before his eyes, while her glance sought the sunny haired soubrette who was crossing to play the London music halls.

"You must have missed me last night, as you say," said Miss Sommers bitterly.

"But look here, Nell," declared Dorsey miserably. "I swear to you that I spent the whole evening in the smoking room except for a few minutes on deck just before I turned in. I was alone all the evening."

SHE WAS HOLDING IT ACCUSINGLY BEFORE HIS EYES.

"Do not add perjury to your other offenses," said Miss Sommers coldly. "I hate a man who does not tell the truth. Therefore I hate you. Please go away."

Dorsey went, miserably enough, while Nell Sommers sank back in her steamer chair lost in her bitter thoughts. She liked Dorsey, and it cut her to the quick that he should have spent the evening flirting with the little soubrette, while she herself lay in her berth vainly wishing the ship would run aground if only the awful rolling of the vessel might stop.

Dorsey, manlike, made for the solace of the smoking room. At the head of the companionway lounged one of the men who had been engaged in a poker game the night before. Now his face was wreathed in smiles as he followed the miserable lover to the deck below.

"I see you were caught with the goods," he said, with a laugh, as he took a seat at Dorsey's table. Adams looked at him savagely.

"I wish you'd mind your own blamed business!" he growled. The stranger only smiled pleasantly.

"Don't be nasty, old man," he counseled. "I'm not trying to rub it in. I want to help you out."

There was real friendliness in the tone, and Dorsey colored as he held out his hand.

"You might go and tell her that I was here in the smoking room all last evening," he suggested. "That was the row."

"A lot of good it would do to say that," said the intruder, with a smile. "She would simply declare that I was bolstering you up in an untruth. You've got to do better than that, old chap. By the way, my name's Greyson—Ben Greyson. What's yours?"

Dorsey made reply, and over the highballs they planned a campaign. The first gun was fired at luncheon when Greyson leaned across the table and advised Dorsey that there was a hair on his coat. Dorsey carefully removed a long golden strand while he made the retort courteous and pointed out to Greyson the fact that there was a hair upon his own coat. The little soubrette at the end of the table beamed mirthfully upon the abashed men.

"I'm glad they are so long," she declared. "If it wasn't such a long one, folks might think it was one of mine. Ain't it funny that I'm the only blond on board?" she ran on. "It's real blond, too," she said proudly as she shook her yellow curls.

Greyson passed her the hair he had removed from his coat. "If your hair was that long," he said, with a smile, "you could work in a museum instead of on the stage."

"Gee!" said the small soubrette admiringly. "I guess one of the 'hair tonic' sisters must be aboard. That hair's five feet if it's an inch."

"Let's ask the purser," suggested Greyson. "He knows the passenger list, and I guess he knows the blond too. There's a hair on his coat."

The purser, who was flirtatiously inclined and who had been making himself very attractive to the little soubrette, blushingly denied that there was any such person as a blond with long hair aboard, but the others at his table refused to believe his statement and kept up the joke.

The joke became a mystery when long golden hairs continued to be found on the coats of the men passengers and even occasionally on the dresses of the women. Even the gruff old captain swore softly under his breath when one of the incriminating hairs was found on his coat to the great glee of his officers, who knew him to be a woman hater of the most pronounced type.

As the days progressed the mystery deepened and in default of matters of greater moment became the chief topic of talk. Through it all Dorsey was coldly courteous to Nell, and she returned the coldness with interest.

It was not until the last day of the run that he ventured to reopen his case for a second pleading. Miss Sommers had come on deck after dinner and had sought a place in the bow where she could watch the swirling waters slip past all afoam from the impact with the prow. The clouds were breaking up after a storm, and great billows of vapor filled the sky, which rode serenely in the heavens.

So engrossed was she with her thoughts that she did not hear footsteps until a form loomed beside her and a hand lightly clasped her own.

"Am I forgiven yet for what I did not do?" asked Dorsey softly. "Believe me, Nell, I did not spend that first evening with Miss Clarence. I don't know how that hair got on my coat; honestly I don't. There seems to be some mystery to the whole affair."

"I was wrong," confessed Miss Sommers. "Do you know, Dorsey, I believe that this boat is bewitched by a blond?"

"That's it," cried Dorsey. "It must be witchcraft, and you will have to help me exorcise the spirit."

"How?" asked Miss Sommers wonderingly. "I am not versed in the casting out of spirits."

"Make me proof against their charms by marrying me," he explained. "Will you, dear?"

"I think I shall have to," said Nell softly as the moon discreetly went behind a cloud.

It was late that evening that Adams and Greyson sat together in a corner of the smoking room.

"Here's to the spirit of the blond bewitcher," said Greyson as he lifted his glass, "and here's long life and happiness to the happy pair. I'm glad that I helped to straighten out the trouble even though it did cost me my very best sample of the wonderful effects of Hairy's hair healer. It's wonderful stuff, grows hair on the baldest pate and heals wounded feelings. It was a hard job, though, to plant all those hairs without the victims finding out the trick and spoiling it all."

A High Handed Action.

The Bible class teacher in a certain Sunday school was extremely annoyed at the noise made by pupils in the next room. At last, unable to stand it any longer, he looked over the partition, and, seeing one boy talking louder than the others, he leaned over and hoisted him over the partition and, banging him into a chair, said, "Now be quiet."

Some minutes later a small head appeared over the partition and a meek voice said:

"I HAD ALMOST GIVEN UP."

Sarnia, Ont.—"About 27 years ago I was taken very bad, my blood, too, was in bad shape. I got so I had to go to bed and I was there for over three months I could not eat and suffered untold agony I had three of the best doctors I could get but it just seemed nothing was going to help me. I had almost given up. I thought I would never be any better and was willing to give up and die rather than suffer as I was. A neighbor of mine told me of Dr. Pierce's wonderful remedies and I decided to use them. My husband bought me six bottles of 'Favorite Prescription.' I had not taken it long until I felt better. In less than six weeks I was out of bed, and in less than six months I was cured and have been well ever since. Do all my own work. I have raised three daughters, two are married and have children. They have used it and they are healthy, so are their children. I am sure it was all on account of my having them use the medicine.

"I keep all of Dr. Pierce's medicines in the house. Have 'Favorite Prescription,' 'Golden Medical Discovery' and 'Smart-Weed'—anything prepared by Dr. Pierce is good. I also have a copy of the People's Common Sense Medical Adviser, which I have had 26 years; it has been very valuable to me."—Mrs. J. Way, 232 Ontario St., Sarnia, Ont.

If you are a sufferer, if your daughter, mother, sister need help, get Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription in liquid or tablet form from any medicine dealer to-day. Then address Dr. Pierce, Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y., and get confidential medical advice entirely free.

A most valuable book in any home is Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser. A splendid 1008-page volume, with engravings and colored plates. A copy will be sent to anyone sending fifty cents in stamps, to pay the cost of wrapping and mailing only, to Dr. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.,

Eczema Was Cured Twelve Years Ago

Dr. Chase's Ointment Proved to be a Permanent Cure

The old idea of eczema being a disease of the blood has been pretty well exploded by the record of cures made by Dr. Chase's Ointment.

Some doctors still advise internal treatment, but the results are slow and uncertain, and too often a lamentable failure. With Dr Chase's Ointment it is different. You apply the ointment to the sore parts. It cleanses the sores, and soon sets up the healing process. In a few days you can see with your own eyes the wonderful change that is taking place and are encouraged to keep up the treatment until the cure is complete and the sores replaced by smooth, natural skin.

It is wise to look after your general health, keep the bowels regular and the blood rich but you can depend on Dr. Chase's Ointment to cure the eczema if you will do your part and apply it regularly.

Mr W H Roberts, Charlottetown, P.E.I., writes: "I can recommend Dr. Chase's Ointment to anyone suffering from itching skin disease. I had eczema on my leg and suffered terribly from the itching. I had a doctor treat me for four months without relief, and I was getting worse all the time. A second doctor gave some relief for a time, but made no cure. I tried several advertised treatments, but without relief until I used Dr. Chase's Ointment. The ointment cured me in a month. That was twelve years ago, and I have never had a sign of the old trouble since.

"Since then we have always kept Dr. Chase's Ointment in the house, and find it invaluable for chafing, chilblains, insect stings and burns. I would not be without it if it cost $5 a box."

"This is to certify that I am personally acquainted with Mr W H Roberts, and believe his statement regarding the use of Dr. Chase's Ointment to be true and correct."—(Signed) Alex. Hynes, Justice of the Peace.

NEW MICROBE OF TRENCHES

Army Surgeons Fight Blindly Against War Bacteria

A mysterious new microbe that thrives without oxygen has been unearthed by modern trench warfare and has confronted medical science with another riddle which Metchnikoff, Sir Almworth Wright, Dr. Carrel and other famous scientists are now working night and day to solve.

The new microbe which resembles in most respects a microbe already discovered in the laboratory of Professor William H. Welth of Baltimore—the bacillus perfringens—is a deadly enemy to the armies in the field and has caused untold suffering and reaped a rich harvest of dead. Its moral activities have hitherto set at naught the profundity of learning and experience now being brought to bear in military hospitals against war wounds and sickness.

Nowhere is the struggle against this devastating germ being waged with greater earnestness or more effect than at the magnificent American Ambulance Hospital at Neuilly, by the gates of Paris, yet in the words of Dr. Edmund Gros, one of the leading members of the American medical staff, "We feel we stand where we did before Lister discovered antiseptic treatment."

GERMAN TRENCH TACTICS TRICKY

PARIS, Sept. 27.—The well known military writer, Petroff, after visiting the Russian front, writes to the Russkoe Slovo a description of the manner in which the Germans construct and defend their trenches. It may prove instructive when the time comes to turn them out of their lines in Belgium and France, and will give the reader some idea of what trench warfare has now become—a new fine art in war. The Russian writer says:

"In the neighbourhood of Vladava the enemy's lines were divided into sections, each of which was, so to speak, framed by lateral and transversal trenches. In the course of a night attack, when our soldiers, in an admirable rush, penetrated into the adversaries' ground, the Germans gave way, but instead of retreating to the rear, where they also would have risked falling under the fire of their own machine guns, they slipped quickly, right and left, into their lateral trenches. There they waited until our attacking columns had uncovered their flanks, and when the moment came a murderous crossfire enmeshed us.

"Another method consists in deepening the trenches in such a manner that each one is shorter than the one in front of it. In this way they make a series of triangles, touching each other, with the bases turned toward us and forming the front. The empty spaces between these triangles form reversed triangles. This is what happens. When in the course of a bayonet charge some units find themselves overcoming unfailingly accumulated obstacles other units find themselves confronted with empty spaces. Carried away by their excitement the troops press on and get far in advance of the other columns. The attack thus becomes cut up and broken into zigzags, and our soldiers soon get struggling and entangled as if in a net. But this is not all. Behind the empty spaces the Germans place machine guns, and when our attack is well involved and finds no resistance and hesitates, fearing an ambuscade, the German quick-firers open a deadly fire on the masses. They have recourse to other tricks, and in wooded regions, where they expect to be attacked, they hang their machine guns into the trees, let us pass, and then fire into our backs."

THIEVES LEAVE AUTO BEHIND FOR FARMER

BETHLEHEM, Pa. Soon after Farmer William Hess has come into possession of an automobile in an unusual way. During the early hours of the morning he was aroused by the barking of his dog. Taking his shotgun Hess investigated.

He sent the dog one way round the house and he went the other. At the rear he discovered two strangers ransacking his hennery. Espying the dog the thieves took to their heels, leaving their auto behind and several dozen prize chickens, which had been placed in boxes.

Fighting For Ideals; A Dead Hero's Letter

The New York Times publishes a letter from John Winfield Scott, covering a letter from a friend in England, in which the war is discussed with freedom. He writes in part:

"Europe is indeed in a horrible condition; it is bad enough in England but the losses and misery are infinitely worse in France, Belgium, Serbia, Russia, Germany and Austria. I don't think the United States realizes the condition of affairs much yet.

"Nothing will stop this war now until one side or the other is completely victorious. The best thing for the idealist to do is to make up his mind to do that. Then read all the evidence he can for and against both sides and make up his mind which side he backs and stick to it. I assure you, a pro-German will be hard become so after sifting the evidence for and against both sides as to who was in the right or wrong in this conflict would not be so incomprehensible and irritating by a long way as a man like Bryan. Bryan might do very well in the millennium, but he is a bit too 'previous' or else out of date just now.

"Possibly I am being very unjust. We have our duty clear before us, the whole empire is in danger, and it is easy for us to see and know that we have got to give our last ounce of strength and our last penny it never-any, be winning. I think the war may go on a long time yet. I expect well into next year anyway. The Germans and Austrians combined are losing at least 20,000 men a month, they have over four million here in combat, so we know they cannot keep on forever. But it will be a tremendously difficult and expensive job driving them back through Belgium. I am thankful that my brother was killed by fair means and not foul. He was killed in open attack when charging the German trenches.

"He was a fine chap and came home to join the army directly war was declared. He knew he was going into a big battle, and I think he felt he would be killed, for he wrote and left a letter in his pocket addressed to his mother, only to be sent if he was killed. It is a fine letter, and I think you would like to read it. It shows you, anyway, that we are fighting for what we think is right."

(The Letter.)

"May —, 1915.

"Dearest Mother,

"We are in for a very bad fight tomorrow, so I am going to leave this note in my pocket and it will only get to you if I am knocked out. I just want to say goodby, mother dear. I have had a very happy time of it and the nicest lot of near relations that a man was ever blessed with. Don't be sorry for me—it is not every one who has the privilege of dying for all he thinks worth while in the world, and this old world without British influence for good and without you dear people would be a poor place to live in. We are fighting for very high ideals—justice, honesty and fair play as among nations, for the teaching of Christ as against those of the devil.

"It is an unselfish cause and one for which I am very proud to be fighting. I know you will be sad and I would not have it otherwise, but you can comfort yourself with the thought that you too have had to make a sacrifice for the noblest possible cause.

"My best love to father.

"Your very loving son."

"That having been written by a man just going into battle, will show you what we, anyway, feel about what we are gladly even dying for."

Story of The Bravest Deed of The War And How Corp. Angus Won His Victoria Cross

Angus Was Wounded in Forty Places---Performed An Act of Bravery Second to None---How He Was Welcomed Home.

EDINBURG, Sept. 28.—Corporal Angus, the first Scottish Territorial to win the V.C., returned to his home in Carluke, Lanarkshire, recently, and was accorded a great public reception, in which over 25,000 people took part. The normal population of Carluke is about 5,000 but in the three hours following noon they poured in from all the parts of the Clyde Valley many thousands of persons to join in the welcome to the young soldier and the Carluke officer whom he rescued. Scenes of enthusiasm unexampled in the neighborhood marked the reception.

The deed for which Corporal Angus was awarded the coveted cross has been described by one who witnessed it as one of the most brilliant deeds that the world has ever seen. It was due at Givenchy on June 12. On the preceding night a small British party was sent out to destroy a German barricade. During the attack the German exploded a mine, and at dawn the next day it was seen that Lieut. Martin, of the 10th Highland Light Infantry, was lying at the foot of the German trench. The remainder of the party had returned safely after the mine explosion, and the men had crawled in all directions in the darkness searching without success for the missing officer, who had been wounded and half-buried in the earth thrown up by the bursting mine.

When daylight came Lieut. Martin recovered consciousness and began to work clear of the mass of earth which was pinning him down. His movements were seen by a British sentry, and he must have been heard by the Germans at the same time. He was separated from the enemy by about ten feet of earth. They could not see him without looking over the parapet. Lieut. Martin appealed to them for water, and they threw him, in response an unlighted bomb.

Periscope Shot Away.

Soon a periscope was thrust up from the enemy trench, and it was promptly shot to pieces. The sky was cloudless, and as the officer lay under the blaze of the sun the German repeatedly essayed by periscope to ascertain his exact position. The British shot away each periscope as soon as it appeared. Shortly afterwards a steel shield loophole, fenced in by sandbags, was raised by the enemy to make a rescue by day impossible. The whole of the company to which the young officer belonged volunteered to rush the German trench, and were promised permission to make the attempt as soon as dusk arrived to render it less suicidal.

The best riflemen in the vicinity were concentrated in the British trench as the hours wore on, and so keenly and accurately did their fire command the enemy's position that it was impossible for a German head to appear over the parapet edge. About noon, however, the position became unendurable to the anxious men of Lieutenant Martin's regiment, and out of many volunteers there was chosen for the desperate attempts at rescue a fellow-townsman of the officer—Corporal Angus.

For half of the seventy yards which separated the trenches every square inch of the ground was swept by the enemy's fire, and there was no cover. Angus was warned that he was going to certain death. "It does not matter much, sir, whether sooner or later," was the reply. He was allowed to go. Arrangements were made for heavy covering fire of rifles and machine-guns, and at two o'clock in the afternoon Angus slipped over the British parapet, and flattened to earth, began to work his way towards the enemy trench.

Struggled Back to Safety.

No finer tribute to his training could have been given than the fact that he succeeded in reaching the German parapet without drawing the fire of the enemy. He was seen to touch the wounded officer and whisper to him. Then he raised him up, and placed a flask of brandy between his teeth, and the two sat at the base of the parapet for a moment prior to the struggle back to safety. The enemy had heard them moving by this time, but the British rifle nre kept all German heads under the parapet. So the enemy lobbed a bomb just over the parapet.

There was an explosion, and a cloud of dust, and Angus and the wounded officer made their dash for safety, the corporal supporting and guiding the officer. The Germans threw more bombs as the two came into view, and there were more explosions all round them as they staggered along, whilst great pillars of dust were thrown up to the salvation. The enemy could not see them now to use their rifles, but they hailed bullets at random.

Suddenly out of a cloud of dust the two were seen to stumble, and they struggled toward the British lines falling, raising, and falling again. Lieutenant Martin managed to crawl in. Corporal Angus rising after having been wounded was separated from the officer. Nearly a dozen bombs burst around him as he made for the trench at a different point, but he left the line of fire clear, and the British rifles and machine guns poured in a tornado of bullets, under cover of which he got in. He was wounded in four places. Lieutenant Martin had three wounds. Corporal Angus received the Victoria Cross at the hands of the King a short time ago.

Lord Newlands, president of the Lanarkshire Territorial Force Association, led the party which welcomed Corp. Angus home on Saturday afternoon, and the company included Sir Simon Macdonald Lockhard, Bt.; Lord Lamington, the Hon. William Watson, K.C., M.P., and many figures prominent in the life of the country. A guard of honor of the Highland Light Infantry was provided at all railway stations, and an interesting contingent of twenty-eight convalescent wounded soldiers, who had been with Corp. Angus on the day he won the V.C., had been permitted to take part in the proceedings. From the railway station to the Market Place there was a procession of motor-cars through the picken and gaily decorated town where many floral arches had been raised, bearing words of proud welcome.

Officers and V.C. Hero.

As the young V.C., bearing the marks of the tremendous ordeal through which he had won fame, was assisted to the platform by Lieut. Martin, whom he had rescued, and by Lord Newlands, there was a prolonged roar of cheering, which lasted for several minutes, and a crowd typical of the whole Clyde Valley rose in great enthusiasm, and gave such a welcome as is seldom expressed by the undemonstrative folks of the North Country.

The first presentation was made by Lord Newlands, who, with words of warm praise, handed over a clock, suitably inscribed, and New War Loan stock to the value of £1,000.

PUTS U-BOAT LOSSES AT 67 SINCE MAY 5

New Method Said to Have Disposed of 80 Per Cent. of Gemany's Submersibles.

REMAINING CREWS IN PANIC.

Boats Caught in Huge Nets Dropped in their Path—Why Berlin is Willing to Reform.

The Providence Journal says:

The reason why the German Government has consented to change its submarine methods is because over 80 per cent. of its submarines have been destroyed, and its underseas warfare brought to compete failure within the past two months.

Sixty-seven German submarines, twenty-eight of which are declared to have been of the newest and latest construction, have been sunk and their crews destroyed by the British Navy since the fifth day of May. It is stated on positive authority that the full capacity of the German shipyards for underseas boats is not more than three a month, but that even if Germany were able to replace her submarines as fast as they had been destroyed, the gravest situation she faces in regard to this method of warfare is the actual destruction of the morale of the officers and crews of such vessels.

Submarine Crews in Panic.

It is declared that while the sailors who man German submarines are as brave and efficient as those of any nation in the world, the authorities have been unable to keep from the the facts with regard to the mysterious disappearance of dozens of submarines with their entire crews, and that this condition has brought about a practical panic among all men in this branch of the service, who not only believe that when they leave the protection of their own waters they are going to destruction, but who have not understood how that destruction was being brought about.

For several months there has been considerable publicity with regard to the belief that transports from Great Britain to the coast of France have been protected from submarines mainly by pathways of wire netting stretched across the Channel. It has been known that great quantities of wire have been shipped from the United States, and that very large orders for similar material have been filled in British factories. This wire has not been used in the manner suggested. The operations which have resulted in the practical elimination of the German submarine navy have all centred about the fact that the periscope of the submarine, particularly when travelling in high seas that are rough or choppy, has a very greatly restricted range of vision. This range at the most in clear water is not more than one mile, except when there are vessels on the horizon using fuel which makes smoke, when the range of vision is increased to from three to five miles.

Drop Traps in their Paths.

This fact has been taken full advantage of. The netting which has been used by the British navy for the past two months has been made of galvanized material with a fifteen-foot mesh. This size has superseded both the nine-foot and the twelve-foot mesh which preceded it and which were found to be impracticable for the purpose. The netting has been cut into lengths of 150 feet with a depth of 27 feet. On top of this netting are lashed great blocks of wood. Oil-burning torpedo boat destroyers, vessels of great speed, have been used in pairs, running along slowly with these sections of netting stretched between them. The moment a submarine periscope is sighted the destroyers slow down at a distance of a mile or less, and as soon as the submarine's course is charted by the continuous movement of her periscope the destroyers get ahead of her path, and cut away the lashings which hold the ends of the netting to the vessels.

It is declared that three times out of four, when this has been done, the submarine has run directly into this netting, which, by the time the submarine reaches it, has sunk from eight to ten feet below the surface, and that with lows once enmeshed the submarine turns turtle and sinks out of sight.

At times the destroyers have run for several miles ahead of these submarines before dropping their nets, in order to make sure of the exact course of the enemy. Eight or ten submarines have escaped destruction, merely by accident by changing their course after the netting has been let go. But the British naval authorities have been confident throughout that in no case has any periscope sighted the destroyers which lie very low in the water and which leave no smudge of smoke behind them.

There has never been any lane of wire netting to protect transports. British authorities have not been diverted from their course against the German submarines by reason of any activity that has been displayed outside of the several zones which they have been protecting. The loss of the Lusitania was a great blow, as was the destruction of the Arabic, but the large majority of the vessels which have been sunk by German submarines have caused the Admiralty very little concern except for the loss of life involved.

Replace Lost Freighters.

The reason why the British Government has not allowed itself to be diverted from the plans which it had mapped out is that British shipyards have been turning out more freighters of from three to five thousand tons than the number that have been destroyed. There has been no attempt to safeguard the seas around the British Isles outside of the well-marked localities that have been under guard for several months.

Up to within two months ago the German submarine commanders, regardless of the mysterious destruction of their comrades and other submarines, have been devoting most of their energies to attacking the lines of transportation between Great Britain and France, being fully aware that the moral result of the destruction of British transports would be very great. They have never been able to accomplish anything in this direction and it is the belief of the British authorities that fully 75 per cent. of the submarines that have made these attempts have gone to the bottom.

The Admiralty has never made any public statement with regard to the immense number of submarines that have been sunk in the last three months, preferring to let the German Government worry over the non-return of its undersea vessels. The amount of money that has already been paid for the galvanized nettings used in the work of destroying German submarines has been over $7,000,000, and fully $2,000,000 of this amount has been spent in the United States.

The range of the latest German torpedoes used in the new submarines is between 1,100 and 1,200 yards. It has not been possible in many cases for the British Admiralty to ascertain the numeral designation of the submarines that have been sunk in this manner, but it is positively known that since April 1st the following boats have been destroyed: U-9, U-15, U-16, U-18, U-22, U-23, U-28, U-5, U-2, U-7, U-4, besides four unnumbered boats of what is known as the Augsburg two-cycle motor type, and three of the Nuremburg motor type, which apparently have carried no numerical designation whatever.

How to Wave Hair to Appear Naturally Curly

You don't need to resort to the parching, scorching curling iron if you will adopt the simple plan I will mention. Is not that good news?

At night merely apply a little liquid silmering with a clean tooth brush, drawing this through the hair from root to tips. This will impart a delightful wavy appearance and bright lustre suggestive of "hidden sunshine." It will prove beneficial to the hair instead of making it brittle and dead looking as the hot iron does. In the morning, instead of your tresses being mean and contrary, you will find them quite easy to do up in any form, and there will be no unpleasant odor, grease or stickiness about the hair. I would suggest that you ask your druggist for the liquid silmerine four or five ounces—which will require no mixing and you can pour a little into a saucer when required. You won't need to use this at frequent intervals, by the way, because the curliness lasts many days. Emily Cashon in Hygienic Review.

RUSSIANS HAVE RECAPTURED THE MOST OF FORTIFIED TRIANGLE

Ivanoff Has Driven Teutons Further From Kiev, While Ruszky Holds Back Hindenburg in the North

LONDON, Sept. 27.—Some of the fiercest fighting of the campaign is in progress on the Russian front. The Germans continue their furious attacks in an effort to drive the Russians out of Dvinsk, while in Volhynia and Galicia the Russians continue to harrass the Austro-Germans who had designs on Kiev, from which town they are now further away than they were a few weeks ago.

General Ivanoff apparently is determined to hold back the Austro-Germans, and his efforts are meeting with a considerable measure of success.

The fortress triangle, which includes Dubno, Rovno, and Lutsk, is almost entirely in the possession of the Russians. In Galicia the Austrians have been driven back across the rivers which run parallel to the border.

The military expert of the Petrograd Russky Invalid estimates that there are 130 Austro-German divisions comprising 2,600,000 men, distributed over the 1,000-mile front from Riga to the Roumanian frontier. The distribution is as follows:

The sector of Riga-Dvinsk-Svenziany—13 divisions, 7 infantry, 5 cavalry.

The sector of Svenziany-Vilna-Orani—15 divisions, 12 infantry, 3 cavalry.

The sector of Orani-Slonim-Pinsk—45 divisions, 45 infantry, 2 cavalry.

The sector of Pinsk-Dubno-Brody-Tarnapol, Novo-Selizy—54 divisions, 44 infantry, 10 cavalry.

There is a marked ascendency in cavalry in Buelow's and Eichhorn's armies, which are used to break through and cut off railways and get to the rear. Russian cavalry forces to the rear. Russian cavalry forces, says Frederick Bennet in a despatch from Petrograd, have succeeded on the Vilna-Dvinsk and Lida-Polotk lines, but the infantry failed in its task of causing general operations to be frustrated. The fighting in the Dvinsk region is growing fierce and more stubborn. With every step forward the enemy is losing heavily.

A very enjoyable afternoon was held at the home of Mrs. T. Coughlan on Wednesday last, when she was at home to her friends for the first time since her marriage. The house was beautifully decorated for the occasion and the ladies-in-waiting performed their duties very creditably. The callers were numerous.

Mr Lambert has been treating the exterior of his residence to a coat of paint, which adds greatly to its appearance.

A WEAK HEART

When the heart is weak or irregular in action, when the blood is thin and watery remember the blood-forming qualities of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and by its use flood the system with rich, red, vitalizing blood. This is Nature's way of curing weakness and disease. It is the only way to ensure lasting benefit.

Not Dangerous.

"You criticize us," said the Chinese visitor, "yet I see all your women have their feet bandaged."

"That is an epidemic," it was explained to him gently, "which broke out in 1914. Those are called 'spats.'"—Washington Post.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

LADY'S DRESS.

By Anabel Worthington.

A frock showing the overblouse is illustrated in this charming model. The blouse is cut away at the neck in front, displaying the front of the underwaist or guimpe. It continues up to the shoulders, and has a small patch pocket on the breast. In the back it covers the entire underwaist. Of course, it is sleeveless.

The guimpe worn with this dress is plain, with the sleeve inserted in the ordinary manner and made full length, with a band cuff. At the neck is a pretty collar of medium size.

The skirt has four gores, the seams of which are closely joined at the upper part, but having a small underturned pleat at the lower end of each seam. This gives a neat fit around the body and plenty of room for moving where it is needed.

These dresses are extremely popular in taffetas and in velveteen. They are usually trimmed with black braid. When made of a single color serge they can be brightened up considerably by using a stripe or plaid for the guimpe. Made without lining the dress is easy to construct, and a business woman will find it an excellent model for constant wear with washable blouses to accompany it.

The dress pattern, No. 7,332, is cut in sizes 34 to 44 inches bust measure. Medium size requires for dress 5¼ yards of 44 inch material; for guimpe, 1⅞ yards of 40 inch goods.

This pattern can be obtained by sending 10 cents to the office of this paper.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

HILL NO. 140 STORMED BY FRENCH

THE CANADIAN ARTILLERY IS IN ACTION

Prussian Guardsmen Captured By French in Yesterday's Attacks

Important Gains Have Been Made by the Allies Both in the Artois and Champagne Districts in Furious Attacks That Continued All Day Yesterday and Throughout Last Night---German Losses Are Estimated at 120,000 --Ninety-seven Cannon Have Been Captured.

CANUCK ARTILLERY IN THE THICK OF FIGHT

PARIS (French Official) Sept. 29.—Important gains have been made by the Allies both in the Artois and Champagne regions in furious attacks that continued all day yesterday and throughout last night, it was officially announced this afternoon.

In a stubborn battle the French troops stormed and captured Hill 140 dominating the Vimy Heights east of Souchez, taking 300 prisoners, most of whom were Prussian Guardsmen.

The German losses now total more than three army corps (about 120,000 men) the War Office estimated this afternoon. In Artois and Champagne actions more than 2,300 German prisoners have been taken, and ninety-seven cannon.

CANADIAN ARTILLERY FIGHTING.

LONDON, (Special Cable) Sept. 29.—Although Canadian infantry is thought to be held in leash for the present in the British advance in Flanders, it is believed here that Canada's two divisions of field artillery, approximately one hundred guns, are to-day with their Canadian-made shells volleying tons of metal and explosives against the German redoubts and trenches that still stand in the way of the British progress toward Lille and the German frontier. The Canadian artillery of the second division lately arrived at the front, thus getting their first blow at the enemy, fighting beside the veterans of the First Contingent's artillery brigades who won their spurs at Ypres.

General Burstall's gunners from across the Atlantic are held in the highest regard for the excellence of their training and discipline by the British army leaders, and stories of wounded men arriving to-day tell of the Canadian guns moving to the forefront of the artillery positions for a great smash.

Official and unofficial despatches to-day agree that the artillery bombardment to again clear the way for infantry assault is the feature of to-day's fighting. The Dominion artillery can be depended on to cut a wide swath in the German defences.

LONDON, Sept. 29.—A large Turkish force has been defeated and routed with heavy losses by the British in Mesopotamia, J. Austen Chamberlen, Secretary for India, announced in the House of Commons this afternoon. The British captured enemy positions on both sides of the Tigris and took large ammunition supplies. The Turks are fleeing toward Bagdad. The British losses were less than five hundred.

AMSTERDAM, Sept. 29.—Czar Ferdinand of Bulgaria has sent envoys to Athens and Bucharest to assure Greece and Rumania that Bulgaria would not enter the war unless she was attacked by Serbia, according to Berlin despatches to-day.

LONDON, Sept. 29.—The official statement from the German War Office this afternoon confirms Paris reports that the most furious struggle of the past twenty-four hours has occurred in the region of Vimy. Berlin admits the fierceness of the French attacks. It is officially stated that German counter-attacks failed to drive the French from a trench section. The Berlin official statement claims the recapture of positions taken by the British north of Loos. The last official report from General French said that severe fighting was going on around Loos and north of Loos, but admitted no British reverses.

PARIS, Sept. 29.—President Poincare to-day addressed a letter to War Minister Millerand declaring that the French troops have definitely proven their superiority over the best troops of Germany in the great battle now being waged. Millerand forwarded Poincare's letter to General Joffre with a note congratulating the French Commander-in-Chief and the entire army, on their continued successes.

ATHENS, Greece, Sept. 29.—Three hundred thousand Austro-Germans have begun the expected advance against the Serbian frontier, according to a Nish telegram to day. It was stated that the Serbians are supremely confident the enemy will be repulsed.

ROME, Sept. 29.—More than three hundred lives are known to have been lost in the sinking of the Italian battleship Benedetto Brin in Brindisi Harbour.

The death of Rear-Admiral de Cervin was also officially confirmed. The explosion was caused by a burst of flame that reached the powder magazine aft. The origin of the fire is a mystery, but the ship was not the victim of hostile attack.

OTTAWA, Sept. 29.—In announcing this morning that recruiting continues satisfactory throughout the country, the Militia Department says many complaints are made that speakers at recruiting meetings do more harm than good in becoming offensively personal. The Department concurs in this view and expresses the hope that the speakers show more discretion.

LONDON, Sept. 29.—The fiercest infantry fighting of the entire Franco-Flanders front is now going on west of Vimy in the region just north of Arras. The French are concentrating their attacks on the range of Vimy Heights, blocking the path to the important German railway centre and the base of Douai. This afternoon's official communique from the French War Office reported the capture of Hill No. 140, one of the important crests of the Vimy region dominating other hills where the Germans lie strongly entrenched.

If the position is maintained it will be possible for the French to begin a long distance bombardment of Douai. The official reports tended to confirm the impression that no more dashing victories in the Champagne region like the one of last Saturday are to be expected within the next few days. Though Paris claims further gains in the Champagne region, there is evidence that the Germans have stiffened their resistance there and the French communique mentions no newly captured positions on that front.

BERLIN, via Wireless, Sept. 29.—British and French troops, who are to aid the Serbians in defending themselves against the expected Austro-German offensive, have landed at Port of Kathrin, near Salonika, according to reports received here to-day.

Kills a Deer Having Glorious Glass Eye

SALINAS, Cal., Sept. 30.—Abalardo Cooper, while hunting back in the fastness of the San-Lucia range killed a four-point buck that had a glorious green glass eye in one of the sockets. Besides, the ears had been swallow-tailed, a common practice in marking the ears of cattle, and its tail had been cut off in some manner so that only a stub an inch long stuck out.

It is thought possibly the deer was a pet of one of the ranchers, and when the "running" season started the deer answered the call of its mates and beat it for the wilds.

TAG DAY FOR CHILDREN'S AID ON SAT. OCT. 16

Society's Funds Exhausted and Demands Are Greater Than Ever—Many Contributions Cut Off

ASSISTANCE IS NEEDED

Mrs. R. W. Travers, Hon. President of the Ladies' Auxiliary to the Children's Aid Society stated that Tag Day for the Shelter will be held on Saturday, October 16th. On account of diminished volunteer subscriptions during the past year the Children's Aid Society found it necessary to hold their annual meeting on Monday, two months earlier than usual. On August 31st the bank balance was $50, and the monthly expenses this year have been higher than for the corresponding months in 1914. In the period from Nov. 30th, 1914, to Aug. 31, 1915, forty-six children had been received at the Shelter, thirty-two were girls and twenty-four boys; 32 were from the city and 14 from the county. In addition to these thirty-four children were directly dealt with and placed in homes. Only two were sent to Industrial schools, thereby saving the city a considerable sum of money. The increased attendance and maintenance has been a heavier drain on the society and the war's demands has cut off practically all the private gifts which were received from individuals in other years. In short the society's bank account is at the zero mark and the work to be done is greater than ever. The fathers of a few of the children are at the front. Altogether 300 Children's Aid Society boys have enlisted. Five of them are from Peterborough and there may be others.

Uttered Cheque For Six Hundred

Two Buffalo Women Forged a Cheque—Apprehended in Niagara Falls

Mrs. Sadie Wallace and Mrs. Maud Nichols of Buffalo, were charged with forging a cheque for $600.00 in the name of Mr. Nathan McIlmoyle. They were remanded until Thursday afternoon at two o'clock. None of the details of the case were brought out in court to-day. It was stated that the two women were distant relatives of Mr McIlmoyle's and had recently been visiting here. The following reference to the case is from a Toronto paper:

Niagara Falls, Ont., Sept. 28.—Mrs. Sadie Wallace and Mrs. Maud Nichols, both of whom claim Buffalo as their home, were taken to Peterborough tonight to answer a charge of forging a cheque for $600. Nathan McIlmoyle, of Peterborough, made the complaint. They were arraigned before Magistrate Fraser here and turned over to the provincial police and taken to the Northern Ontario city for trial.

According to the provincial police, the women knew McIlmoyle, and uttered the cheque and forged his name to it. They succeeded in cashing it at Peterborough. They are both about 36 years old.

Mr. Renzetti Was Separated From $5.75

Nicholas Renzetti was unburdened of $5.75 in the police court this morning, the price of a dissipation last night. Disorderly conduct was also charged as the result of his efforts to beat up the first citizen he met, according to the police court story. The victim of the assault tried to get away but failed to succeed on his first attempt.

QUICK ACTION WANTED SEND IN YOUR DONATION

The Examiner has received a donation of a dollar to the Overseas Band Fund from a Peterborough woman whose husband is at the front with the 21st Battalion. There is a spirit we would like to see throughout the city. Most people would think they had done their duty in contributing a husband to the cause. And now you people who are staying at home we want to see some of the same spirit from you. The appeal of The Examiner for funds for the Overseas Band has been endorsed and approved by the Speakers' Patriotic League. They have formed a committee to canvass for funds. Don't wait to be canvassed. The band wants $1,500, and needs it at once. Don't keep them waiting. Send in your contributions to The Examiner. And act quickly.

MAJOR MILLS MAY COMMAND

Kingston Paper States That Peterboro' Officer With 2nd Battalion May Be the O. C. of the New Overseas Battalion

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

The following from the Kingston Standard, which has a representative at Barriefield military camp, and is usually well informed in military affairs, refers to Major Jos. Mills of the 57th regiment, who went to the front as quartermaster of the 2nd Battalion. It is the first intimation received here that the new battalion, whose headquarters are to be here, is to be commanded by him:

Gradually the 80th Battalion is filling up, and soon Lt.-Col. Ketcheson expects to have his battalion up to strength. Just as soon as this is accomplished, Colonel Hemming will call into existence another battalion, and it is said this battalion will be commanded by Lt.-Col. Mills of Peterborough. This officer went to the front with the first contingent as a Major in company with Major Bennett of Peterborough. The latter was killed in action and Lt.-Col. Mills was through some of the hardest fighting of the first contingent in the toughest part of the fighting in France and Flanders. His experience at the front will make him a good officer for the new battalion and should help the new battalion very much in securing recruits. Men like to serve under an officer who has seen service, especially in the present war. The new commanding officer is well known among the officers in Barriefield camp and these will be pleased to know that the Militia Department has selected Lt.-Col. Mills for the command of an overseas unit.

A supply of shirts, underclothing and putees for the local overseas company arrived this morning, and the latter at least will likely be issued to-morrow. This morning socks were issued to the men. All the equipment is now here with the exception of great coats.

The officers and men of the Overseas Company will be entertained at a supper in St. John's school house to-night.

Lieut. J. R. Munro and Sergts. Hartshorn and King are on recruiting duty at the Campbellford Fair to-day. They expect to bring a number of recruits back to the city with them to-night.

A brother of Pte. Tanner of Apsley, joined the local detachment last night.

Pte. Leo Tobin is among the latest recruits for the Peterborough detachment, after having undergone an operation to fit himself for active service. He is the fourth brother to join recently. Two brothers, Ptes. Morris and Joe Tobin are in the 59th Battalion and another brother, Pte. Austin Tobin, in No. 1 platoon of the local detachment.

There are five pairs of brothers in the local detachment and in three other cases father and son are also wearing the khaki. Bandsman Dyer has in fact two sons in the band with him.

Corp. H. Wood and Bandsman Wood of the local detachment are brothers of Corp. W. A. Wood, who is at the front with the 57th detachment in the second battalion.

Mr. Heber Nicholl, who has been on the staff of the Peterborough Utilities Office, left for Kingston to-day, where he enters on military training. Prior to his departure he was the recipient of a presentation by his fellow workers at the Utilities office. Mr. J. C. Anderson presented Mr. Nicholl with a case of pipes and a supply of tobacco, expressing the good wishes of all for a successful career and a safe return. Mr. Nicholl in a neat speech expressed his thanks and appreciation of the gift.

Sergt. Beaver, who was badly wounded at Festubert, and who was awarded a Distinguished Conduct Medal for conspicuous bravery, did not return home yesterday, as it has been reported on the streets. His parents have received no word yet as to his sailing.

Sub.-Lieut. Norman Geale, with the Royal Naval Air Service, now in England, has successfully passed his final test and will now be assigned to one of the Aviation Stations at the front. He is now a full-fledged war pilot.

PICKED UP ON ROADSIDE

Otonabee Farmer Overcome While on His Way to the City—Is Recovering

Mr. David Lawson, a farmer residing in Otonabee township, was picked up yesterday in a serious condition about two miles out of the city. Mr. Lawson left home with a load of grain. When within two miles of the city, Mr. Lawson was overcome by a weak spell. He fell off the waggon and some time later was found on the roadside in a serious condition. He was removed to a nearby house and medical aid summoned. Later he was removed to his home and to-day is reported to be somewhat better.

Spry and Thomas Williams, executors of the late Louis Spry, to require the defendants to discharge a mortgage against the late Louis Spry, before His Honour Judge Hayeke, judgment was given in favour of the plaintiffs, the defendants also having to pay the costs of the action.

Dr. Rogers Home To Buy Horses

Capt. T. W. Rogers, Veterinary Surgeon, arrived home from Europe yesterday, authorized to purchase horses in Canada for use at the front. He crossed on the Scandinavian, with Lieut. Ackerman, and expects to remain in this district for some time.

A Grand Reception To Lieut. Ackerman

CAPT. H. D. CUNNINGHAM, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robt. Cunningham, Stewart street, whose promotion is announced.

Peterborough Turned Out en masse Yesterday to Welcome Heroic Officer, the First Representative of the Peterborough Detachment to Return From the Firing Line

WHOLE CITY TOOK PART

No Peterborough citizen ever received a more hearty welcome home than was accorded Lieut. "Charlie" Ackerman of the 2nd Battalion on his arrival from the firing line in Europe yesterday afternoon. It was an outpouring of admiration, a spontaneous, whole-hearted, unmistakably sincere tribute not only to Lieut Ackerman, who has merited all the honours that his fellow citizens can accord him, but also to that gallant band of Peterborough boys who left their home town a short thirteen months ago to fight the battle of liberty on far away fields, and of whom the hero of yesterday's reception is the first representative to return. Many, alas, of those brave lads who left with Lieut. Ackerman have met a hero's death on the battlefield, some are prisoners in Germany, many others in hospital in England, and a few still bravely carrying on the struggle against German autocracy on the Flanders battle line. The gallant officer whom Peterborough honoured yesterday had been in the same battalion with those brave lads through the terrible struggle at Langemarck, and had come through safely, only to be stricken down a little later, when the Ontario boys were fighting at Givenchy.

Rose to the Occasion.

It was fitting, therefore, that Peterborough should take the first opportunity of showing how deeply she had been moved by the heroism of her citizen soldiers, a heroism that has been displayed no more effectively by any of her sons than by the recipient of yesterday's ovation. And Peterborough rose to the occasion—it was a whole city that paid tribute to Lieut. Ackerman yesterday. The demonstration of Monday night, big as it was, was surpassed in patriotic fervour.

It really seemed as if every citizen of Peterborough was on hand to pay tribute to the home coming hero. An hour before the arrival of the 3.40 train the crowd had begun to gather at the station and as the time drew near thousands had assembled. The station platform and the square at the rear were packed closely with people, while every point affording a view of the station had its quota. At the windows of the buildings close by, on the box cars on the sidings, on the roof of the Matthews-Blackwell factory, everywhere men and boys had gathered, while George street itself in the neighbourhood of the station was jammed with motor cars and carriages.

Scene at the Station.

Chief Thompson and a squad of police handled the crowd in most efficient style and there was no difficulty when the train pulled slowly into the station. From the crowd on the platform came a deafening roar of welcome as Lieut Ackerman, accompanied by his parents alighted from the train. The cheering was taken up by the thousands at the rear of the station and on George street. While the combined bands of the Overseas Battalion and the 57th boomed forth Rule Britannia, Lieut Ackerman and his parents were taken in charge by officers of the 57th Regiment and escorted to a waiting car, on each side of which was a guard from the Overseas Company. As the khaki clad figure of the young officer appeared the cheering redoubled, while flags were waved and automobiles clamoured a welcome.

The Parade.

The procession was quickly formed. As soon as Lieut Ackerman was seated in the car, in which also were his Worship Mayor Buller, Mr. and Mrs. B. E. Ackerman, and Lt.-Col. D. Walker of the 57th Regiment, the combined bands swung into the familiar strain of "Tipperary" and the triumphal parade to Central Park moved off. The brass bands led, followed by the Eagle band of the 57th, the officers of the 57th and other local officers and a detachment of the 57th Regiment wearing the red serge. Then came Peterborough's overseas lads in their khaki service uniform. The car carrying Lt. Ackerman was next in line, followed by other cars containing G. A. Gillespie, M.P.P., Mrs. S. T. Medd and children, Mr. H. M. Waddell, Mr. W. C. Ackerman, Mr.

MASS MEETING WILL BE HELD IN ARMOURIES SOON

Speakers' Patriotic League Will Keep Recruiting Enthusiasm Going—Hon. Geo. P. Graham to Be Invited to Speak

SMOKER FOR THE MEN

The Speakers' Patriotic League is determined to keep on with the good work of stimulating recruiting. In the midst of the campaign throughout Peterborough County the city itself is not to be forgotten and at an enthusiastic meeting of the League last night it was decided to hold a mass meeting in the Armories at an early date. Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P., was delegated to secure, if possible, the services of Hon. Geo. P. Graham, ex-Minister of Railways and Canals, and a magnetic, eloquent speaker, to address the meeting, and other speakers will also take part in the big gathering.

It was also decided to give a complimentary smoking concert to the men of the Peterborough Overseas Company, and to extend an invitation to the men of the city generally to be present. Lieut Ackerman will be invited to speak at this smoker and he will have an interesting story of conditions at the front to tell.

A hearty vote of thanks was passed to Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P., for his services in connection with the work of the League and the assistance he had extended in securing the recognition of Peterborough as a military centre.

A committee composed of Messrs. Peter Campbell, C. H. Pennefather, D. O'Connell, F. D. Kerr and Adjt. McKibbon was formed to take up the matter of entertainments for the Overseas Band and to secure the necessary funds.

Mr. R. B. Rogers, the President of the League, having resigned owing to his absence from the city, Mr. W. F. Chisholm was elected president and Mr. J. A. Aylmer elected 1st vice-president. Mr. M. J. O'Brien

All Are Helping.

Mr. Coldbard, the new President of the Patriotic Speakers' League, is getting to work right away. A meeting of the Executive was held this morning and it was decided that the function of the League is simply to get up open meetings and if necessary to furnish speakers. The Mayor and City Council have the municipal end of the campaign well in hand, and have given close attention to their duties in that and other respects. The officers of the 57th Regiment, it is needless to say, have been faithful and prompt in the discharge of their military obligations. Societies, large and small throughout the city are certainly doing their bit. All are helping and the aim of the League is to help also and there is no desire on its part to be given credit which in many cases belongs to other people. The League has a duty of its own to perform and is meeting with some success.

WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 29, 1915

LIGHTING CENTRAL PARK.

The demonstration in celebration of a victory held in Central Park on Monday night is, it is to be hoped, one of many. Such demonstrations to be most effective, should have the best possible stage setting; the best possible lighting effects. If Central Park is to be the culminating centre of such affairs it should be well lighted. A citizen calls attention to the fact that the light is entirely inadequate. While it may serve for ordinary purposes, it doesn't do for special occasions such as those referred to. Many people who go early to the park waiting for the big events, find themselves in the dark in more senses than one. They are simply groping, literally and otherwise. Preparations for emergent lighting might be easily made, with the extra lighting ready to turn on when required. We hope that we shall be able to make celebrating victories a habit, and we should be prepared to give them the best effect.

ACKERMAN'S WELCOME HOME.

The splendid welcome-home given yesterday to Lieut. Ackerman, was more than a mere demonstration of popular enthusiasm for the cause; it was recognition of the relations between us home-staying citizens and those who fight for us. It brought home to us with new emphasis our relations to our soldiers in the trenches. Lieut. Ackerman returning home bearing honourable scars and wounds, with the smoke and smell of battle almost literally on his garments, brought us nearer the trenches, and wonderful comradeship which he says trench life develops, and the heroism and self-sacrifice it brings into play.

His point of view brings out the contrasts of the soldier's mental make up.) As he was nearing the city and the demonstration that awaited him, he was most concerned with the dread of having to make a speech. The man, who had faced, without flinching, the peril of shot and shell, the overhead, underfoot and air filled danger that seethed about him, who had stood up to his work till he was smitten down with grievous wounds; the man that did all this, shook in his boots at the idea of being required to speak a few words to his old comrades at home, and his fellow-citizens, ready to acclaim every word he said, whether he stumbled in his talk like a school boy that had forgotten "his piece," or spouted eloquence like a Laurier or a Foster. He did not think that he was not only the son of Mr. and Mrs. B. F. Ackerman, but Charlie Ackerman, the Peterborough boy, reared and educated amongst us, the lad who had gone to the wars and had done his bit like a hero, and had come back in bits to recuperate for another turn of "sentry go" on the battle front.

While the people poured out their hearts yesterday in their splendid welcome to Lieut. Ackerman; while every cheer was from the heart; while every salutation of welcome was meant for Charlie Ackerman, the soldier back from the trenches, the splendid popular use of the first opportunity of the people to show their feeling towards our soldiers, showed that the occasion had a more far-reaching meaning. While it specifically embraced the hero of the hour, it also included in heart and mind, every Peterborough boy in the battle line, and showed that while they are far away fighting our battles, they are remembered at home, and that those who come back will get a similar welcome. We specialized on Charlie Ackerman—first, because he deserved it and because he was the first to come back and brave our heart-deep welcome, as he had braved the multiplied perils of war.

The lesson of the occasion appeals to thousands of our young men. There must have been something of shame-faced greeting coming from some young men in Charlie Ackerman's school set, and social set, who have been staying peacefully at home, as they saw their old chum come back covered with wounds and glory, while they had stayed at home, doing nothing at the time when the work of every able-bodied Canadian is called for. If anything were needed to complete the argument for enlisting, it should be the evidence of yesterday's welcome demonstration, that the hearts of the people, who are forced to stay at home, are with the Canadian soldiers in their work abroad, that their services are as heartily appreciated as they are urgently called for.

ENLISTING AND ENLISTING.

Australia, has not only shown Canada the way in serving the interests of the Empire by establishing a home navy, but she and New Zealand have shown us an example in the readiness and effectiveness of their means of making splendid response to the Empire's call for help. They have done better, in proportion to population, than Canada in the matter of recruiting; and this is perhaps not so much due to a higher spirit of patriotism, but to better methods of appeal. In Victoria the appeals for enlistment have been specially well met; and this is the statement of the methods adopted:

One central depot at most central spot in the city.

Depot open day and night till 10 o'clock.

Bands playing patriotic and martial music day and night at depot.

A great variety of good posters on central depot.

Stirring speeches by public men and soldiers in khaki from a raised platform at the entrance of the depot.

Personal persuasion by soldiers in uniform who move among the crowds of young men at the depot.

Women helpers at the depot, who provide refreshments and influence young men.

Depot to have wooden floor and made comfortable and attractive, with good arrangements for dealing rapidly with volunteers. (This was managed by a recruiting committee, not the defense department during the fortnight, and continued afterwards by the defense department.)

Post results of recruiting at depot several times day and night.

Bands to escort country recruits from station to depot.

Recruiting committees in all boroughs, shires and villages.

Country depots at chief centres.

Good posters on all railway stations in country and suburbs. ("Will they never come?" best of all.)

Dials of public clocks to show the words "Enlist now" night and day. (This was done with splendid effect at our railway stations.)

That these means to stimulate recruiting are good are shown by the results. There may be slackness of recruiting in some parts of Canada. The cause is not lack of men; nor lack of courage and patriotism. The need of more men has not been effectively enough driven home; the men have not been stimulated to think deeply over the meaning and causes of the war; over what victory or defeat, respectively, mean. Our methods have not enlisted their attention or we should have enlisted their persons. We need every argument, every appeal, every legitimate device, to drive the lesson of the duty and necessity of entering the service, brought home. When we get our young men to think right in the matter of enlisting, we have furnished the best condition of their acting right, in the matter of enlisting.

GERMANY'S DOOM.

Germany did not rush to war in August, 1914, in the expectation that Germany would need the help of Bulgaria in September, 1915. Germany designed a short and victorious war. The failure of that design is defeat for Germany. The prolongation of the war is defeat for Germany. Germany's doom is written in Germany's present need of Bulgaria's help.—Toronto Telegram.

THE DREADNOUGHT TRIUMPH.

After very full experiment on the grandest scale it is fairly certain that the balance is dipping once more against the submarine as a decisive factor in naval power. The reply to it is much more adequate than was supposed; it is far more vulnerable and far more limited in its effective power than was at one time realized. The Dreadnought has stood the test, and has emerged, on the whole triumphant. The new programme of the American Navy is the proof of it. Submarines are a dangerous nuisance and will continue to be so; they are not in themselves an assurance of sea power, and the evidence that they are likely to become so is dwindling.—London Daily News.

"IDIOTIC YANKEES."

Perhaps Captain von Papen (in writing of "these idiotic Yankees") has especially in mind Americans who show a tendency to accept at full face value the ever-recurring soft promises that come from Berlin. No more dangerous form of "idiocy" has appeared in this land. Unfortunately, it is a rather prevalent affliction. Time and again has this bland and childlike faith been shot to pieces by one of the Turpitz submarines, but with catlike tenacity it clings to life. Even now, despite the discreditable way in which Germany has, upon every possible occasion, shown by her deeds that her spoken words are of no more value than her written word, it keeps coming back. Captain von Papen is right. There are "idiotic Yankees."—New York World.

WHAT CAN UNITED STATES DO?

Lord Bryce's plea that Americans stop the slaughtering of Armenians by the Turks will find sympathetic ears. But what can we do? Our missionaries in Turkey cannot protect their own Armenian friends and pupils now. Ambassador Morgenthau's appeal on behalf of an endangered race is vain for the same reason. The Germans who pushed Turkey into this "holy war" should save the Armenians from extinction. No one else can do this now.—New York World.

SOME INTERESTING INFORMATION ABOUT QUEEN'S MILITARY HOSPITAL

Queen's Hospital, known officially as No. 5 Stationary Hospital (Queen's), left Kingston on May 5th. Upon arrival in England officers and men went into barracks at Shorncliffe for a week while the nurses were in London to complete their personal equipment. Soon the nurses were sent to France and distributed among the various hospitals to help there until Queen's Hospital was fully established. They rejoined the unit on the first of August.

Some of the staff were sent to hospitals in England for a few weeks' training. Lt.-Col. W. T. Connell spent some time in London purchasing laboratory equipment. Capt. Quigley went to France for experience in radiographic work and continued at this for two months.

About the first of June the staff and men took charge of a tent hospital at St. Martin's Plain, near Folkestone. Only venereal cases were admitted to this hospital, but the unit had also charge of the sick parades of several regiments in camp near by. The unit remained in charge of this work for two months, and during this time was able to perfect its organization, try out the men for their various duties, and at the same time, to render important and valuable service to the Imperial forces. About eight hundred patients were treated in the hospital and the daily sick parades averaged about one hundred and fifty per day. Lt.-Col. Etherington reports that the Unit was self-governing, and that up to the first of August no man in the unit had been before him for any breach of regulations. The work of the hospital for these two months was exceedingly trying and, in many respects disagreeable, but it was done well and thoroughly, and with great patience and diligence on the part of every member of the Unit. The Director-General of Medical Services visiting the hospital at the time it was handed over to another unit, expressed himself as entirely satisfied with the work done, and the results accomplished, and stated that in his opinion it was "the best unit that had come over." The reputation established in this short period no doubt influenced the War Office in determining to send the unit to the Dardanelles, and to double the capacity of the Hospital from 200 to 400 beds. Orders were received at the University to recruit four officers and forty men. This was done. The reinforcements left Kingston on June 21st, reaching England in time to join the unit and to leave with them on the first of August for the East. Cablegrams state that they arrived all well at Alexandria, on August 12th, and that the hospital is being established at Cairo.

Subscriptions for the purposes of the hospital now total over $13,000. This includes money for the equipment of cots to the number of 175. These have been named in accordance with the expressed wish of the donors. Messrs. A. Davis & Son, Limited, donated a motor ambulance; Mr. and Mrs. C. Birmingham, a Ford automobile; Mrs. John Herald, two wheel stretchers; Mr. and Mrs. White-side, one wheel stretcher. About fifty cases of supplies were taken with the unit. One hundred cases were sent from Toronto. Four shipments have been made from Kingston, amounting to about 175 cases. These are made up of donations received from many sources. All the supplies going from Kingston have been packed by the ladies of the Kingston Branch of the Red Cross and have been forwarded by the agency of the Canadian Red Cross.

Lt.-Col. A. E. Ross, M.P.P., Professor of Materia Medica and Jurisprudence, has been in command of No. 1 Field Ambulance of the Canadian Expeditionary Forces in France and with him are a number of graduates and students. Col. Ross, Capt. Stone, Capt. Duval and Capt. McGibbon have all been "mentioned in despatches for distinguished service." It has not been possible to do much for Col. Ross and his men, but a supply of Hypodermic Unit Doses has been sent. These are hypodermic doses ready to use at any moment. They have been invaluable for use in the dark, in moving ambulances, and at times when it is impossible to prepare the ordinary hypodermic. Eighteen hundred of these have been forwarded and more will be sent to keep Col. Ross supplied as required.

The thanks of the Faculty are tendered to all who have assisted the hospital in any way. Subscriptions of money or donations of hospital supplies will still be gratefully received. Supplies may be sent addressed to Medical Faculty, Kingston, and freight or express charges will be paid by the Faculty. The hospital is now entering upon a very active service, and there will be a constant heavy drain upon our resources.—J. C. Connell, Dean.

Mr. Spence's Brother Still In Hospital

Mr. C. A. G. Spence has received word that his brother, of the 48th Highlanders of Toronto, who was injured at Ypres on April 23rd, is still confined to the hospital and shows but little improvement. He has been invalided during the past five months.

HEARTY LAUGHTER CAUSED HIS DEATH

PATCHOGUE, L. I., Sept. 29.—During the dinner of the Jeffersonian Democratic Club at Avery's Hotel, on the beachat Blue Point, William P. Gardiner, a prominent resident of this place, strangely disappeared.

Mr. Gardiner laughed so immoderately at jokes that were passing about the table that he had to leave the table. He walked on the veranda and then the merrymakers forgot all about him.

When he had not returned to his home at nine o'clock this morning his wife made inquiries. His friends recalled that he had left the table but they had not seen him after that. A search was begun and his body was found in a flower bed on the hotel lawn.

Coroner E. S. Moore, of Bayshore, ordered an autopsy this afternoon and it was found that he had died of heart disease, that probably his heart was not strong enough to stand the strain of his continued and hearty laughing.

GUARDSMAN'S TRIBUTE TO THE DARE-DEVIL CANADIANS

Called the Men Who Wear the Maple Leaf "Crazy"—Vivid Tales of the Wounded—"Just Drop a Line to Mother" Said a Lad From Manitoba as He Lay Groaning on a Litter.

Sergt. W. E. Turley, who went at the first call, writes from France under date of Sept. 1 that he is now in the field hospital at Ballieaul with rheumatism, and it looks as though he may miss one or two trips to the trenches.

"Coming down the line," he writes, "I got in touch with a Guardsman. 'You Canadians,' said the Guardsman, are crazy. In cold print that looks like an insult. No one hearing the Guardman say it thought so.

"'I came up with the 7th division,' he went on, "the Fighting Seventh, to support you fellows at Ypres. My God! You didn't know what you were up against there. You couldn't have known or you wouldn't have stuck. We took some prisoners; they all said you were mad. One German major couldn't get over it. All the way down he was talking about Canadian madmen.

Berserk Spirit.

"'He said your officers were mad not to surrender. He said the men were mad to keep on fighting. He said he saw your trenches blown sky high. He said he watched great chunks chewed out of your lines—men, sandbags and earth flying in the air. He said he saw the German infantry come over and gobble you up—and then you kept going.

"'Then at Festubert: I saw you go up there. Shrapnel, machine guns, rifle fire, bullets and blood. You went at the double. Talk about the Ghurkas—they haven't got a look-in with you blokes. White Ghurkas, the Cold-streams called you; white devils, says I.'"

A Line to Mother.

The lad from Manitoba lay groaning on a litter. Half his hand had been shot away. "Sergeant," he said, "just drop a line to my mother, will you? Tell her I've got a 'blighty,' not a bad one; just enough to give me a rest for a day or two; that's all.

"Tell her I'm feeling fine (he could not help groaning just then). Tell her I'll be back in time to help her with the next harvest, anyhow, and tell her maybe I'll be home before then, in time for the ploughing."

The lad went to sleep soon after that; but he groaned in his sleep and sometimes muttered words which showed his mind was with the boys in the trenches, though his body lay in a hospital ten miles back of the firing line.

"Some Time, My Son."

One of the wounded had just returned to the front after seven days leave spent in England. He hadn't been there an hour when a shell burst and sent one of his comrades to face his Master; himself and another to "Blighte land."

"What a time! Gee whiz! What a time I had," he began, when asked for the story of his home-coming. "Ladies to wait on a fellow at Victoria Station, and"—his story tailed off into a murmured, "Some time, my son; some time."

Just here another wounded man began to sing, mock seriously, "I want to go home." Another wounded Tommy raised his head. "I ain't kiddin'" he said; "I blooming well want to go 'ome. There was five of us when the war started, Me and Tom and Jim was in South Africa—t'other two had done no soldierin' at all." He swallowed a something in his throat. "They've all gone now," he said, "an' I've got a good old blighty; yes, blime, I want to go 'ome.

"After Victoria Station, and the society ladies, and the coffee, and the sandwiches," said he who had hinted at the happiness of leave in England, "my mate and I went into a little place round the corner. We fills our glasses. I looks at him when we touched brims. 'Here's to the lads we left behind,' says I 'God bless 'em,' says he.

"Yes, we did not forget them. It was quite early in the day then. I said, 'They'll be 'standin' down' now. Here's 'oping they gets an issue of rum this morning,' says my mate, and looks at me with a kind of mist in his eye. 'Ain't it a h—ll of a way from London to the trenches?' says he. And I just nods.

Bit of "Orlright."

"Then we went out to get a taxi. Soon as we gets on the curb one comes up. "Ere y'are,' says the driver. 'Wot, O, Canadians, eh? 'Ow's the doys doin' now? They'm a little bit of orlright, from what I 'ears about 'em. Up you comes! Up you comes! I know where you wants to go. Millbank, ain't it?" (That's where the Canadian Pay and Record Office is). Come on, me old flower. I'll land you there in nex' to no time,' and he did.

"Course we got at the Pay and Records too early. Office hours are sacred institutions, it seems to me. We'd landed at Victoria Station at 2 o'clock in the morning. It was 10 o'clock before we got our pay. The office opened about 9, but it took the staff guys an hour to get us fixed up. They didn't seem to give a rap when my mate told 'em he'd missed his train for the north o' Scotland.

"You've got seven days to do it in," one says, "and you've got all London to look at while you're waitin'"

Red Tape.

"Seems to me they could arrange to have the Pay Office open when the train from Folkestone gets to London, and give the fellows out of the trenches a chance to make the most of their leave — but I suppose when a fellow gets a staff job he hates to get up before 8 o'clock in the morning.

"Some of 'em ought to take a trip out 'ere. They might be Lord Tommy Noddy when it comes to paying they'd be just common ordinary human beings if they ever reached the firing line."

What a Surprise.

He quit talking for a minute, during which he muttered, 'Soft nothings," while readjusting a blood-stained bandage: then: "Here's one thing that's going to surprise you if you ever go to London, Chum."

"What's that?" said I.

"Well," he said, "you remember 'ow the taxicab driver used to rob us when we were on the Plains?"

"I do," said I, with bitter memory.

"That's all over and done with now," said he. "They seem to respect us now, for they never think of charging more than the legal fare to a Canadian soldier on leave from the front."

And that fact, my friend (if you know the London taxicab driver) indicates that the Canucks have earned considerable trimmings of the laurel leaf variety.

WIRELESS TOWER WRECKS A TRAIN

MEDFORD, Mass., Sept. 29.—In a tremendous southwest gale which swept over the eastern portion of Massachusetts, leaving damage and ruin in its wake, the newly constructed 340 foot wireless tower on the Tufts College campus crashed down in front of an express passenger train, derailing the engine and halting all traffic on that section of the Boston and Maine Railroad for two hours.

In its fall the huge tower grazed a trolley car crowded with passengers and tore down trees, electric wires and telegraph poles. A group of sightseers crossing the campus narrowly escaped being crushed to death.

Although the rails for a distance of twenty feet were torn up when the crumpled mass of steel crushed against the head of the engine and derailed it, none of the passengers in the cars behind were seriously injured.

The storm which covered a wide area wrought havoc in all the territory through which it passed. Electric light and power wires for many miles were torn down, roofs were blown off and smaller structures were twisted from their foundations. Along the Boston and adjoining coasts many small crafts were blown ashore, and there were narrow escapes from death. The velocity of the wind at times reached 65 miles an hour.

War Notes

Russia is reported to be double-tracking the Trans-Siberian Railroad, for which purpose she is obtaining the steel rails from this country. She has also placed an order here for 100 locomotives, of which 35 have been completed. The locomotives are of the heaviest type and of new design. Those finished have been sent by way of Vladivostok and it is hoped that they may be available for transporting munitions from Archangle into Russia later in the Fall. Siberia too, has ordered fifteen American locomotives for early delivery.

In a party of Russian invalid prisoners being returned to Russia through Sweden there were twenty-five who had gone insane as a result of their sufferings, according to a Stockholm dispatch.

Of 48,000 male German students enrolled in Germany's twenty-two universities at the beginning of the war, 43,000 have gone to the front.

From Paris comes a report that the Emperor of Austria is seeking to dispose of the famous Hapsburg opal, the costliest jewel in his collection, which he regarded as a "hoo-doo" to the Hapsburg family. Its value is estimated at $250,000 and it weighs seventeen ounces. The report adds that a big jewelry firm of Holland is negotiating for the stone.

Ninety-three factories will be built as soon as possible in Italy for the manufacture of munitions, says a Turin report, to be converted after the war into laboratories for making chemicals and aniline dyes as a means of emancipating Italy from dependence for these products on Germany.

It is reported from Berlin that Ludwig Ganghofer, one of the most celebrated of German writers, has been severly wounded while visiting the trenches on the battle front, and that he has lost his left eye. In spite of old age, Ganghofer has been active as a war correspondent for months on both the western and eastern fronts. Among other things he has had interesting talks with Kaiser Wilhelm, which have been reprinted all over the world.

In her speech from the throne recently Queen Wilhelmina of Holland declared that "the firm determination of the Dutch Government to maintain our integrity and strictly observe the duties of neutrality meets with appreciation everywhere." She added that the army and navy of Holland were in readiness to protect national interests.

News that his father, mother, and two brothers had died "through war" was received a few days ago by Andrew A. Findlay of Scotland, trainer of the Los Angeles Club of the Pacific Baseball League.

Two thousand five hundred consumptive prisoners from the belligerent countries are to be sent to Switzerland for treatment, says a Geneva dispatch, in accordance with an arrangement between the Swiss Government and the nations at war. The British invalids are to get to the Oberland region, the French to Leysin, and the Germans to St. Moritz.

Speaking of the Kaiser's activity on the battle front, a Russian correspondent writes: "He issued an order that nothing must be disturbed on the scene of a big battle until he arrived—the field filled with dead, lines of trenches, damage to fortress, all must remain as it was at the end of the fight until the Kaiser himself appeared. He travels very swiftly. At Novo Georgievsk he arrived six hours after the capture of the fortress by the Germans."

SOME EFFECTS OF WAR IN LONDON

"There are no loafers in England to-day," said Harry Gordon Selfridge, the London Department store merchant, to a Chicago interviewer yesterday. He is now in the United States on a business trip and by the way before leaving London gave a splendid introduction and endorsation to Mr. F. R. Jones who was leaving London in the interest of the Overseas Club Tobacco Fund.

"Everywhere extravagance has ceased," Mr. Selfridge went on. "Sales of the more elaborate and costly textiles and articles of social use have nearly ceased. There is a great falling off in the demands made upon the seamstresses for new frocks because, first, there is a cessation of prosperous purchasing, and, secondly, because there is no call for new clothing.

"The social activities of the people have stopped. There are no hunting or shooting parties. Instead the social instinct has turned into new channels. The common interest in the war has democratized the people wonderfully. The so-called division by class is not apparent.

"Tea and garden parties of other days are now entertainments for soldiers, both those on home leave and the wounded.

"You can't describe what a beautiful thing is the national haste to care for, nurse, entertained and shower kindness on the wounded soldiers. People have a serious aspect when they come into the store or appear about the streets."

"Is that," he was asked, "because of apprehension as to the outcome of the war?"

"Oh, no, no, no, by no means," Mr. Selfridge said. "It is because every one is busy, has something to do. There are no loafers in England. There is no unemployment. There is no idleness among the social classes. Only in occasional slack seasons, as for the dressmaker or theatrical folk, is there idleness, and most of these people are turning their hands to other tasks.

"The texture of human fabric on the streets is changed. Women predominate and men in khaki are everywhere. But the motion of the street shows greatest change. It is not the slow gait of other days. London walks rapidly; it is going somewhere to do something now, and is quite like Chicago in that respect.

CIGARS FOR CONVICTS BLOCKING ROAD WORK

GREEN BAY, Wis., Sept. 29.—Convict labor on county highways was given a black eye when Superintendent C. W. Bowron called the men at work on the new Depere-Green Bay concrete highway back to the Green Bay reformatory.

The step was taken as the result of one of the men in charge of the road gang throwing a couple of cigars on the road. The cigars were later picked up by convicts.

CAUGHT MINK IN A SNAKE

Killing two birds with one stone is a feat of the feeble compartioned to the thrilling experience of Miss Cora Smith and Miss Margaret Aurand, who live near Water street, Huntingdon, Pa.

They were out picking berries near their homes to-day when they surprised a monster blacksnake—they say it measured eight feet—sunning itself near their path. The plucky farm girls clubbed the reptile to death. But, although they had killed it, still it wasn't dead!

Something was moving about uneasily in that snake's stomach, decided Miss Smith. She dragged the knife, and, using her back porch as an emergency operating room, proceeded. A long slit was made in the snake, and, low and behold, out popped a mink. Being in a stupor, it fell an easy victim to the club wieldings of the pretty country maids.

OSTEOPATH CRUEL REFEREE FINDS

NEW YORK, Sept 29.—Warren Leslie, as referee, has just filed a report in the Supreme Court recommending a separation for Mrs. Minnie H. Neilson from Theophilus Neilson, an osteopath. Finding that the husband makes from $500 to $1,200 a month from his business, Mr Leslie recommends that the wife receive $1,500 a year in alimony and that $10 a week additional be spent for the education of their daughter, Marguerite.

The Neilsons were married July 3, 1893, when he was a chiropodist and she a nurse. They have had six children, only two of whom, Marguerite and Francis, are living. Mrs. Neilson alleged extreme cruelty. The husband asserted that his wife was cruel to him, even threatening to kill him. The referee found that "the defendant was guilty of most of the charges set forth in the complaint."

ST. MICHAEL AND ALL ANGELS

A Great Ecclesiastical Festival is Celebrated This Day

Specially Written for the Examiner by Frank Russell

To day is a day celebrated throughout the whole holy Catholic Church be it Anglican, Greek or Roman. It is the Festival of St. Michael and All the Holy Angels, and is observed in all parts of the world.

The History of St. Michael.

Is more or less obscure. He appears to have a place five times in Holy Scripture, when he is always spoken of as a warlike character. These mentionings of the Arch-angel are to be found three times in the Book of the Prophet Daniel, where he is figured as fighting for the Jewish Church against the Persians, once by St. Jude in his Epistle as fighting with the devil as to the possession of the body of Moses; and once by St. John the Divine, in his Book of Revelation, as fighting at the head of his troops of angels against the dragon and his host.

St. Michael Holds a High Place.

At an early period of Church history, it was taught that St. Michael was employed by the Almighty God to command the loyal angels of His to overthrow Lucifer (the devil) and his rebellious associates—a belief which the poet Milton put into magnificent poetry. He was associated with Gabriel, Raphael, and others equally noted.

Who is St. Michael?

According to the Fathers, St. Michael was the cherub who stood at the gate of the Garden of Eden "to keep the way of the tree of life." (Genesis III., v. 24); also as the angel who stood in the way of the vacillating prophet Balaam, the angel who routed the Army of Sennacherib, in the Book of Kings.

Christian Tradition

Gives to St. Michael four offices: (1) To fight against Satan; (2) To rescue the souls of the faithful from the power of the devil, especially at the hour of death; (3) to be the champion of God's people, the Jews, in the Old Law, the Christians in the New Testament; (4) to call away from earth and bring men's souls into judgment.

The Ministry of Angels.

It will be noted that the mention of angels occurs throughout Holy Writ. Angels are held by the Church as capable of interceding for men; wherefore it is that a festival is appointed in their honour. Wheatley, an expositor of the Book of Common Prayer, as used in the Anglican Church, says that "the Feast of St. Michael and All Angels is observed that the people may know what blessings are derived from the ministry of angels."

It seems certain that from the earliest ages there was a prevalent notion that the affairs of men were much under the direction of angels—good or bad. Every human being is supposed to have one of the spiritual beings watching over him, aiming at his good, and ready to hear his call when in affliction, thus establishing a connection between the children of earth and something above and beyond the earth, leading men's minds away from the grossness of earthly pursuits and feelings into the regions of the beautiful and infinite.

In Art.

St. Michael is frequently represented as an angelic warrior, fully armed with helmet, sword and shield (the latter frequently bearing the Latin inscription Quis ut Deus—(who is like unto God)—standing over the dragon, whom he sometimes pierces with a lance. He also holds a pair of scales, in which he weighs the souls of the departed, or the Book of life, to show that he takes part in the Final Judgment.

He is Also Represented

As clad in armour, with a halo of glory round his head, a dart in his hand, trampling on the fallen Lucifer often depicted as a dragon. He is also furnished with a banner, hanging from a cross.

In England.

St. Michael's day, commonly known as Michaelmas Day, is one of the four quarterly terms on which rent is paid and tenancies commence or terminate. The other three quarter days are Lady day (the Feast of the Annunciation of the Blessed Virgin Mary) March 25th; Midsummer Day, (June 24th); the festival of the Nativity of St. John the Baptist; and Christmas Day, (Dec. 25th); the Festival of the nativity of our Blessed Saviour.

The Michaelmas Goose.

On this day (Michaelmas Day) there is, in the Old Country, a widely prevalent custom of eating a goose for dinner. At this period, the goose, being stubble fed and known as the 'green goose,' is in its primest condition and finds a place on most tables.

The Practice of Eating Goose

Comes to the English from early times. In Blount's Tenures it is mentioned that in the tenth year of the reign of King Edward the Fourth, that a certain John de la Hay, was assessed as rent for a parcel of demesne lands, "one goose fit for the lord's dinner" on the feast of St. Michael, the arch-angel. It is also said that Queen Elizabeth was eating her Michaelmas dinner of goose when the joyful tidings of the defeat of the Spanish Armada were communicated to her.

The Michaelmas goose is also mentioned, over and over again, in ancient poetry, e.g.

'September, when by custom (right divine)
Geese are ordained to bleed at Michael's shrine.'

The Cult of This Saint.

In France, St. Michael is the patron Saint of Mariners, his famous shrine being at Mont-Saint-Michel, close by the borders of Normandy and Brittany. In Germany, when that country became evangelized, St. Michael replaced, for the Christians, the pagan god, Wotan, to whom many mountains were sacred; hence the numerous mountain chapels of St. Michael to be found all over Germany. In England a large number of churches are dedicated to St. Michael and All Angels.

Arts and Crafts Column

In this column, conducted by Mr. Hughson Johnstone, painter and decorator, 510 College Street, will be answered on Wednesdays — questions of the kind given below, for the benefit of those who, in this period of stringency and enforced and suggested economy, might like doing their own work. Questions relating to painting, sign-writing, paperhanging, furniture polishing, and decorating may be sent to the Examiner, and will receive attention in due course.

A. R. D., Peterborough, Ont.—Would you through this column kindly give me a suggestion for decorating my sun room. It is a new house I have just had built and the walls have not been decorated yet. I would like something very dainty, but not too expensive. The windows are those small, diamond shaped panes. Thanking you in advance.

Ans.—A very dainty and distinctive sun room such as the one you describe, may be made by yourself with very little expense, and a little care and patience. As the walls are new and clean and the woodwork evidently freshly painted, I would suggest that you buy some new strapping about one and a quarter or one and a half (not wider) inches wide. The colors in the strapping will have to harmonize with the other colors in your room; such as your curtains, rugs, furniture, etc. Next layout all your wall by accurate measurement along the ceiling line in five or six inch spaces, which ever you think would look best, according to your wall space, now do the same along the base board. Then attach a blue chalk line near the ceiling on your mark, mark with a small brad awl and with the other end drawn tight and hold on the lower mark corresponding to the one on top; snap the line. Do this all around the room, then in the same manner lay out cross lines, when you will see a lattice effect. The character of which agrees with your diamond shaped windows. Make some corn starch paste, to which has been added a little alum and glucose or white sugar which has been disolved. Paste your paper using good heavy paste, well brushed out, fold it over in the usual way and cut your strapping straight. Then hang them directly along your chalk lines. When you will have a sun room the individuality and daintiness, whose duplicate would be hard to find.

A Bachelor:—I want to fill the grain and polish an oak floor I have had laid in my den, how can it be done by myself to look fair to middling?

Ans:—First clean off your floor thoroughly, then either buy one of the oak fillers sold by all paint dealers or make one yourself in the following way, mix well to-gether.

Whiting, 8 lbs; Plaster Paris, 2 lbs; Burnt Siema, dry, ½ an ounce; Raw linseed oil, 1 qt; Benzine, 1 pt; White shellac (optional), ½ a pt; apply this to the wood rubbing across the grain doing only a small portion at a time as it will harden otherwise before you can clean it off the surface, which must be done thoroughly, rubbing the filler well into the grain, allow this to stand 24 hours., then wax and polish in the usual way. The color can be altered by the addition of other dry colors than Burnt Siema if necessary.

Mr. T., Millbrook, Ont.:—Please tell me in your column how much paint I need to paint an ordinary kitchen floor? and how many coats does it take?

Ans:— (1) Impossible for me to give you a quantity unless I knew the size of the floor. A gallon of paint should cover about 350 square feet of average floor.

(2) If the floor is new first shellac all the knots and sappy wood, and give three coats at least, otherwise two coats should do.

A Reader, Peterborough, Ont:—I have had some shields made which I am going to cover with colored goods and across the shield will be ribbons with such names as Truth, Courage, Hope, etc., on them. Are there any particular colors that should go with certain words as symbolic of them?

Ans:—Yes, the following should be of assistance to you. Gold—is nobility, virtue, greatness. Silver—justice, purity, innocence. Red—courage. Blue—Fidelity, consistency, science. Green—mildness. Purple—royalty. Black—Danger.

West End:—Your inquiry was received to late for reply in this issue, will be attended to later.

PETERBOROUGH BOY IS PROMOTED

Capt. H. D. Cunningham Enlisted in the West and Has Since Gone to the Front

The numerous friends of Lieut. H. D. Cunningham, of Alameda, Saskatchewan, will be pleased to hear that he has been promoted to the rank of captain. This information was contained in a list of Canadian promotions, and again this week in a letter received from Captain Cunningham.

Captain Cunningham has been stationed at the Canadian Cavalry Depot, Shorncliff, Summerset Barracks, England.

Capt. H. D. Cunningham formerly resided in Peterborough. He is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Cunningham, 678 Stewart street. He has since gone to the front.

PETERBOROUGH SHOULD BE PROUD OF THE HEROISM OF HER OFFICERS AND MEN

"I Shall Remember That Charge of Our No. 1 Company Till My Dying Day and the Way the Men Followed Good Old Major Bennett to Their Death" Writes Capt. Garnet Greer in a Letter to the Progressive Club.

A member of the Peterborough Progressive Club has received the following interesting letter from Capt. Garnet Greer, M.D., son of Dr. Greer of this city, and who is with the First Canadian Contingent at the front, going to France as Medical Officer of the 2nd Battalion. The letter, which in part, is as follows, refers to a number of comforts that were forwarded by the Club for the use of the Peterborough boys now at the front:

In all I have received five bundles, including socks, tobacco, etc., from the Progressive Club. I presume though the first only was labelled I distributed the articles among the stretcher bearers of my battalion and some of the boys from home, and I know if you could see how appreciative the boys were it would make your hearts glad and fully repay the ladies for their work.

The work done by the women at home has been wonderful and had it not been for these comforts a lot of our men would have been much harder. This letter, written as it is at this time carries with it thoughts I cannot put on paper. Would to Heaven I could forget some of the scenes I have witnessed this past six months, but the one outstanding feature that must stand ... Peterborough people feel proud is the bravery and heroism that her officers and men with our division displayed at all times in the firing line, more especially during the especially trying circumstances of the second battle of Ypres from which we brought out so very few.

I shall remember that charge of our No. 1 Co. till my dying day and the way the men followed good old Major Bennett to their death. I cannot adequately express in writing the heroism of these men and of Major Bennett especially, but if I am spared to return to Canada some day I shall be able to tell you of the noble deeds of Peterborough's sons on that memorable occasion, as well as at other times before and since.

With many thanks for comforts sent in which the men joined heartily, as my previous letter explained, which I trust you have received ere this.

Give my kindest remembrances to all and heartfelt gratitude for the kindnesses bestowed.

Yours most sincerely,

Girl Wife, 17, Rides Freight Trains as Man

SAN BERNARDINO, Sept 29.—So that the story would arrive when she was at the home of relatives, Mrs. Bessie Wright, girl-wife of William Wright, of Sugar City, Col., dressed herself as a man and with her husband beat her way on freight trains until officers took the couple from a Salt Lake car here when it was discovered that the youthful tramp was a girl of seventeen. They were on their way to the home of Wright's mother, Mrs. M. L. Wright, of San Fernando.

"My husband was out of work and we had no money, and we simply had to get with his mother pretty soon," said the young woman, who had sacrificed beautiful locks of hair so she could pose as a boy. "We decided we would steal our way. I don't see that it made any difference to the railroad company, for we didn't have any money and couldn't get any to pay our fares, and we simply had to come.

"Nobody objected much to us riding on the freight trains. Only once a man discovered I wasn't a man and he insulted me. My husband knocked him down twice, good and hard, and he got up and ran. We lost several days on the road because I couldn't get on trains when they were moving. We had to get on when they were standing still, and sometimes men were watching and we couldn't do that.

"Really there was no other way for us to get to California. My father is dead and none of my relatives could spare us money."

The matron of the detention home furnished the young woman with feminine attire and the boy's mother wired transportation to San Fernando and as the police released them the couple will proceed to their destination at once.

PASTOR AS CHIEF OF POLICE TO END VICE

CHARLESTON, W. Va., Sept. 29.—The Rev. B. H. Shadduck, pastor of the Methodist Church, who has been the leading figure in the active campaign here, is to become chief of police in order to prove his assertion that he would be able to clean up the city of all vice with a quartet of police to assist him.

Mayor George E. Breece took him at his word, offered him the appointment for as long a time as the job will require, and the minister has accepted.

BRAVES GALE TO SAVE TWO YACHTS

BRISTOL, R.I., Sept. 29.—Braving the worst gale which has swept Narragansett Bay in years, Mr. Robert E. Tod, of the New York Yacht Club, put out in his yacht Katoura and with the aid of his crew rescued two big sloop yachts which had broken from their moorings and were being lashed to pieces in the breakers.

Scores of small sailing and motor craft were swamped by the giant combers which swept up the beach and ripped them from their moorings. The valuable racing yachts in the harbour were smashed about but by rapid work all were saved from serious damage, although time and again they were torn from their cables and mooring buoys.

Mr. Tod, when the sloop yachts Valmore, owned by Henry Pearce, of Providence, and the Pleione, owned by C. C. Rumrill, of Worcester, began to drift, put out in the Katoura and after hard work managed to reach them. It took more than an hour to get lines on board them and tow them into harbour. Neither was seriously damaged.

GIVES UP HIS WIFE AS TOO BEAUTIFUL

CHICAGO, Sept. 29.—Beautiful women are entitled to beautiful surroundings, As Senator James Hamilton Lewis once said: "The jewel must have its setting, the rose must have its perfume, the masterpiece must have its frame. The world must have its beautiful women, with their gowns and jewels and expensive hats and tidy shoes and soft attentions."

It is not known whether or not John F. Suits approves of Senator Lewis's political beliefs, but he gives his unqualified approval to the Senator's ideas about beautiful women and their settings.

His $100 Too Little.

Suits expressed this approval when he filed suits for divorce in the Circuit Court because, he says, Mrs. Suits is too beautiful to be the wife of a salaried clerk, and that is what Suits is.

Suits has come to realize, he says, after ten years of hard effort to support an extremely beautiful woman in the "correct setting" that it can't be done on $100 a month. Mrs. Suits made up her mind on that score two years ago, when she left her husband and decided to support herself on her musical talent. Suits struggled for two years to get enough money to entice his beautiful wife back again, but lately he give it up in despair. And now come the divorce proceedings.

The poor drug clerk was forced to realize that his salary was insufficient to support his charming wife in the way she deserved. He knew $1,200 a year was not enough to put his wife in the circles of society which her beauty warranted, so he finally made up his mind not to be a drag on her any longer. He decided to get a divorce, that she might be free to climb to the highest pinnacles of her ambition. He would hold her back no more.

"Too Late," She Says.

The bill declares Mrs. Suits is "fully cognizant of her charms both as a musician and a beauty and aspires to a superior station in life than that of the wife of a salaried clerk."

Mrs. Suits's "setting" is at 4229 Ellis avenue, where she is the only diamond in the tiara except her mother, who keeps house for her. She refused to expose her beauty to newspaper men, but when she was told through the door that her husband had said she was "too beautiful for matrimony," she replied sweetly:

"Yes, but why didn't he think so before this?"

BRITISH WOMAN'S WAR BURDEN A HEAVY ONE

SAN BARNARDINO, Cal., Sept 29.—When the war began in Europe Mrs. Nancy Brooks, seventy-two, lost her husband, an officer in the British army. Zeppelin attacks subsequently destroyed her home in England. She then traveled across the sea and a continent to spend her declining years with her son, who was last heard of on a ranch near here.

She found him incurably insane in the Patton State Hospital. The shock of the father's death and the refusal of the recruiting officers in Vancouver, B. C., to permit him to join the colors with the Canadian contingent had unbalanced his mind. New-found friends are endeavoring to obtain a home for the stricken widow.

Brilliant Act of Scotch V.C.

Corporal Angus, Wounded 40 Times, Saved an Officer

Brings Back Lieutenant Whom Germans were Trying to Kill as He Lay Wounded.

LONDON, Sept. 6.—The Daily Telegraph printed the following from the Edinburg correspondent:

"Corporal Angus, the first Scottish Territorial to win the V. C., returned to his home in Carluke, Lanarkshire, yesterday afternoon, and was accorded a great public reception, in which over 25,000 people took part. The normal population of Carluke is about 5,000, but in the three hours following noon there poured in from all parts of the Clyde Valley many thousands of persons to join in the welcome to the young soldier and the Carluke officer whom he rescued, in the neighborhood marked the reception.

"The deed for which Corporal Angus was awarded the coveted cross has been described by one who witnessed it as one of the most brilliant deeds that the world has ever seen. It was done at Givenchy on June 12. On the preceding night a small British party was sent out to destroy at British barricade. During the attack the Germans exploded a mine, and at dawn the next day it was seen that Lieutenant Martin of the eighteenth Highland Light Infantry, was lying at the foot of the German trench. The remainder of the party had returned safely after the mine explosion, and the men had crawled in all directions in the darkness searching without success for the missing officer, who had been wounded and half-buried in the earth thrown up by the bursting mine.

When daylight came Lieutenant Martin recovered consciousness and began to work clear of the mass of earth which was pinning him down. His movements were seen by a British sentry, and he must have been heard by the Germans at the same time. He was separated from the enemy by about ten feet of earth. They could not see him without looking over the parapet. Lieutenant Martin appealed to them for water, and they threw him, in response, an unlighted bomb.

Periscope Shot Away.

Soon a periscope was thrust up from the enemy trench, and it was promply shot to pieces. The sky was cloudless, and as the officer lay under the blaze of the sun the Germans repeatedly essayed by periscope to ascertain his exact position. The British shot away each periscope as soon as it appeared. Shortly afterwards a steel shield loophole, fenced in by sandbags, was raised by the enemy to make a rescue by day impossible. The whole of the company to which the young officer belonged volunteered to rush the German trench, and were promised permission to make the attempt as soon as dusk arrived to render it less suicidal.

"The best riflemen in the vicinity were concentrated in the British trench as the hours wore on, and so keenly and accurately did they command the enemy's position that it was impossible for a German head to appear over the parapet edge. About noon, however the position became unendurable to the anxious men of Lieutenant Martin's regiment, and out of many volunteers there was chosen for the desperate attempt at rescue a fellow-townsman of the officer—Corporal Angus.

"For half of the seventy yards which separated the trenches every square inch of the ground was swept by the enemy's fire, and there was no cover. Angus was warned that he was going to certain death. 'It does not matter much, Sir, whether sooner or later,' was the reply. He was allowed to go. Arrangements were made for heavy covering fire of rifles and machine guns, and at 2 o'clock in the afternoon Angus slipped over the British parapet, and flattened to the earth began to work his way toward the enemy trench.

Struggle Back to Safety.

No finer tribute to his training could have been given than the fact that he succeeded in reaching the side of the enemy. He was seen to reach the wounded officer and to speak to him. Then he raised him up, and placed a flask of brandy between his teeth, and the two sat at the base of the parapet for a moment prior to the struggle back to safety. The enemy had heard them moving by this time, but the British rifle fire kept all German heads under the parapet. So the enemy lobbed a bomb just over the parapet.

"There was an explosion, and a cloud of dust, and Angus and the wounded officer made their dash for safety, the corporal supporting and guiding his officer. The Germans threw more bombs as the two came into view, and there were more explosions all round them as they staggered along, while great pillars of dust were thrown up to their salvation. The enemy could not see them now to use their rifles, but they hailed bullets at random.

"Suddenly, out of a cloud of dust the two were seen to stumble, and they straggled toward the British lines, falling, rising and falling again. Lieutenant Martin managed to crawl in. Corporal Angus rising after having been wounded, was separated from the officer. Nearly a dozen bombs burst around him as he made for the trench at a different point, but he left the line of fire clear and the British rifles and machine guns poured in a tornado of bullets under cover of which he got in. He was wounded in four places. Lieutenant Martin had three wounds. Corporal Angus received the Victoria Cross at the hands of the King last week."

LIEUT. ACKERMAN RELATES SOME OF HIS EXPERIENCES AT THE FRONT

Tells of the Mortal Injury of Private Butler Whom They Had to Leave Behind—His Tunic and Revolver Are Souvenirs of His Share in the Work at Ypres and Givenchy

ENGAGEMENTS HE WAS THROUGH

Private J. G. Butler of the first Peterborough contingent spent his last minutes mortally wounded in a trench before the wood of Langemarck. Beside him was a wounded German. Along the trench, men of the fourth company were stationed thirty feet apart. That was the best showing they could make. They were only two platoons of the 4th Company of the 2nd Batalion, but thanks to their rapid fire training, they were temporarily able to hold the enemy Butler was of the 1st Company. His right shoulder and part of his side had been shot away in the battle, and he had been helped into this trench. It was a dangerous position, and the enemy was in force in the woods. When the order came to retire, his companions were unable to bring out their wounded. As it was, their withdrawal from this exposed trench was too precarious. So Butler, who was an Old Countryman, was left beside the wounded German. He was probably dead when the enemy advanced to the trench. The new occupants probably found Butler and the German dead beside each other. That was the end of one of the Peterborough Company. "We simply could not bring him out," Lieut. Ackerman observed. "We hadn't time, and besides he was too far gone."

The despatches told of the Langemarck wood being full of Germans. Lieut. Ackerman said that fact was exactly reported. From his trench he could plainly see them, at first through a periscope, and afterwards when in order to make observations, he had to dart his head at intervals above the trench. He had no idea how numerous they were, but they were in a very strong force. At this point in his narrative to an Examiner reporter on the Montreal express yesterday afternoon, Lt. Ackerman commenced to tell about throwing hand grenades, of their destructive explosive force. He mentioned that he was throwing them from that trench in the shade of the wood, and then changed the subject abruptly.

For goodness sake go easy in anything you say," he cautioned. His suspicion of the newspaperman was as deep as his concern about how he was going to pull through the fuss at the station. The fellows at the front get the papers, and can spot an exaggeration without a microscope.

His Wound and Souvenirs.

His tunic, his boots and revolver are all that is out of his first equipment. When Peterborough had the rumour that Lieut. Ackerman had been killed, it was even circulated at the front, and following the usual custom his kit was divided among new subalterns who had been just previously promoted, but had not complete equipments. He saved his revolver by giving it to his brother, Arthur, in the dugout where he received first aid. The heavy canvas case of the revolver has a wide gap where a bullet scored it on one of those days before Ypres. That same day a bullet punctured his waterbottle. The left sleeve of his tunic is gone and its left should and side are torn and stained with blood.

Many solicitous enquiries have been made as to the possibility of the usefulness of his arm being restored. The doctors who treated him at Rouen did not encourage him to expect to regain much of its pristine strength, but Lieut. Ackerman believes that it will gradually recover. One piece of shell went through the humerus of his left arm, the section between the elbow and the shoulder, splintering the bone. Another piece entered in the region of the collar bone, striking on a heavy piece of the brace down through the flesh almost catching an artery and finishing its flight close to the lung. There were other minor wounds on the left side. They are all healed now. His arm tendons enable him to move his fingers, but the principal muscle on the upper part of his arm has almost disappeared, at least that was the opinion one formed by feeling tht part of his arm. He always wrote with his left hand, but is now engaged in trying to learn to use the right. It is safe to say that he will miss the use of his arm in his musical efforts, now that he is back home with the piano and pipe organ inviting him.

Neuve Chapelle to Givenchy.

The question has often been asked by the folks at home, what did the Peterborough boys do after their big engagement. The Examiner sought an answer from Lieut. Ackerman, but he says he was with the 4th Company and had his own worries. In fact considerable time passed until he remembered that he had a brother with the Peterborough lads in A Company. However, new drafts came up to the 2nd Battalion after a few days, and of the original crowd Lt. Ackerman could only recollect Private Ross Kendry.

Lieutenant Ackerman was with the Canadians in their minor share at Neuve Chapelle about the middle of March, was through almost a week's activities at Ypres, was nearly at the Festubert Orchard, where Pte. Arthur Noble, another Peterborough boy, was injured, and on June 15th was himself wounded at Givenchy. In addition, his experiences included the regular routine of trench work.

Gathering of Oddfellows

On Thursday (to-morrow) night there will be a great gathering of all Oddfellows in Peterborough. It is the occasion of the first initial rally for 1915 1916 season.

Mr. R. Martin will giv a lengthy talk upon the new legislation enacted by the Grand Lodge at Stratford, last August.

As thee will be many new features brought up it will almost be necessary for every member of the Order, whether a member of Peterborough Lodge or just a visiting brother, to be present on that occasion.

Three hundred men are expected to be present. Ample seating accommodation will be made for all who come and every Oddfellow is welcome.

Villa Seeks A Haven in States

EL PASO, Texas, Sept. 29.—Carranza agents in El Paso informed the International News Service today that they obtained evidence that General Francisco Villa has made plans to seek refuge in the United States with great funds which he had acquired during his mastery of northern Mexico.

"Villa knows his cause is lost," said one, "And he is now trying to get into this country with millions of dollars which he has extorted from Americans and Mexicans alike."

The American government will be asked to prevent Villa bringing his alleged loot in to the United States. The Carranza agents claim to have a complete list of banks where Villa has been depositing funds for many months.

MERCHANT IS SHOT BY "BLACK HANDERS"

NEW YORK, Sept. 29.—After yeras of effort the Black Hand last night finally "got" Candileo Gatto, owner of several large tenements, and credited with a fortune of more than $500,000, while he was dealing out five cents worth of pickles in his little grocery store, at No. 6 Monroe street. A bullet went through his eyes, destroying his sight, and he may die.

Because of his fortune Gatto has been a particular mark for the Black Hand blackmailers, but he refused to pay. He was shot by two men in 1907, and, although badly wounded he held one man and broke his own hand beating him. The man escaped, however, and Gatto recovered, but that hand since was useless. Bombs have been exploded at his store and in the tenements he owns, doing much damage. Last December a bomb wrecked his store so badly he had to get a new stock.

Two men entered the shop last night and asked for five cents' worth of pickles. Gatto was bending over the pickle barrel when both men opened fire on him. He dropped to the floor quickly to avoid their bullets, but one struck his temple and went through both eye sockets. That was the only bullet that struck him The assassins ran out of the store and disappeared into a hallway, escaping.

Gatto was sent to Volunteer Hospital, where it was said he probably would die. Gatto, who is fifty-five years old, owns the tenement at No. 6 Monroe street, one at No. 66 Catherine street, where he lives; two in East Sixty-fourth street, two in Trenton, N. J., and a large farm in New Jersey. His two sons own automobiles and enjoy large incomes. Their father found his pleasure in the little grocery shop in which his fortune was founded.

ANNUAL BANQUET OF THE PENNANT CLUB

The Pennant Club of Murray street church celebrated their annual banquet last night in the supper room of the church, over fifty sitting down to the sumptuous and elaborate tables prepared by the young ladies of the church under the leadership of Miss Mary Scott. Chief Daniel Thompson made an excellent toast master, punctuating his introductions with witty references to the several toasts.

After the toast to the King had been drunk, Mr. Jos. Wearing proposed the toast of "Our Church," in a very able and learned manner, which was responded to by Rev. J. R. Webb, who drove home some facts relative to "Our Church" that will have telling effects.

Mr. Fred Richtington, of Brooklyn, N.Y., proposed the toast of "The Pennant Club," which was ably responded to by the president, Mr. Hughson Johnstone, who kept the audience in hearty laughter with his funny analogies with reference to cigarette smoking.

Mr. Jas. Lewis very gracefully and timidly proposed the toast to "The Ladies," which Mr. W. F. Moule responded to in true, lady-like fashion, eliciting hearty applause from the ladies who waited on table.

Mr. L. J. Pettit then introduced the speaker of the evening, Mr. W. R. Breyfogle, who gave the young men a talk that will long be remembered as it was brim full of human interest from beginning to end, and is sure to produce great good in those who were fortunate to hear him.

Mr. Walter Garbutt then moved a vote of thanks, seconded by Mr. F. Crawford, after which all rose and sang the National Anthem.

Is Confident That Peterboro' Will Respond To The Call For Men

Sergt. Geo. Hetherington, Writing From England Points Out the Need of More Men—Peterboro' Boys Are in Nearly Every Unit at Shorncliffe—"You Meet Them Everywhere" He Says.

Mr. W. Henry, Superintendent of the Children's Shelter, has received an interesting letter from Sergt. Geo. Hetherington, of Peterborough, with the 26th Battery of the Canadian Artillery Brigade, at Otterpool, Eng. Mr. Henry's son, Pte Harold Henry, is with the 39th Battalion, C.E.F., at Shorncliffe. Sergt. Hetherington writes:

I am taking the liberty of writing a few lines to you. You will probably remember me as a street car conductor. I was over to Caesar's Camp on Sunday and saw your boy with the 39th. I have known him a long time now but never saw him looking as well before as he is at present. You will be pleased to know that the 39th are not going to France for some time yet. Neither are we, I suppose. I am ready to go when the time comes. Nearly every unit here has men from Peterborough in it. You meet them wherever you go. Most of the second division are going over now, and they expect to have all that are going to France over by the end of the week. The 6th Brigade, camped across the road from us, are leaving tomorrow. It is from them that I see most of the present conditions. They have officers from the front lecturing and instructing them, and according to the last instruction they got today it is war to the knife. This officer claims he saw a Canadian sergeant nailed to a tree, and a little later two officers hung on trees.

I see by the papers Peterborough wants to have a battalion of their own. I don't like that very much. It would help recruiting a great deal but if that battalion got into action and came out with only about 50 or 60 men (which a good many others have done) what about Peterborough then? As it is the loss is pretty well scattered. From what we see here and from what wounded men (of which there are a great many) tell us, men are badly needed, and I think by the way the Home Guard was recruited in Peterborough that when the men realize they are needed they will come willingly enough.

There is a very marked difference in the way senior officers act towards the men in this country to what it is over there. I never saw anything there either that a soldier could complain of but here there seems to be a more sympathetic and indulgent way with them.

A minister who had been working at the front spoke to us last Sunday, a farewell sermon to most of the men in this country, and told us that no matter how many had tried to miss church here that over in France nearly everyone of them was very anxious to go as often as they could. He also said that there was a marked difference in the conduct, too.

Well this has been a rather long letter but has helped to pass a wet evening in the camp with a tent leaking. We are about 17 miles from Folkestone, the nearest place of any account we can go to, so we don't get out much. Your son is about two miles from there. All the Peterborough boys in the battery are feeling fine and happy—but we don't forget Peterborough, when we get a paper which isn't very often

J. H. Burnham, M.P., Mr. Coulthard and others. The Cadets of the Collegiate Institute, carrying rifles, and headed by their bugle band, were next in line. The employees of B. F. Ackrman and Co., J. J. Turner and Sons, and the Peterborough Canoe Company, all carrying flags, followed, and then the fire brigade with their wagons lavishly decorated. A long string of automobiles, the majority adorned with flags, came next.

Children in Line.

All along George street the 3,000 children of the Public and Separate schools lined the street, most of them carrying flags, which they waved vigorously as the hero of the day passed by. The children fell in at the rear of the procession as it passed them, adding to the length and spectacular features of the long parade. Although at the station it looked as if all the people in Peterborough were gathered there, as the procession made its triumphal way up George street, it was seen that there were thousands of people along the street. Cheer after cheer came from the crowd at different points on the line, while everywhere flags waved from windows and flag staffs in honour of Lieut. Ackerman.

During the march, "Tipperary," "We'll Never Let the Old Flag Fall" and "The Red, White and Blue" were played by the brass bands, while the bugle bands of the 57th Regiment and the Collegiate Cadets were heard to advantage.

At Central Park.

An enormous crowd gathered at Central Park for the addresses of welcome. As Lieut. Ackerman reached the band stand the band struck up the familiar regimental march, "The Lass O' Gowrie," which must have recalled to the young officer many pleasant memories of the days gone by.

Lieut.-Col. Walker acted as chairman for the occasion, and remarked that as soldiers for overseas were sent away with prayer, it was only fitting and right that prayers of thankfulness should mark their return. He therefore called upon the chaplain of the regiment, Major J. C. Davidson, to offer prayers. Following the singing of the Doxology, petitions of thanksgiving and for the protection of the soldiers and of the Empire, were said. This great concourse of people then recited the Lord's Prayer.

Col. Walker on behalf of the regiment of which the returning hero was an esteemed officer, extended him a hearty welcome in a brilliant speech. The occasion, he said, was one that would be remembered for all time by the smallest school child present. Peterborough was honouring one of her sons whose splendid spirit and bravery was something all might feel proud of. His career at the front had been followed with the greatest interest. In any other war but this, deeds such as Lieut. Ackerman had done would have won the Victoria Cross. His courageous spirit was a fitting example for all and should be an incentive for us all to do our duty in this crisis. Once more he tendered a hearty welcome to the brave officer, remarking that he knew Lieut. Ackerman, when sufficiently returned to health, would be as keen as ever to take his place on the firing line.

Mayor Buller.

His Worship Mayor Buller, in his usual happy manner, extended Lieut. Ackerman the freedom of the city. "Peterborough is proud of her soldier boys," he said, addressing himself to the gallant young officer, "and we are proud of you this day for the honour you have conferred upon this city in the performance of your duty, on behalf of the glorious cause for which the Empire and her Allies are fighting." Lieut. Ackerman had set a glorious example to young men, in the fulfillment of his duty, no matter with what danger it was set

Mr. G. A. Gillespie, M.P.P

Mr. G. A. Gillespie, M.P., as the representative of the Provincial Government, said he was glad to be present and join in the reception of one of the Empire's heroes, whom all delighted to honour. The large assembly present was a splendid tribute to the appreciation all citizens felt of the gallant services Lieut. Ackerman had given his country. Mr. Gillespie, too remarked that Peterborough's young men might well emulate the example of their's example and thus be worthy of such an enthusiastic reception as it was Lieut. Ackerman had to receive this day.

Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P.

Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P., said that what makes life worth living to a true man was his consciousness of having made an honest effort to do his duty. The greatness of this achievement was made the plainer by the regrettable fact that so much of life was sordid, self-seeking and mean. The man who stood ready to sacrifice his home-life, his pleasures, his comfort, and his life, in the service of others, must surely be the most God-like and heroic of men.

"Men like Capt. Ackerman not only defend their country," said Mr. Burnham, "they defend and uplift all humanity. If it were not for their exertions in battle the day would be lost, and if it were not for their example in life, humanity itself would be lost. It is of course natural that a character so self-sacrificing and so splendid should not be vain or vain-glorious. We find that unassuming modesty in Capt. Ackerman, which leaves his record and his example without a blemish. He and others have provided a standard for us to live by. They have shown to us all how much meaner it is to be merely money-grubbing and pocket-serving. The contrast is fatal. It is to these facts more than any other that we owe our reverence. Capt. Ackerman by his daring and his deeds has been welcomed by the heroes of all history to their deathless ranks. We in Peterborough tender him our respectful welcome home."

Lieut. Ackerman.

The cheering was redoubled when Lieut. Ackerman was called upon to speak. His brief address was marked by characteristic modesty. He thanked his fellow citizens, he said, most sincerely for the honour they had conferred upon him in the reception they had tendered him. He did not think he merited such a demonstration. Lieut. Ackerman reminded his hearers that there was much work to be done at the front yet and men were needed. "I will be home for three months anyway," he remarked by conclusion, "and I am going to do my best to get more recruits."

"God Save the King" brought the meeting to a close.

Another procession was then formed, and Lieut. Ackerman was escorted Overseas Band, the Peterborough Com-Overseas Band, the Petrborough Company and the 57th Regiment detachment.

CONVICTION WAS RECORDED AGAINST HAROLD LEGROW

Was Charged With Having Driven an Automobile at a Reckless Rate of Speed—Will Be Sentenced This Afternoon —The Evidence

Harold Legrow was convicted in the County Court this morning on a charge of having driven an automobile recklessly and at a rate of speed which was considered dangerous to the public, contrary to the Motor Vehicle Act. Sentence will be imposed this afternoon at 4 o'clock.

On Monday, July 26th last, Harold Grady, son of Mr. Frank Grady, was injured as a result of coming in violent contact with an automobile driven by Legrow. The latter was arrested and charged with reckless driving. He appeared before Police Magistrate Dumble and was committed for trial. Since that he has been out on bail. This morning he appeared before His Honour Judge Huycke. Crown Attorney Hatton conducted the prosecution and Mr. G. N. Gordon appeared for the accused.

The evidence produced this morning revealed some discrepancy as to the speed of the car and the distance traversed after the accident. The plan shown in court established the distance required to stop the car at fifty-one feet, six inches.

The Evidence.

Frank Grady, 55 Princess street, father of the child who was injured, was the first witness called. He gave evidence as to the nature of the injuries. The child still bears a scar an inch and a half long on his forehead.

The next witness called was Dr. James Gallivan, who attended the child following the accident. He did not think the accident would have any effect on the health of the child. The scar on the forehead would practically disappear.

Was An Eye-Witness.

George Willet, a neighbour, of Grady's, witnessed the accident which occurred at the intersection of Park and Romaine streets. He first saw the car when it was about three hundred feet away. He considered the car was travelling pretty fast. Three children came out of a nearby store. The Grady child was struck by the car and dragged some distance. Witness estimated the speed of the car at about twenty or twenty-five miles an hour. The child was picked up by Willet and subsequently removed to the hospital.

To Mr. G. N. Gordon, witness said the accident occurred directly on the crossing. He would not say that the speed of the car was reduced when it approached the crossing. He did not remember hearing the horn. The car which, according to witness was travelling east on Romaine street, was on the north side of the street when the boy was struck.

Corroborated Speed.

Joseph Brioux, storekeeper at the corner of Park and Romaine streets, said he saw the car approaching the crossing. He estimated the speed at twenty or twenty-five miles an hour.

Cross-examined by Mr. Gordon, witness said he did not think Romaine street was in any worse state of repair than Park street.

Charles Rayner, 171 Prince street, witnessed the accident. He thought the car was travelling a little faster than usual. He thought the car was travelling in the centre of the street. He did not hear the horn.

"The car was going fast," said Frank Carney, who was the next witness called. The speed was increased when it passed his place. Witness considered the car was travelling at a dangerous speed.

"What is an ordinary rate of speed?" inquired Mr. Gordon.

Witness— "Ten or twelve miles an hour."

Louis Feeley, a khaki clad member of the overseas forces, corroborated the evidence of the previous witnesses, together with a number of other witnesses.

Averaged Up Well.

Mr. C. R. Banks, gave expert testimony as to the probable speed of the car. He concluded that the car must have been going at least twenty-five miles an hour considering the child was carried fifty-one feet six inches.

To Mr. Gordon, witness did not think it would be safe to drive a car at a greater speed than twenty miles an hour over crossings such as are found on Romaine street. Witness said that accused had driven cars for him on different occasions. He averaged up pretty well with other drivers. Mr. Banks thought that a car travelling at fifteen miles an hour could be stopped within a length and a half to two lengths of itself.

The Defence.

Harold Legrow, aged nineteen and married, was the first witness called by the defence. Four adults and two children were in the car at the time of the accident. He started out on low gear and then threw it into high. He was travelling on the right side of Romaine street. The roadway was in bad condition. He saw the three children when he came up over the little hill near the Grand Trunk tracks. The two little girls ran across the street, while the Grady child ran part way across and hesitated. He used every available means to stop the car by shutting off the power and applying the brakes. He estimated the speed of the car at fifteen miles an hour. The street had been treated with a fresh application of road oil. He gave this as the reason for his inability to stop the car in a shorter distance. He sounded the horn.

MR. W. R. TRAVERS RE-ELECTED PRESIDENT OF CHILDREN'S AID

At the Annual Meeting of the Society on Monday Afternoon in the Bank of Montreal Chambers —Resume of the Past Year.

A general meeting of the Children's Aid Society of Peterborough was held in the Bank of Montreal Chambers on Monday afternoon, the President, Mr. R. W. Travers, was in the chair. Mr. Travers in a short address pointed out the pressing financial needs of the Society, that owing to the large number of children cared for in the shelter the average monthly expenditure of the Society was in the neighbourhood of $100, and that the principal source of revenue were small grants from the City and County and the proceeds of Tag Day. He further pointed out that owing to the many demands made upon the public for patriotic purposes that the Society was loth to make particular appeals, and that also for the same reason many donations formerly made by private individuals had not been made, but that the time had come when it was imperative that something should be done in the way of funds if the Society was to be continued. He further pointed out that a number of children whose fathers were at the front had received the care of the Society. Mr. Travers expressed his appreciation of the fact that five boys, wards or former wards of the Children's Aid Society, had enlisted and were serving King and country, and that the Society was doing its part in patriotic work. Mr. Travers made an urgent request that the members do their part to make the annual Tag Day a success.

The Treasurer's report was read by Mr. Horace Walkey showing a balance on hand on the 31st of August of $50. Mr. Walkey in a short speech remarked on the good work accomplished and that the expenditures were in every way economically accomplished, in which respect the Ladies' Auxiliary deserved a great deal of credit. Mr. Walkey further pointed out that the grants from the city and county should be very materially increased.

Warden Kindred in discussing the financial report, expressed his appreciation of the work of the society and offered his sympathetic support in the financial campaign.

The report was also discussed at some length by J. H. Burnham, M. P., Rev. Father Phelan, Chief Thompson and others.

$125 A MINUTE VALUE OF A KISS

NEW YORK, Sept. 29.—Is a kiss worth $125 a minute?

No kiss can possibly be worth that sum is the opinion of Louis J. Chayes, a dentist, who has just filed an appeal from the recent decision of a jury in the Supreme Court awarding $250 to miss Alice Bennett, eighteen years old.

Miss Bennett alleged in her action against Chayes seeking $10,000 that in September, 1913, when she was in the offices of Chayes, at School avenue and Eightieth street, by answering an advertisement. She had only begun her duties when he seized her one morning, she alleges, holding her tightly for two minutes, kissing her during that time continuously. Chayes vehemently denies all of the charges against him.

Lens and the Vimy Heights Are the Immediate Objective of the Great Attack Which is Still Being Pressed With the Greatest Vigour---German Lines Broken Through at Some Sectors and Still Holding at Other Points.

THOUSANDS OF MEN ARE GOING DOWN

PARIS, Sept. 30.—On a six-mile front extending from Loos south to Hill No. 140, the most intense struggle of the whole great battle of the Western front is being waged. Closely linked in a great combined attack the British and French are rolling up against the German lines breaking through at some sectors and being halted by stubborn resistance at others. The objectives are Lens, the Vimy Heights and the positions on which the drive on Douai must depend. Latest despatches received in Paris indicated the Champagne fighting is continuing with greatest fury, and no cession of the struggle at any point along the battle front. The Germans are attacking at several points in new efforts to draw off the Allied troops from Artois and Champagne to relieve the heavy pressure on their lines. Men are going down to slaughter by thousands in the bloody combat raging west of Lens. The Germans are counter-attacking battling desperately to hold their positions on this vitally important front. Every charge of the Anglo-French soldiers it met by a steady rush of bullets and rain of shrapnel. Bomb fighting before the enemy's wire entanglements in the past three days has been the most furious of the war.

44 DEAD IN ARDMORE BLAST

Oklahoma Residents May Seek to Recover $500,000 Damages From Railroad For Negligence

ARDMORE, Okla., Sept. 30.—The coroner's inquest on the dead and injured in the property damage suit to be brought against the railroad company by residents of Ardmore to get about placing responsibility for the terrific explosion of gasoline and dynamite which nearly wiped the town out of existence.

Russell Brown, City Attorney, issued a statement that officers of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad company may be held for criminal negligence and that suit action to the lives lost and the property damaged may be against the company.

Several witnesses have said that the tank car filled with gasoline had been leaking so badly that pools of it were formed between the rails. This car was stalled outside the yards, only fifty yards from a passenger station and in the heart of the business district of the city.

There it was leaking, its stream when Ira Woods, a car inspector, climbed to the top underneath the tank and opened it. At the same moment a column of flame shot up from the hole in the car and then followed a terrific explosion in which Woods, the car and everything within a block or two were blown to pieces.

The concussion from the explosion caused a huge supply of dynamite in a freight house half a block away to explode. It was the terrific force of this explosion that caused the principle havoc in the city. Every business house in Main street in the block between the passenger station and the Whittington Hotel was wrecked. The scattered gasoline started more than a score of fires. But the fires did not cause much damage as the concussion.

The police and volunteer physicians checked the lists of dead and injured tonight and found that forty-four persons were killed. It now believed that all bodies have been recovered. Of the hundreds injured none of whom are said to be dying, all except a few are said to be out of danger. Every window in the city was broken and the force of the two explosions that occurred. Many persons were also injured.

An official investigation of the disaster will be begun Thursday morning when the Coroner will preside at a special court of inquest. In the meantime the city has been placed under martial law and the militia has been ordered to the city to assist the police.

RUSSIANS ARE HOLDING FIRM AT ALL POINTS

Enemy Making No Impression From Riga to the Galicia ---Austrians Are Being Forced Towards Tolmino by New Attacks From the Italians.

PETROGRAD, Sept. 30.—The Germans are pounding at Russian defences from Riga to Galicia, but are being held back at every point.

PARIS, Sept. 30.—In contradiction of Berlin statements despatches from the front declare Allies have held all ground today and won more.

ATHENS, Sept. 30.—British and French troops stormed and captured another height to-day after a naval bombardment.

PARIS, Sept. 30.—Fighting is continuing with the greatest fury by the British and French. The German lines were broken through in some sectors, but are holding strong in others.

LONDON, Sept. 30.—Official reports confirmed the fact that no position won by the Allies has been retaken by the Germans.

ROME, Sept. 30.—The Italians are again active and the Austrians have been forced back towards Tolmino.

PETROGRAD, Sept. 30.—Riots in Moscow have been suppressed with five persons killed.

LONDON, Sept. 30.—The American ship Vincent was burned at sea according to despatches received here to-day. The crew was saved.

ATHENS, Sept. 30.—The Greek Chamber of Deputies to-day passed without debate a bill declaring a state of siege in Mamedonia, and voted thirty million dollars for the mobilization of Greek armies. Another bill authorizing the Government to extend relief to families of solders in case of war passed unanimously.

BUCHAREST, Sept. 30.—The demand for the immediate general mobilization of the Rumanian armies to meet the situation arising out of the Bulgarian mobilization was made on the Prime Minister to-day by sixty Rumanian statesmen headed by Take Joesco, the former Minister of the Interior. Their petition also called for energetic measures to stop the Austro-German propaganda which it was declared is dishonouring and imperilling Rumania.

PARIS, Sept. 30.—The latest reports from the battle front indicate that the French and British are now hammering the German third line of trenches with great effect in many places along the line. The violent storms raging from the Vosges to the North Sea and fog renders artillery firing and scouting difficult.

LONDON, Sept. 30.—Comment is being made on high terms of the Anglo-French loan which will be a handicap for further loans. The probability of the acceptance of the terms being refused is widely discussed.

LONDON, Sept. 30.—Sofia despatches say M. Balinoff, a strong supporter of the Allies, declined to form the new Bulgarian Cabinet. King Ferdinand insists that the retiring Cabinet reconsider its decision.

THE BLESSING OF MOTHERHOOD

Healthy Mothers and Children Make Happy Homes

Motherhood is woman's highest sphere in life. It is the fruition of her dearest hopes and greatest desires; yet thousands of noble women through some derangement have been denied this blessing.

In many homes once childless there are now children because of the fact that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound makes women normal, healthy, strong. This is evidenced by the following letters which are genuine and truthful:

London, Ont.—"I wish to thank you for the benefit I received by taking your famous medicine, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Before my baby was born I was so ill I could not stand long or walk any distance. I had to lie down nearly all the time. After I took your medicine I felt like a new woman. I could work from morning to night and was happy and well. I certainly think it relieves pain at childbirth and recommend it to every woman who is pregnant. You may use this testimonial if you like. It may help some other woman."—Mrs. FRANK CORBIN, 132 Adelaide St., London, Ont.

Brooklyn, N.Y.—"I was ailing all the time and did not know what the matter was. I wanted a baby but my health would not permit it. I was nervous, my side ached and I was all run down. I heard that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was good and took the medicine. I have now a beautiful baby and your Compound has helped me in every way."—Mrs. J. J. STEWART, 299 Humboldt St., Brooklyn, N.Y.

Not Personal.

"Ah, it is superb!" Mr. Chuquinquet, over the French aviator, as he watched through a powerful telescope the daily bird-like flights of Mr. Zed, arriving in England from Berlin with the shout "Bravo!" and waving his hat for me!"

He sailed along happily. Presently, sunlit chalky cliffs came into view. He kissed his hand in an ecstasy of joy. But, alas for his triumph! A sudden gust of wind upset his equilibrium, and his courage—to mention himself, he descended from the sublime to the ridiculous, and fell plump into the sea.

"Ze rescue! ze rescue!" he shrieked.

A holiday tripper jumped from a boat, and brought him into safety.

After the dabby flier had wrung his clothes, he grasped the hand of his rescuer, and cried:

"Ah, my preserver—my good preserver."

"Old 'ard, 'ev'nor, 'old 'ard!" retorted his benefactor, crossly. "You needn't chuff a fellow just 'cos 'e works in a jam factory!"

South Africa's Sharpshooters.

The average South African soldier, whether he is Boer or Briton will be wasted in North Western France unless his special skill is allowed full scope. The shooting of the British Army is far above the shooting of any Continental army, but we cannot compete with the "shots" of South Africa, who will hit a man's hand at 900 yards. Shooting is a recreation in South Africa in peace time; people go on the range in preference to the tennis court, and it is the favourite sport of the Boer. If a South African contingent were placed in one set of trenches it probably in this branch of war would be of little avail, and the suggestion has been put forward that the best use which could be made of the South Africans would be to distribute them as sharpshooters among the other troops.

A Terrible Moment.

The company promoter, who had served somewhere in France, was relating some of his alleged experiences.

"The shell came sailing through the air. Bang! It burst. Death stared me in the face. I thought of all I had ever done."

"You must have thought of a regular directory of shareholders," interrupted a listener.

His hand went swiftly to his breast pocket, and an instant later a small revolver flashed into view. It was then that I did another strange and incomprehensible thing. With the utmost coolness I stepped forward and wrested it from his hand. I say strange and incomprehensible for the reason that he was pointing it directly at my breast and yet I had not the slightest sensation of fear. He could have shot me like a dog. I never even thought of that.

"None of that!" I cried sharply. "Now, will you be good enough to get out of this house and stay out?"

"In seconds will call on you!"—

"And they will receive just what you have received. If you or any of your friends presume to trespass on the private of these grounds of mine I'll kick the whole lot of you into the Danube. Hawkes, either show or lead Count Tarnowsy to the gates. As for you, Mr. Schwartzmuller, I shall expect—"

But the last word in restorations had departed.

CHAPTER XVII.

I Am Forced Into Being a Hero.

SITTING alone in my study late in the afternoon smoking a solitary cigar of peace, I remembered Mr. Bangs, the lawyer, the man with the top button off. What had become of him? His presence, or, more accurately, his absence suddenly loomed up before me as the forerunner of an unwelcome invasion of my preserves. He was no doubt a sort of advance agent for the Titus family and its immediate connections.

Just as I was on the point of starting out to make inquiries concerning him there came to my ears the sound of tapping on the back of Red Ludwig's portrait.

I rushed over and rapped resoundingly upon Ludwig's podgy knee. The next instant there was a click, and then the secret door swung open, revealing the eager, concerned face of my neighbor.

"What has happened?" she cried.

I lifted her out of the frame. Her gaze fell upon the bandaged fist.

"Mr. Bangs spoke of a pistol. Don't tell me that he—he shot you?"

I held up my swollen hand rather proudly. It smelled of arnica.

"This wound was self-inflicted, my dear countess. I said, hurried to her expression of concern. "I had the exquisite pleasure—and pain—of knocking your former husband down."

"Oh, splendid!" she cried, her eyes gleaming with excitement. "Mr. Bangs was rather hazy about it, and he would not let me risk telephoning. You knocked Maris down?"

"Emphatically," said I.

She mused. "I think it is the first time it has ever happened to him. How—how did he like it?"

"It appeared to prostrate him."

She smiled understandingly. "I am glad you did it, Mr. Smart."

"If I remember correctly, you once said that he had struck you, countess."

Her face flushed. "Yes, on three separate occasions he struck me in the face with his open hand. I—I testified to that effect at the trial. Every one seemed to look upon it as a joke. He swore that they were—were love pats."

"I hope his lack of discrimination will not lead him to believe that I was delivering a love pat," said I grimly.

"Now tell me everything that happened," she said, seating herself in my big armchair. Her feet failed to touch the floor.

When I came to that part of the story where I accused Tarnowsy of duplicity in connection with the frescoes she betrayed intense excitement.

"Of course it was all a bluff on my part," I explained.

"But you were nearer the truth than you thought," she said, compressing her lips. After a moment she went on: "Count Hohendahl sold the originals over three years ago. I was here with Maris at the time of the transaction and when the paintings were removed. Maris acted as an intermediary in the deal. Hohendahl received $20,000 for the paintings, but they were worth it. I have reason to believe that Maris had a fourth of the amount for his commission. So, you see, you were right in your surmise."

"The infernal rascal! Where are the originals, countess?"

"They are in my father's villa at Newport," she said. "I intended speaking of this to you before, but I was afraid your pride would be hurt. Of course I should have spoken if it came to the point where you really considered having those forgeries restored."

"He will challenge you," she went on nervously. "He has fought three duels. He is not a physical coward." Her dark eyes were [illegible]

She stood for [illegible] was certain but I detected a challenge—a rather [illegible] defiance—in her eyes. "You will come to see me in New York, of course."

I shook my head. "I am afraid we are counting our chickens before they're hatched. One of the other of us may be in jail for the next few years."

"Nonsense!"

"But I'll come to see you in New York if you'll let me," I cried, trying to repair the damage I had done. "I was jesting when I spoke of jail."

Her brow was puckered in thought. "It has just occurred to me, my dear friend, that even if I do get safely away you will be left here to face the consequences. When it becomes known that you sheltered me the authorities may make it extremely uncomfortable for you."

"I'm not worrying about that."

"Just the same, it is something to worry about," she said seriously. "Now, here is what I have had in mind for a long time. Why don't you come with me when I leave? That will be the safest plan."

"You are not in earnest!"

"Assuredly. The plan is something like this: I am to be taken by slow stages overland to a small Mediterranean port. One of a half dozen American yachts now cruising the sea will be ready to pick me up. Doesn't it seem simple?"

"It seems simple enough," said I. "But there are a lot of 'ifs' between here and the little port you hope to reach. It will not be an easy matter to manage the successful flight of a party as large as yours will be."

"Oh," she cried, "I shall be quite alone, except for Rosemary and Blake—and Mr. Bangs."

"But your mother? You can't leave her here."

"You will have to smuggle her out of the castle a day or two in advance. It is all thought out, Mr. Smart."

"By Jove!" I exclaimed, with more irascibility than I intended to show. "If I succeed in doing all that is expected of me, I certainly will be entitled to more than an invitation to come and see you in New York."

She arose and laid her fingers upon my bandaged hand. The reckless light had died out of her eyes.

"I have thought that out, too, Mr. Smart," she said quietly. "And now, candidly. You will come up to see Mr. Bangs tonight?"

Confidently mystified by her remark, I said I would come, and then assisted her through the opening in the wall. She smiled back at me as the portrait swung into place.

* * * * * * * *

Bangs was a shrewd little English man. As I shook hands with him—using my left hand with a superfluous flourish—I glanced at the top of his waistcoat. There was no button missing.

"The countess sewed it on for me," he said drily, reading my thoughts.

I stayed late with them, discussing plans. Mrs. Titus and her sons were to enter the castle under cover of night, and I was to meet them in an automobile at a town some fifteen kilometers away where they would leave the train while their watchers were asleep, and bring them overland to Schloss Rothhofen. They would be accompanied by a single lady's maid and three bags. A chartered motor-boat would ramp them off in [illegible] Yacht. I hoped very much! As that was required of me was a willingness to address her as "mother" and her sons as "brothers." In case there were any questions asked.

It was on Tuesday. They were coming on Thursday, and the train reached the station mentioned at half past 12 at night. So you will see it was a [illegible] arrangement.

As we said good-night to the countess at the [illegible] of the depot the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Loyalty.

Loyalty to our country is good, but loyalty to our town and our neighbors is just as important, although rarer. To send money out of town for things that may be obtained from townsmen and neighbors is not loyal, and does a serious injury to our schools, churches, and other institutions supported by local taxation or philanthropy.

Support good roads, good churches and good schools. Spend your money at home. You will get just as good or better value, and can see what you buy before you pay for it, instead of after.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

The Country Mouse.

By TEMPLE BAILEY.

Copyright, 1911, by N. E. Daley.

Felicia packed into a little trunk her one white party dress, a pretty gray dinner gown, a half dozen shirt waists and an extra hat, and away she went to town to visit her cousin, Mary Barnes.

Mary's brother Roger met her at the station.

"Mary is planning no end of things for you," he told Felicia when he had settled her in the carriage. "She is going to give a luncheon and a tea and a theater party and a dance, and half of her friends are enlisted to make you have a good time. It will be a lively existence for you, little girl."

"Oh," Felicia leaned forward, "I shall love it! My greatest excitement for a year has been a church social or a sleigh ride, and I am longing for society."

"Mary spells society with a big 'S,'" Roger told her. "She is a slave to it, and she needs a rest. She is as thin as a wafer and as pale as paper."

"But think what a lovely time she has!" Felicia said, all pink and white with enthusiasm.

"Humph!" Roger said. "You don't know when you are well off, little Felicia."

But Felicia fell on Mary's neck when she reached the great stone mansion.

"I can stay two weeks," she said. "The school board gave me a vacation, and I am going to have the time of my life."

"Indeed you are," Mary said and carried her away to a delectable bedroom, where rose leaves drifted across the wall paper.

"I'll get into my kimono, and then we can talk," Felicia said joyously as she opened her little black bag. But Mary shook her head dubiously. "The girls are coming for luncheon in just a half hour. There are ten of them, and the table decorations are to be in pale pink, because that is your favorite color."

"What shall I wear?" Felicia asked. "I have a gray gown and a white one, and the white one is for evening."

"The gray will be all right with a ducky little knot of pink carnations and lilies of the valley. The florists are doing them that way now, and Roger can get you some."

Roger got the flowers, but the gray gown was not gorgeous, and beside Mary's shimmering chiffon creation Felicia felt depressingly shabby.

But the luncheon was exquisite, and the girls were friendly, and Felicia did not have much time to think of herself, for there was a tea on immediately after, and she was carried off by Mary and Roger, wearing a long and splendid wrap of Mary's, for her own simple tailor made jacket was out of the question.

"No one will notice that it is mine," Mary assured her, "in the crush," so Felicia, feeling very elegant, swept through the crowded rooms and talked as fast as she could to dozens of people and came out breathless.

"Wasn't it awful?" Roger asked her. "I shouldn't have gone a step if it hadn't been for you."

"It was delightful, Felicia gurgled—"the pretty women, the lights, the music, the ices and everything."

"Humph!" Roger grumbled, and Felicia made a little face at him and said, "You're an unsociable bear, Roger," and Roger said, "Oh, it's such a waste of good material for you to spend your time with such people when you might be talking to me, Felicia."

Felicia opened her eyes wide at that. "Do you like to talk to me, Roger?" she questioned, and Roger laughed and said, "Yes, but you don't deserve it." And Felicia, feeling very much flattered, leaned back in the carriage and peeped at Roger now and then, while Mary mapped out the programme for the next day.

"We will go to the hairdresser's early. Roger, don't you think Felicia will look dear with her hair marceled?"

"I think Felicia looks dear with her hair any way."

"O-o-o-h," murmured Felicia from her corner.

Mary laughed and went on.

"There are the Deering luncheon and three teas and the art exhibit and the Colburns' dinner and a box party after, and then the cotillion."

"Oh, stop!" Felicia pleaded, looking at her cousin with startled eyes. "Do you expect me to do all that in one day, Mary?"

"She does," Roger asserted, surveying his country cousin with melancholy eyes. "and where, oh, where in all that programme will you have a minute to spend with me?"

"I am not worrying about that," Felicia told him, dimpling, "but what am I going to wear, Mary? What am I going to wear?"

"There's your white dress," Mary said slowly.

"But I can't wear that one dress to a luncheon and three teas and a theater party and a dance. What are you going to wear, Mary?"

"My pale blue broadcloth will do for the luncheon and the tea and the view. Then I shall wear white lace to the dinner and the rest of the evening."

"When in all that rush will you find time to change?" was Roger's question.

Mary leaned back in the corner of the carriage. She was very pale, and there were dark circles around her eyes.

"Oh, I don't know; I don't know," she said. "Sometimes I feel as if I were on a treadmill and no one would let me stop."

Felicia looked at her with startled eyes.

"Why, I thought you liked it," she gasped.

Mary straightened up at that.

"Oh, when I get into it," she said, trying to speak lightly, "it's not so bad, but I have felt the strain this winter awfully."

Between rushes that night Roger caught Felicia for a moment alone in the library. "Mary is dreadfully blue," he told her. "She broke her engagement with Bob Carruth in the summer, and she hasn't seen him since, and she misses him."

"What did she break it for?" Felicia asked.

"He wanted her to go south with him and settle in a little town where he could practice medicine, and she wouldn't give up society, and now I think she regrets it."

"Oh," said little Felicia, "if I loved a man I would go to the end of the world with him!"

"Would you?" Roger asked.

"Yes."

"Well, I am leaving for Japan next week," ingratiatingly.

Felicia gazed at him with intense indignation for a moment; then she turned her back on him. "Billy!" she said

When Felicia went to bed that night she was so tired that she could not sleep. The next morning she was as pale as Mary. For a week the two girls dragged their engagements, finishing up on Saturday night with another cotillion.

"Felicia wore her white dress. It was mussed, and she knew that she was not looking her best, but she was so tired that she did not care. Roger had sent her a bunch of violets, and her dance card was filled with names but the fact gave her no satisfaction.

The fourth dance was Roger's.

"Enjoying it?" he asked briefly as he swung her out into the floor.

"Oh, I am so tired I shall drop," she said. "Can't I go home, Roger?"

She looked so like a little weary child that Roger laughed.

"Baby," he teased and then tenderly. "I'll hunt Mary up, and we will cut the rest of it."

In the carriage Mary collapsed. "I didn't dream I was so tired," she sobbed, with her head on Felicia's shoulder, and Roger, surveying the pair with twinkling eyes, said, "Let me prescribe."

"Well?" came back in muffled agreement.

"You pack your trunk, Mary," he planned, "and go home with Felicia It's lovely in the country now, and I'll come up and bring Bob Carruth with me."

Mary sat up, with her face ablaze.

"Bob Carruth?"

"Yes. I had a letter from him yesterday. He's coming up for a visit."

Faint pink tinged Mary's cheeks.

"Do you think he will want to see me, Roger?" she asked wistfully, and Roger said gently, "I know he will Mary."

So Felicia packed her little trunk and Mary packed a larger one, and away they went to the country, where the trees were crimson and gold and brown and where the air was like wine. And there Bob Carruth and Roger followed them.

"So she is really going to marry him and live in a country town," Roger commented, and he and Felicia followed Mary and her lover along a path that seemed to end in a golden sunset.

"Yes," Felicia said.

"And you are going to marry me and come and live in the city," Roger ventured.

"I haven't promised yet," said little Felicia. "I am afraid that some day I should be saying, 'Give me again my hollow tree, my crust of bread and liberty.'"

"You aren't afraid of anything of the kind," Roger told her. "You know we would live happy ever after."

"Oh, well, if you are so sure," said Felicia as she tucked a confiding hand through his arm and looked up at him with happy eyes, "I guess I shall have to say yes, Roger."

HAD DYSENTERY.

WAS VERY BAD WITH IT.

Mrs. G. A. McKnight, Mulvihill, Man., writes: "I have used Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry for nine years, and I would not be without it in the house. I was very bad with dysentery, a friend gave me a dose of 'Dr. Fowler's,' and told me to get a bottle right away, which I did, and it did me lots of good. My brother was bad too, and I told him to take it, and he was cured. I hope there are others who will get 'Dr. Fowler's' and keep it in the house, for it will surely save doctor's bills."

Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry has been on the market for the past 70 years, and has been used in thousands of Canadian homes during that time.

You do not experiment when you buy it. See that you get what you ask for, and if your dealer tries to palm off a substitute on you, insist on getting "Dr. Fowler's," or go where you can get it.

Totally Discouraged by Nervous Prostration

After Many Weeks of Doctoring a Friend Recommended Chases' Nerve Food and She Was Cured

There is nothing more discouraging than Nervous Prostration. Because of the exhausted condition of the nervous system, weakness and helplessness take possession of the body. The faculties of the mind as well as those of the body are affected and hope and courage disappear.

The patient, often appearing well, gets little sympathy, and few doctors understand diseases of the nerves well enough to treat nervous prostration intelligently. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is founded on the prescription of a great nerve specialist, and hence its wonderful success in curing ailments of this nature.

Mrs. Edith May Williams, Tilsonburg, Ont., R. R. 3, writes: "I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. I suffered for years with my nerves, and at one time I was confined to my bed with nervous prostration for several weeks. I cannot just explain my feelings, but I was weak and helpless and so discouraged and despondent that I thought I would lose my mind. I doctored with several doctors and received but little benefit. At last I became very much discouraged and thought I would never get better. A friend advised me to try Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and before I had finished the first box I knew that it was helping me. It took several boxes of the Nerve Food to make me well and I can truly say that it is a wonderful builder-up of the nervous system."

It is only wise to prevent such dreaded diseases as Nervous Prostration, Paralysis and Locomotor Ataxia by keeping the nervous system in good condition at all times. When you cannot sleep well, have headaches and indigestion, be warned of approaching dangers and restore the nervous system by using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. 50 cents a box, all dealers or Edmanson, Bates & Company, Limited, Toronto.

How Crisco is Made

Of one thing, and one thing only, Crisco is made. This is a selected portion of the very highest grade vegetable oil—the cream, you might call it.

CRISCO
For Frying For Shortening For Cake Making

No animal fat is added to "stiffen" this oil, as is done in the case of lard compounds.

The oil is put through the special Crisco process, by which pure hydrogen is added to it.

Then it is strained over and over again, until the least possible impurity is taken out.

This pure, sweet, creamy fat is as rich and as digestible as the best of creamery butter—and is much to be preferred to any "mixed" cooking fat.

OF GREAT HELP TO RUSSIA

Western Offensive Equivalent to Eliminating Three German Army of the War.

PETROGRAD, Sept. 28.—While the Russians have had a series of important tactical successes along almost the entire front, military authorities here lay stress upon the greater success of the French and English in their new campaign, calculating it to be equivalent to three German army corps thrown out of active service by Russia's western allies. The authorities expect that the Anglo-French initative will spoil the German plans both as regards Russia and Serbia.

The Russians have made gains of ground at several points which ordinarily would be regarded as considerable, but they are not allowing their attention to be distracted from Dvinsk, which the Germans continue to attack with energy and the Russians to defend with equal determination.

$4 SAVED TWO FINGERS

While at work in the St Lawrence Sugar Refinery, J. A. Besnard of 539 Craig Street, E., Montreal, had his hand badly crushed by the falling of an iron beam. Two fingers, particularly, were so badly crushed that the doctors, who were called to attend him, said they must be amputated.

Mr Besnard, however, had heard of the wonderful healing properties of Zam-Buk, and he refused to have the fingers taken off. Instead he had the fingers and the crushed hand dressed with Zam-Buk. This, he says stopped the bleeding, eased the pain, and put the wounded members on the way to recovery. Every day he had the Zam-Buk dressing replaced, and by the time he had used eight boxes of Zam-Buk the fingers were completely healed, he could use them as before the injury, and his hand, too, was quite restored.

Just think what this really meant! Think what it means to go through the world with a maimed hand, and minus two fingers! Practically a cripple! Ordinary treatment would have meant just that to Mr. Besnard. The Zam-Buk way saved him from it! By a trivial expenditure of $4 in Zam-Buk, the world's greatest balm, he saved himself from disablement for life!

Take the lesson to heart! If you have any injury, blood-poison, or any diseased tissue, old wound or suppurating sore, apply Zam-Buk. Don't waste time! Zam-Buk builds up new tissue, heals wounds, cuts burns and bruises, ends eczema and eruptions, heals cold cracks, cures piles, and is the most useful and most effective balm known to present-day science. All druggists and stores sell at 50c. box, or post free for price from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto. Refuse harmful imitations and substitutes. Get the real thing and see the name on the box before purchasing. Imitations and substitutes of Zam-Buk would not have saved Mr. Besnard's fingers, and will not save yours!

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

LADY'S SHIRT WAIST.

By Anabel Worthington.

In the model which we herewith illustrate we have a waist for real quilting. In the centre of the front there is a straight vest, closing in the centre, and to this is joined the collar, which is wide and pointed in front, but small and close to the neck in the back. The balance of the waist is altogether plain, with just a trifle of fullness at the waistline and with the material continuing over the hips and held down by a tape. The sleeves also are straight and plain and end in a buttoned cuff at the wrist.

Such a waist as this will give endless service to its owner and it can be made of cashmere, silk, challie, velveteen and of the innumerable embroidered fabrics which are used for blouses. Some of these materials are very delicate, being only a heavy weight chiffon with tiny buds, bowerets and other figures embroidered on them in colors, and these show to best advantage with just such a simple style as this. With them the vest can be of sheer organdie or tucked chiffon or of some very delicate silk and then, with the plainest of models, we have an extremely beautiful waist.

Equally effective will be a bodice of some of the new pin stripes, which would seem to have been made by the claws of a kitten drawn down the length of the colored fabric. These are combined with heavy poplin, silk and satin for the vest and also with tucked organdie.

The waist pattern, No. 7,318, is cut in sizes 34 to 44 inches bust measure. A medium size requires 2 yards of 27 inch material, with 1½ yards of 27 inch plain goods. In one material the waist will require 3 3-8 yards of 27 inch width.

This pattern can be obtained by sending 10 cents to the office of this paper.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c

Heavy Battles Are Raging Between Russians and Teutons

From Riga Down to Galicia the Armies Are Contesting Every Inch of the Ground—Von Hindenburg Has Resumed His Effort to Reach Dvinsk

LONDON, Sept. 29.—There has been no cessation of the heavy fighting on the Russian front. From Riga down to Galicia the armies are contesting every inch of the ground, and at least four separate battles are in progress. Field Marshal von Hindenburg has resumed his effort to reach Dvinsk, which town has been denied him so many times. The Germans announce that the Russians have been driven from two successive lines of trenches to the southwest of Dvinsk.

Except for Field Marshal von Mackensen, who is held in the Pripet marshes, all the Germans generals report advances, even General von Linsingen, whose army was rather roughly handled by the Russians in Volhynia, having with the aid of strong reinforcements, been able to take the offensive again. In addition to recapturing Lutsk, he has crossed the Styr River below that fortress.

In Galicia the Russian general, Ivanoff, is still holding the Austrians back, and is himself gaining ground.

Lifting the veil of mystery that has been concealing the fate of the Russian Vilna army—a force of at least 200,000 men—ever since Field Marshal von Hindenburg's army pierced the heart of the railroad system of Western Russia, the German War Office announces that Gen. von Eichhorn captured in the battle of Vilna 21,000 men and 70 officers, not including the figures previously reported. Supplementing this statement the Berlin report asserts the battle "led to the enemy's being routed across the Lake Marcz-Smorgon-Wischnew line."

The inevitable deduction from the above statement is that the Czar's Vilna army did escape the Teuton trap. Moreover, it escaped in the very nick of time, for as the German statement shows, the retreat was not made, as had been generally believed, over the southern line of the Vilna-Lida-Molodechno rail triangle, but over the northern road, in a desperate, successful race with the German army in immediate reach, and at times in partial control of that road.

Guard Corps Sent West.

A despatch from the Times from Petrograd says:

"The military critics here note the almost instantaneous relief on the Russian front between Dvinsk and Ostrunia on the resumption of the offensive by the allies in the west, which resulted in the withdrawal of the whole German guard corps from Vilna. They expect this transfer to be followed by others of a like character.

"The relief was very welcome as General von Eichhorn's thrust across the Russian communications in the region of Molodechno was still serious, and its danger to the Russian retreat not entirely ended.

"The Novoe Vlmya's military critic expresses the belief that the Germans will be obliged to withdraw a complete army from the front for the western frontier to repair the losses that already have sustained.

"Gen. Kuropatkin has been appointed to command an army corps."

WHAT WOULD YOU DO?

What would you do with a million
Suppose that you had it to spend?
Would you do all the good that you possibly could
And never forget an old friend?
Would you go to the people who suffer
And chase the gaunt wolf from their door?
Or would you shut up like a coward
And eagerly grasp to get more?

What would you do with a million
Tucked safely away in a bank?
Do you honestly think you would pain the town pink
And turn yourself into a tank?
Would you purchase a swift automobile
And turn the thing loose for a while?
Or would you drink water and travel
On foot to add more to your pile?

What would you do with a million
All counted to a cent in the tin?
Fixed up spick and span, you may have a plan
To loll back and chase away care
But all of your schemes might work elsewise
Get tangled and then go awry
But still you would like nothing better
I'll venture a dime, then to try.

It Sometimes Happens That Way.

She paused and looked about her. There was not much to look at, but Elise was a born rubber and her neck had to have exercise. After she had gazed awhile she ceased to pause and ambled along for half a block, then she stopped again and took another look.

Seeing no one, she raised her right foot, yanked off her toe slipper and shook a pebble from it. A look of relief spread over her face as she replaced the slipper and her jaws relaxed their rigidity. Her pearly little teeth once more played regularly upon the wad of rubber gum between them. She always wore rubber gum between her teeth because it matched so nicely with her rubber neck.

No, gentle reader, there was no hole in her hosiery.

"How true," said the sentimental youth, "that there is no place like home."

Farm and Dairy Market Report

TORONTO, September 29.—A big factor militating against the easy movement of trade is the high rate of exchange between the American continent and Great Britain. Very few seem to have any clear idea of just how the adverse rate of exchange came into effect, and the Farm and Dairy market man would not care to give a complete explanation in three columns. Briefly however, it is this: Due to the demand of Great Britain and other European countries for food and war munitions, our exports to them have greatly increased. Exports in international trade must be paid for either in goods or in gold. Britain has been unable to pay in goods, due partly to the fact that her factories are busy on war munitions but probably more to the protective tariffs of Canada and the United States. Consequently she had to ship gold. Financiers on this side began to fear that these large imports of gold would depreciate the value of a dollar and further imports were not looked on with favor, consequently with payments exceedingly difficult, English money, which simply means an English promise to pay, fell below par. It is now proposed to get around the difficulty by the United States making a great loan to Great Britain, which would serve to balance trade, and which would also be used in payment for British purchases in America.

In discussing the probable effect of this loan on the marketing of the wheat crop, the Canadian Farm expresses the fear that the United States financiers might insist as a condition of the loan that Great Britain relieve the United States of her surplus wheat crop. If such a condition were insisted upon, there would be only one safeguard for the Canadian wheat growers to remove the protective tariff on wheat coming into Canada and thus automatically open the United states market to Canadian wheat and thus give to Canadian farmers the full benefit of the loan.

A review of trade conditions during the week, shows some improvement in wholesale circles as fall orders have been coming in more freely. In the produce trade, we find grains fairly steady, mill feeds weaker, hay and straw steady, eggs stronger, dairy produce firm to stronger, and live stock at a lower level.

WHEAT.

Wheat has dropped a few cents, transportation difficulties and the rate of exchange both militating against quotations. Another factor counting strongly against price boosting is the estimated increase in the crop of the world of 500,000,000 bushels. Government reports so far to hand seem to bear out earlier large estimates and these too have tended to depress the market. These official reports, however, are generally regarded as too optimistic. No. 1 Northern, $1.03; No. 2, $1.01; prompt shipment, No. 1 Northern $1.03½; No. 2, $1.00½; Ontario wheat, 90c to 92c; slightly tough, 80c to 85c; sprouted or smutty, 70c to 85c.

COARSE GRAINS.

The coarse grain market is quiet with rye the one strong feature. In this grain the prices advanced from 75c to 78c to the present price of 85c a bushel. Other quotations are: Ontario oats, No. 2, 38c to 39c; No. 3, 36c to 38c; corn, 83½c, barley, malting, 52c to 54c; feed, 43c to 45c.

On the Montreal market, coarse grains are quoted as follows: Oats, extra, No. 1, feed, 43½c; local white, 41½c to 42½c; corn, 87½ to 88c; barley, malting, 66c to 67c; peas, $2.50 to $3.75.

MILL FEEDS.

Mill feeds have lost a dollar since our quotations of last week. Bran is now $24; shorts, $26; middlings, $27; feed flour $1.80; corn meal, 90-lb. sacks, $3.30 to $3.50; cottonseed meal, $36. Montreal quotes bran at $25; shorts, $27; middlings, $32 to $33, and monille, $30 to $34.

HAY AND STRAW.

Hay prices hold firmly, despite the very general belief of a week ago that quotations would have to come down. Government buyers operating in Eastern townships intend to offer 50c a ton less in October, but doubt is expressed as to their ability to fill orders at the lower figure. Prices have dropped on the other side of the line, but there is still some business being done. It must be remembered, too, that hay growers are not in the same position as grain growers. They are generally mixed farmers, not altogether dependent on the one crop, and can afford to wait until the market improves. Prices here are: Baled hay, No. 1, $15 to $16; No. 2, $13 to $14; baled straw, $6.50. At Montreal, No. 1 hay is quoted $18.25 to $19.50; No. 2, $17.50, No. 3, $15.50 to $16.

EGGS AND POULTRY.

The market has again reflected the growing scarcity of eggs in the country in an advance of two or three cents a dozen. Wholesale quotations here are: Eggs in cartons, 30c to 32c, extras, 28c to 30c; No. 1 straight new laid, 26c to 27c; No. 2, 19c to 20c. The price in the country is only 22c to 23c, but an advance may be expected in the near future.

Conditions in the egg trade at Montreal are similar. Fresh eggs are quoted 35c to 36c selected, 30c; No. 1 stock, 27c to 28c; No. 2, 24c.

Poultry are quoted here as follows: Old fowl, live, 11c; dressed, 13c to 18c; spring broilers, live, 15c to 16c; old turkeys, live, 13c to 17c; dressed, 17c to 23c; ducklings, live, 11c to 12c; dressed, 17c to 18c; turkeys, dressed, 21c to 22c.

HONEY.

Honey is quoted wholesale as follows: Buckwheat, barrels, 6 3-4c to 7c; tins, 7c; strained clover honey, 60-lb. tins, 10½c; 10-lb tins, 11c; 5-lb. tins, 11½c; comb honey, No. 1 doz., $2.40, No. 2, doz., $2.

FRUIT AND VEGETABLES.

Wholesale quotations: Apples, 11 qt. bkt. 15c to 25c; crabs, 25c; apples, No. 1, bbl., $3.30 to $4; bus., 81; grapes, 12 qt. bkt., 40c; pears, 11 qt. bkt., 25c to 45c; peaches, 11 qt. bkt. 20c to 40c; plums, bkt., 20c to 35c; potatoes, bag, 75c to 85c; onions, 75 lbs., $1.40; tomatoes, 25c to 40c; celery, doz., 25c to 30c.

DAIRY PRODUCE.

Values on butter have advanced steadily and at Montreal finest creamery has sold at 29½c to 30c. But strange to say, relates the Trade Bulletin, "some of our large dealers and purchasers openly state that they do not believe in the maintenance of present prices. Several thousand packages of butter have been bought locally for English account, the Old Country demand being strong, as Germany takes the bulk of the best butter from Denmark and Holland, and Australian butter will be late in arriving this year. On the Toronto market, fresh made creamery prints are quoted 29c to 30c; creamery solids, 27c to 28c, dairy prints, 25c to 26c and bakers', 23c to 25c.

An easier feeling seems to prevail in cheese circles, although there is little change in prices. A factor in weaker prices has been the excessively hot weather which makes the dealers suspicious of heated cheese, and some has already arrived on the market in this condition. The Trade Bulletin of Montreal gives the total export of the season up to Sept. 18th as 1,285,000 boxes compared with 952,517 boxes for the corresponding period in 1914, an increase of 332,545 boxes.

DAIRY BOARD SALES.

Woodstock, Sept. 22.—Nine factories boarded 1755 boxes, all colored. The highest bid of 14c was refused by the board. On the curb several lots changed hands at 14¾c.

Kingston, Sept. 23. 1125 cheese offered, all sold, 190 boxes of white at 14 4-16c, 935 boxes colored at 14 9-16c.

Vankleek Hill, Sept. 23. 725 white and 220 colored cheese boarded, the white selling at 14½c, colored at 14 5-8c.

Brockville, Sept. 23.—2892 colored and 1130 white. The sales were 1130 boxes at 14 5-8c, balance refused. Curb price, 14½c.

Iroquois, Sept. 24—600 white and 40 colored boarded. Price for colored 14 7-8c and for white 14c.

Cowansville, Que., Sept. 25—392 packages butter; six factories sold at 31c; three factories unsold.

St. Hyacinthe, Que., Sept. 25—350 cheese sold at 13½c; 275 packages butter at 31½c.

Belleville, Sept. 25—1705 white, 60 colored. White sold at 14 7-16c, 14½c and 14 9-16c. Colored at 14 7-16c.

LIVE STOCK.

The market is hardly so strong as week ago, quotations falling in the early part of the week, but showing decidedly more firmness towards the close. Statistically the position is a strong one. A comparison of live stock movements from The Globe is as follows:

"The movement of live stock to Toronto this week showed a steady increase in all classes over the week previous. Compared with the same period a year ago it was behind in all shipments with the exception of horses. About a hundred more cattle were on the market this week than for the previous week, but were nearly 3,000 behind the same week last year. Calves showed an increase of nearly a hundred and fifty, but were about fifty behind last year. The hog shipments are getting heavier; this week they were increased by over 1,400, but are still nearly a couple of thousand behind the same week last year. Sheep and lambs are 1,000 ahead of last week."

Stockers are in keener demand than for some weeks past. Local buyers have large needs, and buyers from the United States have been on the market. Quotations follow: Heavy choice steers, $7.50 to $7.90; handy choice steers, $7.15 to $7.90; butchers' cows to good, $5.90 to $6.75; heifers, $6.25 to $7.50; choice cows, $6 to $6.50; med to good, $5 to $6; butcher bulls, $4 to $6.50; feeders, $6.50 to $7.30; stockers, $5.25 to $7; canners and cutters, $3.75 to $5.

The lamb market has been steady all the week. Yearlings, light, $6.50 to $7.50; spring lambs, ewe, $9 to $9.50; cull lambs, $7 to $7.75; light ewes, $5.25 to $6; heavy sheep and bucks, $4.25 to $6.25; culls, $2 to $3.50.

Tired out men and run-down women certainly do "pick up" on

GREECE'S WARNING TO BULGARIA

FRENCH CAPTURE POSITIONS IN ENEMY'S SECOND LINE TRENCHES

Officially Announced That Fresh Progress Was Made in the Champagne District---Other Gains Registered at Other Points on the Line---Recently Captured Positions Are Being Heavily Bombarded by the Germans.

FRENCH CAVALRY CHARGED THE GUNS

LONDON, Sept. 30.—Major-Gen. George H. Thesaiger, of the South African war, and Lieut.-Gen. Sir Thompson Capper, a prominent figure in the Soudan campaign, were killed in a new offensive movement in France officially announced to-day.

LONDON, Sept. 30.—The War Office to-day sent the following telegram to all recruiting stations: "Falling off in recruiting recently causes Kitchener and the War Office the greatest concern."

If this message is not productive of results, the Government will consider at once Kitchener's plan of dividing the country into districts, and to call upon each district for a specified number of men. If the quota is not forthcoming by voluntary enlistment the Government should then resort to draft among men eligible for military service. If this is found inevitable it is probable the Government will limit itself at the start to the unmarried men between certain ages.

PARIS, Sept. 30.—A famous French commander, it became known here to-day, participated in the cavalry charge that drove the Germans from their guns in the Champagne region on Saturday and Sunday.

German prisoners declared that no other action along the Champagne front proved such a surprise as the appearance of French cavalry in the thick of the fighting. It had been generally believed that cavalry could not be used effectively along the Western front, and particularly in the hilly country of Champagne. In Paris, however, it was a matter of common knowledge that Gen. Joffre planned to use his cavalry to charge the enemy's guns. For many weeks the French cavalry have been in training in Southern France for just such an engagement.

COPENHAGEN, Sept. 30.—The small Danish schooner Vesst was sunk by a mine yesterday. A German destroyer rescued the crew.

PARIS, Sept. 30 (French Official)—French troops have occupied several new positions in the second line of German trenches west of Tahure in Champagne, it was officially announced this afternoon.

Other gains have been made through the German lines west of Navarin Farm. The Germans have opened a violent bombardment of positions recently captured by the French east of Souches, and southwest of Lens.

The artillery attack there is believed to be preliminary to a heavy counter-attack to the west on the French forces on Hill No. 140, captured from the Teutons in the brilliant fighting on Tuesday. South of Ripont in the Champagne in the region of Hill No. 185, the French troops have improved their positions slightly by capturing a German point of support.

Great squadrons of the Allies' aeroplanes have joined the attack. They are bombarding the German railway and supply stations, and attacking marching columns of enemy reserves being rushed up to the front. In the Champagne region, said to-day's communique, we have occupied several new points in the second line of the German trenches west of Tahure Heights, and also west of Navarin Farm. Our troops broke through the German positions and charged past the Navarin Farm, but were later forced to withdraw in the face of the enemy's heavy flanking artillery fire, specially directed at their flank.

BERLIN, via Wireless to London, Sept. 30.—German troops repulsed both wings of the British armies in the great battles of yesterday and last night in the region from Loos north of Ypres, it was officially announced to-day. The War Office, however, admits French gains in the fighting for the Vimy Heights, and temporary French successes in Champagne.

BERLIN, via Wireless, Sept. 30.—Prominent semi-official Berlin newspapers to-day warned the public not to minimize the importance of the great offensive movement of the Anglo-French, and admitted that the final decision is still in doubt.

The enemy's attacks thus far have nearly all failed, and their losses have been gigantic, the newspapers asserted, but the Anglo-French onslaughts have not yet ended.

The press, however, declares that the German nation is entitled to look forward with confidence and to trust to the heroic resistance of the German army in spite of the enemy's well organized and well prepared efforts.

BERLIN, via London, Sept. 30.—Russian troops are again in retreat southeast of Vilna, after attempting to block the German advance by counter-attacks, says the German War Office.

LONDON, Sept. 30.—The British Government has not found it necessary to take measures to relieve the American cotton interests since Great Britain declared cotton contraband, Sir Robert Cecil, Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs, declared in the House of Commons this afternoon. The Under-Secretary was asked if Great Britain had arranged to buy American cotton to maintain the prices. He replied that the Government did contemplate relief measures in the event of an abnormal depression of the American-plate relief measures in the event of an abnormal depression of the Americ- occurred.

OTTAWA, Sept. 30.—Gen. Sir Sam Hughes to-day wired Henry Ford, automobile magnate, courteously enquiring whether or not he had been correctly reported saying he would withdraw his funds from any financial institution participating in the loan to the Allies. It is understood that big automobile contracts are held pending Ford's reply.

OTTAWA, Sept. 30.—The First Canadian infantry brigade, including the First, Second, Third and Fourth battalions, will henceforth be commanded at the front by Lord Brook, an English officer, who was formerly stationed in Canada, and who was slated to command the Fourth Infantry Brigade, which included the Ontario battalions of the Second Contingent, namely, Eighteenth, Nineteenth, Twentieth and Twenty-first battalions. The Fourth Brigade will be commanded by Brigadier-General Garnet Hughes, who, according to unofficial cables, was to command the First Brigade. It is officially confirmed that Brig.-Gen. Mercer, formerly in command of the First Brigade is now to command the corps troops.

As chief of the Fourth Brigade General Garnet Hughes will be in a unique position of commanding his own uncle, Lt.-Col. W. S. Hughes, who is in command of the 21st Battalion.

ANNUAL SALVATION ARMY CONGRESS

The 33rd Annual Congress of the Salvation Army will be held in Toronto from October 12th to 19. There will be five huge gatherings in Massey Hall, including a memorial service for those lost on the Empress of Ireland, and "Somewhere in France," and the dedication of three motor ambulances for Red Cross work at the front, presented by the Army. A big musical festival will be held on Saturday, Oct. 16th. Special rates have been arranged, and it is expected that the Congress will witness an immense assemblage.

HOTEL BARS TO CLOSE AT 7 P.M. IT IS DECLARED

Provincial License Board is Recommending This Step to the Government and it May Go Through To-day

NO DISCRIMINATION

TORONTO, Sept. 30.—While no official announcement was issued yesterday, the Provincial License Board, it is understood, put the finishing touches upon its recommendation to the Government covering the reduction of the hours of sale in the hotels of the province, and the matter now awaits the approval of the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council, which will probably be given to-day.

The regulation drafted by the board, it is understood, provides for the closing of all hotels in the province at 7 o'clock, whether in military districts or not. This combines with the well known objection of the members of the board to making any discrimination as between soldiers and civilians, and makes it a broad "war measure" in every respect. It will probably be made effective shortly before the soldiers go into winter quarters.

In military circles it is stated that the action proposed by the board at present has no specific application to soldiers, and that the result of the discussion of measures designed to stop the sale of bottled liquor to soldiers will lead to action at a later date, based upon co-operation between the board and the military authorities. It is pointed out that Col. Logie was not in a position to speak for the military of the whole province, and that before the next step is taken, as it certainly will be taken, the whole matter will have to be discussed with the military authorities at Ottawa.

The general opinion is that the sale of bottled liquor to soldiers will be stopped by means of military orders which the License Board, following its custom in the past few months, would support. In other words, while the board would not make the distinction between soldier and civilian as regards the sale of bottled liquor, the licensee who ignored the stand taken by military headquarters and sold to soldiers would be vigorously dealt with.

Yesterday a deputation of licenseholders led by James Haverson, K.C., called upon Chairman Flavelle and Commissioner Dane with a general objection to any proposals to reduce the hours of sale, claiming that the hotelkeepers had no wish to sell to soldiers, and were quite willing to refuse to do.

MORE CEMENT WALKS IN NORTH MONAGHAN

On McGill and Brown Streets and Along the Boundary Road

North Monaghan's cement sidewalks are stretching out slowly but steadily. Since the middle of August concrete was laid around J. W. Byers' store a considerable distance on the boundary, and on Chamberlen street west. The construction gang, under Mr. D. Mahoney, has all but finished a walk on the south side of McGill street between Lock and Park streets. It is now proposed to return to the Byersville district and lay a walk on the west side of the boundary from Chamberlen street to Brown street, past Mr. Saunders' store and on the south side of Brown street from the boundary to High street. All this work is needed and was petitioned for. The walks are being laid inside the tree line and from all accounts the residents are greatly pleased that the municipality has provided these improvements.

French Military Authorities Have Ordered Swiss Frontier Closed to Traffic Which May Mean a New Movement

GERMAN LOSS GREAT

PARIS, Sept. 29.—To-day, the fifth day of the British and French offensive, the War Office announced that the German casualties in killed, wounded and prisoners are in excess of three army corps, 120,000. The amount of booty is enormous. Already 70 cannon have been dragged to the rear of the French lines with a mass of uncounted material, including rifles, machine guns, ammunition and supplies.

The battle continued to-day without respite. In Artois the French troops pressed forward step by step until they had reached the dominating height known as Hill 140, and the extensive orchards to the south. This hill, the highest in the vicinity, commands a great expanse of country to the north, and once the French guns are placed on its summit the German communications for miles around will be imperiled.

In Champagne the struggle continues no less furiously. French troops are gradually making their way up the Tahure heights and are closing in along the approaches to the village itself. These heights, like the crest of Hill 140 in Artois, will afford the French guns a clear sweep towards the German communications at the rear, and will make it possible to so embarrass the German operations that a continued defence of that region will be very difficult.

East of Tahure and north of Massiges, where the fighting yesterday was as bitter as at any other point on the entire front, the French made fresh gains to-day in spite of the furious resistance being offered by the Germans. There is no doubt of the character of this resistance. The Germans are doing the stiffest fighting yet displayed by them in the west.

Heavy Fighting at La Bassee.

Perhaps the heaviest fighting since the offensive began is now going on, for the British are attacking the German third line of defence south of La Bassee Canal, and the Germans have brought up reinforcements against both the British and French, and are making every effort to retrieve the lost ground. Belgium, despatches from Holland say,, has been denuded of troops, while German detachments are even being removed from the eastern front to meet the greatest effort made in the west since the armies took up their present positions from Belgium to Switzerland.

The Germans are trying to divert the allies by a heavy artillery bombardment north and south of the Aisne, but, plans having been made by Gen. Joffre, the French are striking with all the force at their command at the points selected. The report that the German Emperor has arrived at the Western front is confirmed, and he has already dismissed some of his generals for allowing their lines to be pressed back to almost the breaking point.

New Move on Tapis.

There is a strong likelihood that some new operation of great importance is about to be launched. Such at least would seem to be the case from the fact that the military authorities have ordered the Swiss frontier closed to all traffic. In addition, telegrams to certain foreign countries can be filed only subject to a delay of not more than 48 hours. The War Office made this announcement today in a supplementary statement to the public, which was as follows: "On demand of the military authorities the frontier between France and Switzerland is now closed to all travellers wishing to pass into Switzerland. The delivery of letters, telegrams and parcel post matter, including any destined to prisoners of war passing by way of Switzerland, also is suspended. In addition, telegrams for destination in certain foreign countries may be subjected to a delay which will not exceed 48 hours."

$100 FOR BAND FUND

Mr. T. F. Matthews Makes Generous Donation to the Fund—Other Citizens Are Asked to Fall in Line

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

The Examiner acknowledges with pleasure the receipt of a cheque for $100 from Mr. T. F. Matthews for the Overseas Band Fund. It seems scarcely necessary to say that ever since the war broke out Mr. Matthews has splendidly and generously assisted every patriotic movement, and it is no surprise to find him once more in the forefront supporting the meritorious enterprise for which the Examiner is appealing just now. The members of the band will be deeply grateful to Mr. Matthews. The public is once again reminded of the fund. A committee from the Speakers' Patriotic League is to canvass the citizens for funds. In the meantime the Examiner will take charge of all donations. A number of the citizens have kindly contributed to the Band Fund. Among them was Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P.

To-day the officers, non-commissioned officers and men of the Peterborough Overseas Company are taking up a collection among themselves to contribute to the Band Fund, setting the example for the city generally.

The local overseas band and the physical drill squad are in good shape for the Millbrook Fair to-morrow.

To-day a guard was mounted at the armouries in charge of Corp. Jack Knowles. A guard will be continually on duty from now.

Several recruits were brought from Campbellford last night by Lieut. Munro who, with Sergts. Hartshorn and King, were on recruiting duty at the Campbellford Fair. One of them was a snare drummer, who will be attached to the band.

Who says the local overseas detachment is not a family affair? Yesterday the Examiner mentioned that there were five pairs of brothers in the ranks. The number has now increased to seven. Sidney Ecobichon, brother of Pte. Percy Ecobichon, having been taken on the strength yesterday, while the Hall brothers of Buckhorn reported for duty this morning. In addition, there are five men in the Company who had brothers enlisted in the 57th detachment in the first Canadian contingent.

A squad from the local company was detailed yesterday afternoon to decorate Victoria Hall in preparation for the Soldiers' Wives and Mothers' Club concert to-night. And the lads in khaki made a good job of their work.

Five members of the Peterborough detachment have active service medals: Sergt.-Major Miller, Sergt. Oxley, Sergt. Jackson, Pte. F. Foster and Pte. G. Jary. Two others, Band-Sergeant Naples and Bandsman W. Dyer, Sr., have the long-service medal.

It is the hope of all local military men that Lieut. Chas. Ackerman, if he is able to go back to the front, be attached to the new battalion that will have its headquarters at Peterborough.

If the report is true that the Canadian Artillery is in the thick of the fighting in France, the 22nd Battery, of which Captain Fee of Peterborough is second in command, has had its first brush with the enemy.

The disposition of troops in this district, as announced, does not please the Kingston people. Surely they should be satisfied, after having the 21st Battalion and the 22nd Battery last winter, thousands of troops at Barriefield all summer, and the 59th Battalion and three batteries of artillery to winter there. And it is doubtful, in spite of all the enthusiasm that should pervade the divisional headquarters whether Kingston has contributed as well to the overseas forces as has Peterborough.

It is officially announced that during the five weeks, ending Sept. 11, 20,000 recruits were enlisted in Canada. In the same period Peterborough raised 300 men for overseas service, which means that out of every 200 men recruited in the whole of Canada for the period mentioned, three were enlisted in Peterborough. Had the enlistment rate been as high all through the country as it was in Peterborough 120,000 recruits would have been secured, basing the estimate on a comparison of population. In other words the number of recruits secured in Peterborough was six times as great as the average for Canada during the five weeks under consideration.

GREECE DETERMINED NOT TO WAIT LONG BULGARIA'S DECISION

CANADA SHOULD HAVE 300,000 MEN UNDER ARMS NOW

Leader of Ontario Opposition in Stirring Speech Advocates Doubling the Number of Recruits From This Country

NOT DOING DUTY

Examiner Special:

TORONTO, Sept. 30.—At a recruiting meeting held in front of the City Hall to-day, Mr. N. W. Rowell, leader of the Ontario Liberal Opposition, urged Canada immediately to offer to double her contribution of recruits and bring the number up to 300,000.

"You can say to the government of the Dominion of Canada, you will voice the sentiment of the people, if instead of three army corps you have six or seven at the earliest possible date," he said. Mr. Rowell's suggestion was greeted with tremendous applause. In a stirring speech he showed what the Dominion was doing for recruiting. Of the total population about two per cent. had volunteered their services. He showed that Great Britain had given eight per cent. of her population; South Africa four per cent; New Zealand three per cent., and Australia two and one half per cent.

"Of all the self-governing Dominions, the most populous and wealthiest and the nearest the mother country, has given two per cent." he declared. "I cannot think we are doing our duty when we are not doing as well as the Old Country, South Africa, New Zealand and Australia. I think the courage and patriotism of Canada is just as great as that of the other Dominions, but we are not coming forward."

Canada's democracy meant just as much as that of the Old Country, he declared. If we were doing our duty, having regard to our population, we would now have 300,000 men under arms.

TRAIN KILLS BUCK DEAR

Fine Big Animal Supposed to Have Escaped From the Rockefeller Estate.

TARRYTOWN, N. Y., Sept. 30.—A fine big buck dear was killed by an express on the New York Central Railroad just north of the Ardsley station. Some one telephoned to Captain Hempstead, station agent, that a man had been killed, and when he arrived at the spot he found the deer. It is thought that the deer had been to the river to get a drink and was returning across the tracks when hit.

It is supposed that the deer is one that escaped from John D. Rockefeller's estate. At any rate, a venison dinner will be served at the Ardsley Club.

NASTY JOB IN HAYATI

U. S. Realizing That it Has Serious Campaign to Handle.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 30.—The killing of Sergt. Thompson by rebels ambushed in the Hattery jungle has brought Washington face to face with the seriousness of the campaign which the Americans are waging in the black republic. Thompson was shot down while assisting brother troopers in rescuing the body of one of their companions who had been drowned.

Officials were fearful to-day that the toll of American lives will be heavy in the guerilla campaign which the rebellious Cacos have launched against the Americans.

Greek People Are Prepared to Withstand the Efforts of Any Other Nation to Make Itself Predominant in the Balkans, Says Venizelos.

A PLAIN WARNING

ATHENS, Sept. 30.—In explaining plans for mobilization of the Greek army Premier Venizelos explained that it was purely a precautionary measure, made necessary by Bulgaria's mobilization. He said the situation was grave, but that he hoped the Balkan atmosphere would clear within a few days. A great demonstration occurred when former Premier Gounaris, head of the Opposition, and since the beginning of the war the chief advocate of Greek neutrality, supported Venizelos' programme in a brief speech.

Despite expressions of hopefulness, Premier Venizelos made it plain that Greece will not wait for months while Bulgaria keeps Balkans in suspense.

"Mobilization cannot continue indefinitely," he told the chamber, "especially as Bulgaria no longer accepts the situation established between her and her neighbours. Greek people are prepared to defend the integrity of their territory and to withstand the efforts of any other nation to make itself predominant in the Balkans."

A REAL PROBLEM

One of Canada's growing problems is the spread of the pernicious doctrine of Mormonism, operating under the name of the Latter Day Saints. Their propaganda has been carried on extensively in many parts of the west for years and also in Ontario. During the past summer a series of special meetings have been held in Ottawa city.

Citizens of Peterborough who are interested in this question are invited to attend a lantern lecture on "Salt Lake City and the Mormons" in the Sunday School Hall of George street Methodist church, Friday, October 1st at 8 p.m. This interesting lecture will be given by Rev. C. S. Applegath, of Islington Methodist church, who has made an extensive study of the problem. In order to afford opportunity for every one to hear it, the admission will be merely a nominal charge of 10c.

Begin Their Training For Advanced Work

Miss Pearl Payton, Miss Annie McFadden and Mr. John Philips of Peterborough Salvation Army Corps, left this morning for Toronto to enter the S. A. Training College. Last night they were given a farewell at the Temple at which Mrs. Thos. Lang spoke for the Sunday School Workers, Mrs. Harry Hedge for the Songsters' Brigade, and Mrs. Adjt. McElhiney bade them farewell on behalf of the Corps and wished them every success in their studies.

BARBADOS CONTINGENT OFF

NEW YORK, Sept. 29.—Among the passengers arriving yesterday from Barbados on the steamer Byron was John C. Manning, who is on his way to London to get a commission in the British Army. He said that a transport called at the island the day before he left and took away the Barbados contingent to the war. It consisted of 110 colored soldiers and two white officers.

Mr. Manning added that the Government had not asked the men to go, but they considered it to be their duty, and they went.

HONESTY THE BEST POLICY.

The United States half-billion-dollar loan to the Allies, and the terms of the loan, are proof of the hackneyed truism, that, "honesty is the best policy," and that a good name, if not better than riches, is a very satisfactory equivalent. The 500 million dollar loan has been made to Great Britain and France, without any collateral security—on the simple I. O. U., word of honour, of the two countries, to pay interest at five per cent., and to repay the principal at the end of five years. The financiers knew that the Entente nations, specially Britain, keep their word, and deal in the gold of good faith, and not in "scraps of paper" currency. Uncle Sam would have thought twice before loaning Germany a stiver on its word. A country that is discredited in all the world, that is bankrupt in honour, is doomed to fail, finally and utterly, as it has so far failed in many things. The loan is further proof that the financiers, who keep their ears to the ground, and read the signs of the times shrewdly, are certain that Germany's attempt to destroy British and French commerce by submarine attack, will continue to prove a failure.

CHILDREN'S AID SOCIETY.

If there is one appeal more insistent than another, that this cruel war creates, it is the appeal to our humanity. Every side of our human nature is touched. We have for this reason a multiplicity of appeals made to our generosity, and our spirit of sacrifice. In our numerous activities in connection with war and war results, we must not forget the interests of the home and the homes we are fighting for. The Children's Aid Society in its great functions is the Good Samariton in action, and concerns itself with the welfare of the corner-stone of the state and of society—our childhood. The Children's Aid Society has claims upon our generosity, makes appeal to the generosity and practical sympathy of all who, gauging their sympathy and their duty by the love and labour lavished on their own well-fed, well-clad, carefully cherished brood, can feel for the neglected ,the abused, and friendless children that are to be found in every community. The duty is plain. The Children's Aid Society is in sore need of funds. With all our giving, which we make so willingly, and as largely, as we can, we must not neglect the Children's Aid Society, must be prepared, if not sooner, to do our bit on Children's Aid Tag Day, Saturday, October 16th, five days after Thanksgiving day. We shall be permitted to extend our thanksgiving by remembering that he "prayeth best who loveth best"; and he loveth best who puts into deeds the spirit of the great Love that blessed little children.

A SERIOUS MATTER.

We are fighting against the spirit of German methods; against unfaith, disregard of plighted word, and against outrage of principles of honesty, such as appeal to those who have only the most elementary conceptions of honesty and good faith. We plume ourselves on being much better than the Huns in this regard; but it seems we get dangerously near in principle and practice to the spirit of the Hun. As detailed in another column by the Toronto Star, under the heading of "Is the Franchise a Mere Scrap of Paper," the Bracebridge voters' list incident is a serious matter.

The voters' list for Bracebridge was posted on the last day of July, and according to the letter of the law appeals had to be delivered to the town clerk within thirty days. Mr. J. M. Bird, had some appeals to enter and called at the town clerk's office on August 30th within office hours, but found the office closed, the doors locked, the clerk having gone on a holiday. Mr. Bird did the only thing left for him to do, posted the list addressed to the clerk, and as fully complied with the requirements of the law as circumstances permitted. When the Court of Revision was held in September, and Mr. Bird was ready to support his appeals, the town clerk said the appeals were received too late, and could not be heard. It would seem that this official had the courage of—a German diplomat. The appeals were technically too late by the action of the clerk himself. He was the only one to blame. He absented himself from his office without providing a substitute, at a time when he knew the law required that his office should be open to receive appeals.

The voters' list is in a sense the charter of our rights, the instrument under which we govern ourselves, and enjoy the privileges of British representative institutions. The compilation of the voters' list assumes the highest importance, especially under our system of party government. A full and complete list requires the cooperation of both parties, and as a matter of fact, both parties are called upon, or rather are interested, in placing all the names of their respective partizans upon the list, and seeing that those not entitled to vote are not placed on the list. Thus justice is done as between the two parties, with the result that under fair administration of the law a voters' list is as complete as is possible to make it. In the Bracebridge case there was practical, if not intentional, evasion of the requirements of the law. If the town clerk was a partizan, his conduct in neglecting his duties, and absenting himself at the time, of all times, he should be at his post, his conduct is explainable. Until this official clears himself of the justified inference he is subject to grave suspicion as to his honesty and fitness for office.

At any rate, as a result of his action, the electors of Bracebridge will be voting upon an imperfect and unjust list, and a considerable portion of the qualified electorate will be disfranchised, and possibly many not legally entitled to vote, will have been made "legally" entitled to vote. In a word the letter of the law, by connivance or neglect, was employed to defeat the spirit of the law. Thus we have a body blow struck at the principle of our representative institutions; the integrity of the franchise is destroyed, and the legal pledge of fair play and honest preparation of the voters' list is, made "a scrap of paper." Tha Bracebridge affair may not have involved many cases of disfranchisement, but it involves something more than that—the great principle of our freedom, the corner-stone of our self-government, the sacred principle of the franchise.

It is a serious matter.

THE GRAND DUKE'S NEW POST.

The Grand Duke Nicholas, in taking over the post of Viceroy of the Caucasus, will go to a country of great variety. The population are of many races, dissimilar in the extreme, representing many stages of culture. The Caucasus has been called "The Mountain of Languages," by reason of the multiplicity of tongues spoken there, and probably in no area of a similar size throughout the world can greater variety of life be found. For over half a century the Caucasian people withstood the arms of Russia, but in 1859, their power was shattered by the capture of Shamyl, the chief prophet of the Leghaus, who for more than twenty years had been a leader in opposition to Russian aims. Then the bulk of the Circassians and Abkhasians migrated to Turkish territory in Asia or Europe, and the ancient divisions of the country disappeared under the new administration. —Westminster Gazette.

A REMARKABLE PARADOX.

A remarkable paradox is offered by the statement as to Russian losses given out at Berlin by the Overseas News Agency. Since May 2, it is said, the number of Russians directly engaged has been 1,400,000. But "in the fighting since May 1, 1,000,000 men have been captured and 500,000 killed or wounded this is a very conservative estimate." It may be conservative, but none the less it provokes curiosity that the total Russian losses should exactly equal all who have been engaged and that there should be none the less be still a Russian Army in the field. Is it not engaged or were the men wounded or captured not engaged? If it had been said that the Russian forces on May 2 came up to 1,400,000 the riddle would be easy to clear up; it is not so clear how all the Russians who have taken part up to the present can have been disposed of while fighting still goes on along several extended fronts. —Springfield Republican.

IS THE ONTARIO FRANCHISE ONLY A MERE "SCRAP OF PAPER?"

In regard to the preparation of the voters' list for the town of Bracebridge, in Muskoka, a question of great public interest has arisen. The voters' list for the town of Bracebridge was posted on the last day of last July. Appeals against the list were to be delivered to the town clerk inside of thirty days. Accordingly, Mr. J. M. Bird, a citizen of Canada, who had a number of appeals to make, called at the clerk's office on the thirtieth of August within office hours, but found the office closed and the door locked, the clerk, as he was informed, having gone on a holiday. Mr. Bird then left the list at the post-office addressed to the clerk.

Evidently Mr. Bird had done all in his power to comply with the law. It was not his fault that the clerk was absent on the last day for receiving appeals; and, the clerk being absent, the mailing of the list at the Bracebridge post office was the best that could be done.

But when the Court of Revision was held in September, and Mr. Bird was ready to support his appeals, the town clerk appeared and said that the appeals were made too late. In other words, he made an objection founded not upon any neglect or omission on the part of Mr. Bird, but on his own neglect to be at his office. If he chose to take a holiday, the rights of voters must be disregarded, like the historic "scrap of paper."

Here is a wrong which ought to be redressed. It is not a party question. It is a question of public rights. We are well aware that the two political parties take an interest in the revision of the lists; but in doing so they act merely as agents of the electors, who have a right to share in the government of the country. The right of the humblest voter is as sacred as the right of the smallest nation. The public opinion of the world condemns the action of Germany in riding roughshod over Belgium and despising its sacred independence as "a scrap of paper." The public opinion of Canada ought to be equally stern in denouncing the violation of the sacred right of a Canadian citizen to the franchise.

If the town clerk has an explanation to make he ought to be heard. We are thinking of the principle, not of the man.—Toronto Star.

MEANING OF ENTENTE ALLIES' HALF BILLION DOLLARS LOAN

The Commissioners representing Great Britain and France have been successful in placing a loan of half a billion dollars in the United States. The loan bears interest at five per cent., but is not fortified by collateral securities of any kind; it is based simply on the promise of the two nations to repay the principal at the end of five years and the interest annually during the interval. The loan is issued at a discount of two per cent. to the purchaser of the borrowers' bonds, and a commission of another two per cent. to the American agents who undertake to sell the bonds to the public. It is announced that to the purchaser at ninety-eight cents on the dollar the return from the investment will be five and a half per cent.

As this financial transaction is absolutely unprecedented, and is likely to remain unparalleled, it is worth while to keep in view its motive and its result. The allied nations are borrowing not because they need money to buy goods, but to keep the rate of exchange between Europe and America from disturbing the course of transatlantic trade by its fluctuations. For trade purposes it does not matter greatly what the pound sterling is said to be worth in American dollars and cents; what does matter very much is that it should always mean the same sum.

The motive of the loan is to "stabilize" the rate of exchange, and its most obvious effect will be to put a stop to all uncertainty; but other results will flow from the transaction. It will bring home, not to thousands only, or even to tens of thousands, but to hundreds of thousands of American investors the significance of this great war as nothing else could have done. Great Britain and France have long been the creditor nations of the word, and the mere fact that one year of war has caused them to become debtors to a country that has itself been a chronic borrower is calculated to make people take notice of the change that has been the result of the war. The loan will cause people not merely to take more interest in the struggle, but also to sympathize with the Allies, who are their debtors. Lastly, it will make the American people better acquainted with the British and French, and the moral effect of this improved acquaintance will last long after the loan has been paid up.—The Globe.

BERLIN THEATRES

On Stage, Plays and Operas of Merit Are Rule.

It is worth noticing that in the dozen or so Berlin theatres which have kept their doors open all summer a very high standard of play has been maintained. Never at any time has the Berlin stage been monopolized by revues and the lighter class of comedy, and wherever light plays have appeared they have been pieces well known and admired by the people, occupying a recognized place in German literature. For some months after the outbreak of war the revue and musical comedy, with all their inanities, held control, of the majority of theatres, but as the war proceeded a grave note became manifest. Cabarets and the grosser burlesque, which used to be a feature of nocturnal Berlin, are forbidden by the police.

One notice in the theatrical advertisements of the latest Berlin newspapers a remarkably high class selection of plays. Dramas by Shakespeare, Schiller, Goethe, Ibsen, Sudermann and Hauptmann are of frequent performance, and in the three Berlin opera houses the works given are usually of a high order. Comic operas are by no means excluded, but these are operas of real musical distinction, such as Millocker's 'Bettel-Student" and Johann Strauss's "Fledermaus." —London Chronicle.

WORLD'S SERIES TICKETS

Boston Will Sell Them at Prices Ranging From $5 to 50 Cents.

BOSTON, Sept. 29.—The prospective world series game to be played at Braves Field next month may be seen at prices ranging from 50 cents to $5, according to an announcement by the management of the Boston American League Baseball Club today. The higher price will be for box seats. Other reservations in the grand stand will cost $3 each.

"The number of seats which may be obtained by reservation has been increased by setting aside the stand which runs back of third base. These seats will sell at $2 each. Tickets in these three classes will be sold in advance only in blocks of three, covering the first three games that may be played here. Applications have been pouring in for weeks and are being filed.

Tickets for the right field bleachers at $1 each, and in the other bleachers, at 50 cents each, will be placed on sale at the grounds before each game. The seating capacity of Braves Field is now being checked up to determine just how many persons can be cared for. No additional stands will be erected, it was said.

For Instance.

Simpson—"Do you and your young wife deprive yourselves of any luxuries on account of the war?" Smith—"Well, we at least make such light luxuries as we allow ourselves do for both. For instance, she likes the smell of a good cigar, so instead of giving her flowers and sweets on her birthday this year I bought a box of very superior Havanas, and I smoke one to her every day after dinner."

IRELAND OF TO-DAY

LONDON, Sept. 15.—The Irish Registrar-General's report for 1914 for those who can read behind the bald columns of figures, has an interesting story to tell, says the Chronicle.

For one thing the drop in population, a constant and significant factor for so many years, has once again been arrested, the estimate being 4,881,808, against 4,879,012 in 1913. The emigration record is the lowest since 1851.

The marriage rate is said to be an index, to some extent, to prosperity. It is therefore, notable that the rate for 1914 showed an increase of 0.18 over that of 1913. Among many curious differences which exist between the publication of official figures in Ireland and that in Great Britain, one effects the age of persons contracting marriage. Here the full age must be given; in Ireland the only information is as to whether the parties were minor or of full age. The only thing that emerges is that the percentage of persons who marry under age in Ireland is very far below that of England and Scotland.

Illiteracy is rapidly dying out, as shown by the figures of husbands and wives who signed the register instead of making their "marks" Husbands who signed were 94.6 and wives 96.4 per cent. It is worthy of note that the highest proportion, according to provinces, were: for men, 98 per cent. in Leinster and Munster, 94 per cent. in Ulster, and 91 in Connaught; for women the percentages were: 97 in Leinster and Munster, 96 in Connaught and Ulster.

Morality High as Ever.

The splendid record of Ireland in the matter of morality again comes out in birth statistics, and even the official reticence of the Registrar-General cannot prevent him from remarking that, "as regard illegitimacy, Ireland compares favorably with most other countries." The illegitimate births for the whole country are only 3 per cent. Here, too, the figures by provinces are striking. They are: Ulster, 4.0; Leinster, 3.2; Munster, 2.6; and Connaught, 0.7. The general birth-rate shows a light decrease—0.7 per 1,000 over the previous decennium.

The death rate, 16.3 per 1,000 of the population, shows a drop of 0.6. By provinces Leinster comes first with 17.7 per 1,000, Ulster second with 16.6, and then Munsten 15.4 and Connaught 13.6. The healthiest countries are Mayo, Kerry, Roscommon and Clare.

GERMAN CAPTIVE

Fortnightly Rule Applies to All Teutons in Prison Camp.

Sidelights on the side of Russia's prisoners in the Siberian detention camps are given in a letter received by an English merchant in Moscow, a translation of which is printed in a London newspaper.

"At the present time," says the letter, "we have 14,000 prisoners on our books—6,000 in the villages and 8,000 in town. A further transport of 10,000 prisoners will be taken in within a month.

"The Germans are kept separate from the other nationalities. For two hours in the morning the prisoners are allowed to take gymnastic exercises, to play games, sing, or play music. Gardening is also allowed. The prisoners may smoke in places especially alloted. They get the same food as our Russian soldiers.

"Every fortnight a Russian bath is provided, and everyone must take one of it. This time of the year the prisoners go to bathe in the river at least once a month."

The letter says the Germans are denied certain privileges, but the treatment of all is good. No prisoner needs to work more than five hours a day. The sanitary conditions are considered satisfactory. The officers get 50 rubles ($25) monthly and must provide their own food. Each house has a kitchen and there is a servant for every five officers. All complaints of ill treatments, the writer says, are immediately attended to, and those who are guilty are punished. —New York Sun.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

Alexander vs. Shore in Opener Red Sox Pitchers Lead League

With less than two weeks of the season remaining, the pennant races in the major leagues have assumed such a large shape that baseball enthusiasts who wish to witness all the games of the coming world's series are consulting time tables that show the train schedules between Philadelphia and Boston.

Grover Cleveland Alexander, of the Philadelphia Nationals, and Ernest Shore, of the Boston Americans, already have been tentatively assigned by the prophetic writers of the sporting columns to pitch the opening game for their respective teams.

The Detroit Tigers cannot win the American league pennant unless they win all their remaining games while the Red Sox are dropping seven out of the ten games they have to play. The mere citation of these figures show how slim is the probability of any upset.

The Phillies have only to capture three of the nine games left on their schedule in order to place themselves in the premier position at the season's end.

Phillies Finish Strong.

Their series with Boston and Brooklyn still remain to be played, but Pat Moran's men have little reason now to be worried about the outcome of these games, which might have decided the race had the Quakers made a poorer showing in the West. Boston and Brooklyn are the competitors for the second place in the National League.

Speculation on the account of the world's series is being indulged in at a lively rate. Whether Alexandra bearing the major burden of the twirling assignment for his team is a moot question.

Supporters of the Phillies chances are counting on George Chalmers to help out with at least one victory, while Erskine Mayer and possibly Eppa Peptha Rixley are figured to be in a position to stand in the breach should one be created by the fall down of either of the stellar selections.

Luderus and Cravath are the hitters upon whom Moran is resting his confidence to offset the efforts of such men as Speaker, Hooper and the other "sluggers" of the Boston combination.

Baseball fans who place their confidence in the Red Sox point to the probability that Joe Wood, Shore, George Foster and "Dutch" Leonard, the probable Boston starers in the box, will be able to hold the Philadelphia batsmen well in check, while their teammates are pulverizing the delivery of the Quaker boxmen.

Alexander, admittedly the king of present-day pitchers, looms up as the big factor in the series if the participants are the clubs which now seem the well-nigh inevitable contenders. Upon his ability to win the games in which he is started depends, in the opinion of the great majority of baseball observers, the chances of the Phillies for bringing the world's title to the town which they represent.

Boston Pitchers Invincible.

Delving into the pitching records for this season, it is found that six Boston pitchers lead the regular hurlers in the American League. It is probably the first time in the history of the game that the entire regular pitching staff of a team has held the six leading positions. The names of nine pitchers form other clubs precede those of the Red Sox band, but not one of the nine has figured in more than three games.

Wood heads the Boston pack with a mark of 18 won, 4 lost; Ruth follows with 17 won, 6 lost; Gregg is next with 5 wins and 2 defeats; Shore is four with 17 victories to 7 setbacks. Foster next with 19 won 8 lost, and Leonard follows with 14 and 6. Ray Collins is away down in the list with 5 won and 6 lost, while May has won 4 and lost 6.

British and German Censors Keep Back Details of Great Battle

LONDON, September 29. Not one word descriptive of the momentous operations in France, hardly a hundred miles away, had reached the London newspapers late on Monday afternoon, since the laconic despatch of Sir John French the previous night with the exception of the official French report.

The newspapers are urging relaxation of the censorship. They contend that it would be helpful in recruiting, and that the relatives of the men at the front are entitled to more information concerning their achievements.

Because of the censorship the Berlin newspapers have thus far refrained from comment on the results of the battles growing out of the new offensive movement of the Entente Allies on the western front, it is stated in advices through Amsterdam to the Exchange Telegraph Company. The press, however, the advices add, warns the people against attaching exaggerated importance to what is alluded to as a "temporary German check."

England Offers Jobs

Six Month's Contracts and Passage Both Ways For Makers of War Munitions.

NEW YORK, Sept. 29.—Agents of British steamship lines here are engaging skilled American workers on six month's contracts for employment in the munition factories in England passage there and return being part of the bonus offered to the men. As a condition of employment, each applicant is required to prove that he is of British descent.

Advertisements sent to the newspapers, calling for machinists, turners fitters, coppersmiths, and plumbers, read:

"Wanted for work in Great Britain; six month's contracts; only union men of British extraction eligible. Address J. G., P. O. Box 893, New York City."

Representatives of the advertising agency through which the notices were placed said they were not authorized to give the names of the steamship companies acting for the British Government.

He Declined.

"Supposing I decided to let you have the money how do I know that I shall get it back at the time you mention?" said Monikins. "I promise it, my boy, on the word of a gentleman," replied Jenkins. "Ah, in that case I may do better of it. Come around this evening and bring him with you."

NEEDED IN GOLD MINES

Many Employes Wanted to Fight, but Industry is Too Important.

JOHANNESBURG, Sept. 29.—W. H. Dawe, President of the South African Chamber of Mines, called attention to-day to the vital importance of South African gold to the cause of the Allies.

Mr. Dawe said that numerous employes of the gold mines desired to volunteer for service at the front, but that permission for them to do so could not be given because the importance of the industry was so great that no risk could be taken which might affect its steady operation.

The Adjustment of the American exchange rate, Mr. Dawe said, covered ordinary commodities, but the large orders for munitions placed by the Allies must be paid for to a continuance of gold payments, he added, would be possible because the British Empire produce £60,000,000 ($300,000,000) in gold annually, two-thirds of it coming from the Transvaal.

Self-Evident.

The story is told of a man whose wife had arranged an "authors" evening," and persuaded her husband to help her receive the 50 guests. The first author was dull, but the second was duller. The rooms were warm, and, on pretence of letting in some cool air, the unfortunate host escaped to the hall, where he found the footman comfortably asleep on the carved oak settee.

"Wake up," he said, sternly, in the man's ear, "wake up, I say! You must have been listening at the keyhole!" Youth's Companion.

904 CHILDREN IN SOCIETY'S HOMES DURING THE PAST YEAR

An Evidence of the Great Work the Children's Aid Society is Doing in the Province—Mr. E. L. Goodwill's Survey of the Year's Work

FINANCIAL STATEMENT

The following careful review of the work of the Children's Aid Society during the past year was presented by Mr. E. L. Goodwill at Monday's special meeting.

I have the honour to present the report of the executive Committee of the Children's Aid Society. The work of the Children's Aid Society is now so well and favorably known that this year the executive have hardly considered it necessary to give that length explanation of our work which it has been in the habit of doing in the past and instead we propose to refer briefly to the work carried on by the Children's Aid societies generally throughout the Province.

There are in existence throughout the Province of Ontario 47 County or District Societies, 19 City societies and 2 separate Town societies. From July 1893 to December 1914 the number of children entered on the record as Wards of the Children's Aid societies throughout Ontario number 9503, of these 6090 were received and provided with homes by the Children's Aid societies and 1917 by the Provincial Superintendant Mr. J. J. Kelso. An additional 996 children were received from reformatories and orphanages. Of course these figures do not include the thousands of children whose welfare and happiness were conserved without the necessity of permanent record.

During the above period 64 boys and 340 girls wards of the society were married and during the said period the number of deaths among wards was 164 boys and 162 girls. We are informed by the Provincial Superintendent, and it is of [illegible] interest at the present time to note, that fully 200 young men who in past years have been helped by the societies are now at the front and of this number our Local Society has five representatives.

Referring to the past year there were 904 children made wards of at the Children's Aid Societies by legal proceedings in Ontario. Of this number 735 were protestants and 176 catholics, 493 were male and 491 female. Of this number 449 were placed in Foster Homes and 180 were returned on probation to parents, 74 placed on probation with relatives, 13 in industrial schools, 15 in hospitals, 18 died, 3 ran away and there were 115 in shelters and 22 in orphanages at the end of the year.

It is rather interesting to note the causes of committal.

	Father	Mother	Both
Deserted	158	39	44
Drunkards	61	29	..
Immortality	21	114	27
Criminal	48	14	1
Orphaned	67	168	47
In Asylum	6	12	..
Weakminded	4	17	..
Cruelty	7	1	6
General Depravity	57	42	80

As to the activities of the Children's Aid Societies:—First and most important there is the group of activities that might be listed under the heading "Preserving of life and health-such as birth registration; insistence upon responsibility for illegitimacy; medical inspection of children in school, in institutions and at work; district nursing; pure food; and suitable organization and control of these functions by the community.

The second group of activities might be termed protection from want, abuse and crime. This would include the care of dependent neglected children; protection from cruelty and premature toil, regulation of work conditions, correction of dilinquency; fixing the age of consent; the administration of juvenile courts and probation; provisions for public relief; protection from obscebe literature, intoxicants, tobacco, drug, dangerous weapons, etc.

In the third and final group are the construction effects for the welfare of children under the heading "Education and Recreation" comprising provisions for schools, compulsory attendance, industrial training, vocation: l guidance, social centres and playgrounds, libraries, etc.

From this will be seen the opportunities there are for a Children's Aid Society not only to help children but in the work for children to open the way for other reforms.

When it has been finally decided after warnings and help have proved unavailing the children must be removed from the old environment, they are taken before a magistrate or two justices of the peace, who under the Act can transfer the guardianship to the Society. After a short stay in the Shelter they are placed out in foster homes that have been approved, and if the placement is afterwards found quite satisfactory agreement papers are drawn up.

Records of all these children who are committed are filed with the Provincial Superintendant, and a copy of the commitment, with all history particulars, must be sent promptly to him. From this central office visiting the children is arranged for, and when these reports come in a copy is sent to the Society whose ward the child is. Last year there were 4,651 names on these visiting lists, and only nine were not reported upon. It is part of the work of this office to note form these reports whether the placement is satisfactory, whether the wages are suitable, whether agreements have been drawn up, etc., and if anything is not satisfactory the attention of the Society is drawn to it.

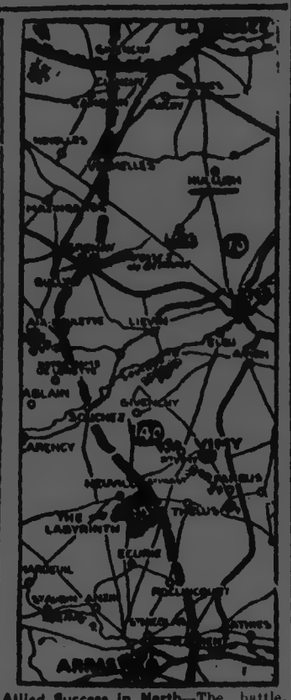
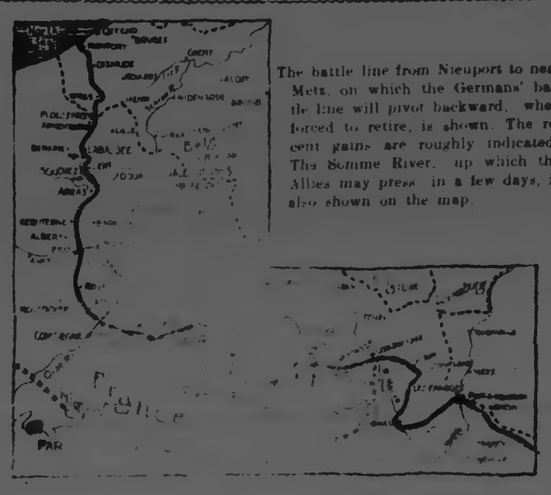
"And, now, madam, what about penciling the brows?" "I think," said Mrs. Nurich, "I'd like one of those highbrow effects that I read so much about in the papers"—Louisville Herald.



Allied Success in North—The battle-line is shown before the Allies' advance started. North of Lens the British took Loos and Hill 70, while the French have captured Hill 140. Advance can be estimated by map.



The battle line from Nieuport to near Metz, on which the Germans' battle line will pivot backward, when forced to retire, is shown. The recent gains are roughly indicated. The Somme River, up which the Allies may press in a few days, is also shown on the map.

BROTHERS IN ARMS IN SOUTH AFRICA

"Some very important and interesting despatches from Lord Buxton, Governor-General of South Africa, were received at the Colonial Office by last mail," says the London correspondent of the Yorkshire Post.

"One of these, which deals fully with the military operations in the late German territory, is of deep historical interest.

"Some light is thrown on the composition of the forces engaged in suppressing the rebellion and in conquering the German territory. There has been a considerable amount of speculation as to the numbers of men which each of the two great white races of the Union furnished for these purposes. A careful analysis has been made by the Headquarters Staff, and the result justifies most conclusively—and, indeed, remarkably—the contention that in the brotherhood of arms both races contributed an equal share."

	Rebellion.	Campaign
British killed	51	76
Dutch killed	81	46
British wounded	94	205
Dutch wounded	183	113
British engaged	9,900	27,500
Dutch engaged	20,100	22,500

It will be seen that the numbers of British and Dutch killed were identical, and that 299 British were wounded and 296 Dutch.

Stock Markets

The Anglo-French loan negotiators have virtually agreed on all important points as follows:

Size of loan $500,000,000
Collateral deposited ..... None
Security ..... First "morgage on Britain and France
Rate of Interest ..... 5 per cent
Price to public, probably ..98 to 99
Price to bankers, probably ..96 to 97
Redemption price 100
Life of Bonds ..... 5 years
Conversion privilege,.. 4 1-2 per cent 15-20 year bonds
Taxes .... Free of all Foreign taxes
Underwriters, Nation-wide syndicate
Markets and dealings, N. Y. and other stock exchanges
Purpose ..... pay for U. S. commercial exports
Depositaries for cash, All suscribing banks
Distribution of cash, None to leave U. S.
Comparative size of loan, Biggest in U. S. history

The inside story of the $500,000,000 loan negotiations is piquantly interesting. At one time the collapse of the whole deal was threatened, so acute were the differences of opinion both uptown and downtown. J. P. Morgan's exclusiveness came near causing a revolt even among his so-called associates, to say nothing of the chagrin it caused among other bankers. The commission took a hand, however, and things were smoothed over. The "basis" of the negotiations" was "broadened," as Mr. Blackett, the commission's secretary, expressed it in denying that a Chinese wall had been built around the visitors. Since then Mr. Morgan has gone on a different tack and ruffled feelings have been modified in most instances.

WHAT THE NEW YORK PAPERS ARE SAYING.

Journal of Commerce: An optimistic sentiment is observed in the best informed copper metal circles.

Financial America: So much attention is attracted to Baldwin Locomotive that there is little demand for other securities.

Wall Street Journal: Baldwin's performances have encouraged some of the aggressive traders to take the bear side. The technical position of the stock market appears to be strong.

Sun: Close observers of the markets are looking for the "natural reaction" which they think is about due.

STEEL MERGER RUMOURS.

With the continued activity in Baldwin Locomotive stock and the minor steel issues there were further rumours in the financial district of various combinations and mergers, but none of these could be confirmed yesterday.

Efforts to learn something more definite as to the future of the Midvale Steel Co., which changed hands last week, were met by statements of bankers that nothing further was to be announced at this time. William E. Corey, who is to be the new head of the Midvale, was not found at his office in the financial district.

One banker admitted that he knew all about the Midvale transaction, but added it had been agreed that nothing was to be given out for publication. A canvass of several bankers acquainted with the transaction brought forth no definite information except that the Baldwin Locomotive Company, the Cambria Steel Company, the Pennsylvania Steel Company, and the Ornetble Steel Company were not concerned in the transaction. Mr Corey on Monday said that neither the Baldwin nor the Cambria company was concerned.

One of the rumours spread in the financial district mentioned the following as possible members of the new merger, of which it is expected that the Midvale Co. will be the nucleus: Driggs-Seabury Ordnance Company, Baldwin Locomotive Works, Cambria Steel, Lackawanna Steel, Pennsylvania Steel, Youngstown Sheet and Tube, Taylor-Wharton Iron and Steel, Pickans-Mather and J. B. Brill companies. Nothing was ascertained tending to confirm this report.

Emphasis was laid by bankers on the fact that Charles M. Schwab, president of the Bethlehem Steel Company, a few days ago, denied that he was interested in any company other than the Bethlehem.

Prices of plates, bars and shapes have $1,397,326,124, as compared with $953,333,970 in the corresponding period a year ago. The New York Central's order for 120,000 tons was divided among the United States Steel, Lakawanna Steel and other companies.

Kuhn, Loeb & Co., William A. Read & Co., and Kidder, Peabody & Co., have disposed of the entire $46,000,000 New York city 6% per cent bonds awarded to them at the last sale.

According to the annual pamphlet report of the Chesapeak and Ohio Railway, surplus available for dividends in the last fiscal year was $3,663,537, equal to 4.20 per cent. on the company's stock, as compared with 4.70 per cent earned in the preceding twelve months.

Directors of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company have declared a dividend of $1 on its stock. This is the first dividend declared since the par value of the shares was increased from $25 to $50, and is at the same rate as existed prior to the change.

Statistics compiled by the National City Bank's foreign trade department show that total exports from this port from August 1 to September 18 amounted to

John A. Topping, chairman of the Republic Iron and Steel Co., has returned to his desk after a short vacation in Canada.

Isaac N. Spiegelberg was credited with being the nimble trader on the floor of the New York Stock Exchange who first obtained $150 for a lot of Baldwin Locomotive stock.

Operating statistics of the Erie Railroad continue to show improvement. Its gain in gross revenues in August was $464,999, and its net revenues increased $748,666, making a total gain in net for the first two months of the fiscal year of $2,026,463.

To-day is the last day for deposits of the six per cent. debenture notes of the M. Rumely Company under the proposed reorganization and it was announced yesterday that almost the entire issue was already in hand. D. Barney & Co. have undertaken the reorganization. The new sales company will be known as the Advance Rumely Thresher Company. Finley P. Mount, the receiver, will be elected president, and J. H. Guy, vice president, and general manager of the new company.

Orders have been received by the American Locomotive Company for four engines for sugar companies in Cuba. The Wheeling and Lake Erie Railroad has ordered 750 gondola cars from the Standard Steel Co., and 200 automobile cars firm the Western Steel Car and Foundry Company.

Orders for 10,000 tons of rails have been distributed among several companies by the Philadelphia and Reading Railway.

Warning To Motor Car Owners

His Honour Judge Huycke Condemns Recklessness — Future Offenders Will Be Severely Dealt With

In sentencing Harold Legrow to one week in the county gaol for reckless driving, His Honour Judge Huycke at yesterday's sitting of the County Court, commented upon the prevalence of carelessness among motor car owners. His Honour made it plain that such a condition of affairs will not be allowed to continue in future. The case before the Court had caused him a good deal of perplexity, not because he had any doubt of Legrow's guilt, but because of certain circumstances that entered into the case. His Honour opined that the majority of motor car owners were careful, but that there were many who were not. To the latter he wanted it made plain that such a condition of affairs would not be allowed to continue and that all future offenders would be severely punished. Some motor car owners show utter disregard for life. The limit of punishment that could have been inflicted on Legrow was two years' imprisonment. It is true that the child contributed to the accident, but then Legrow might have exercised more care. It was his duty to protect the child.

In conclusion His Honour intimated that the next offender to appear before him, instead of getting one week, would get a great many weeks.

Character Evidence.

Mr. G. N. Gordon, counsel for Legrow, called a number of witnesses who gave character testimony. It was also arranged that the bill for medical attention will be paid by Legrow. This amounts to approximately twenty-five dollars.

Overseas Men Were Royally Entertained

Soldier Boys Were the Guests of Women's Bible Class of St. John's Church in the School House Last Night.

MEN HAD GOOD TIME

The members of the Peterborough Overseas forces were royally entertained at St. John's School House last night by the Women's Bible Class. It was a jolly, informal affair. "No fuss and feathers" as one Private described it, and the boys in khaki enjoyed every moment of the entertainment. They were made to feel at home from the moment of their arrival, the ladies of the Bible Class proving ideal hostesses. A splendid supper had been prepared, and was done ample justice to by the soldier lads, after which an informal but thoroughly enjoyable programme was given. It was opened by a sextette composed of Sergt. Major Miller, Bandsmen James, Brooks, R. Dyer and French, and Pte. A. Rutar, who sang "We'll Never Let the Old Flag Fall," with the audience joining in the chorus. Miss Edith Kempt sang in splendid voice "There's a Land," and had to respond to an enthusiastic encore. Comic songs by Mr. Charles Coleman made a big hit, and a recitation by Master Percy Luther, delivered in his usual effective style, was greatly enjoyed. Sergt. Jay of the overseas detachment contributed an enjoyable solo, and the gathering united in singing patriotic airs, "Tipperary," "O Canada" "Soldiers of the King" and "The Maple Leaf" being some of the favourites.

Short addresses were given by Major Cameron, A.M.C., Mr. W. R. Scadding, Lt.-Col. A. Stevenson, formerly Commanding Officer of the 57th and a Warden of St. John's, Capt. R. P. Watt, Mr. Chas. Coleman, and Rev. Canon Davidson, all of whom referred to the good conduct of the men of the Overseas detachment. The prediction was made that last night's affair was only the forerunner of many such affairs that would be tendered the soldier boys during the winter. As Major Cameron expressed it, "There is nothing that we can do that is too good for the men who have shown themselves willing to make the supreme sacrifice for their country."

Prayers by Rev. Canon Davidson, and cheers for the King, and for the members of the Women's Bible Class brought the jolly evening to a close.

HAVELOCK MAN WITH PRINCESS PATS WRITES

The following letter has been received by a Havelock man from Pte. Blatchford of Havelock, who is at the front with the Princess Pats:

Somewhere in France,
Sept. 5th, 1915.

I am still plodding along since I came back on the 10th of May last, so you can see by the time I have been here that I have a fair share of it. To tell you the truth, it is a tough war we are up against and we shall have to move some to make any impression. At present we are doing the ordinary trench work, four days in and four days out. This is a funny war; when you are in the trenches you are up against death any moment, but you get so used to it that you take no notice of it when a man gets knocked over. But when you come out the cafes are open and it puts you in mind of a trip to Peterborough. The cafes are real good, and you can buy a glass of beer and sit down in comfort to drink it. When a piano is going and a few boys singing you forget all about the war and the next thing is the whine of a shell and the war is still on. This happens every day in a big town a mile from here called A——. Another thing is that some of the trenches are so perfect in construction that you can walk in and out in daytime in perfect safety. We keep on hearing that the married men are getting relieved to go back to Canada. We sincerely hope so, as a look at Havelock and district would look good to me. But we are sure to get back some time so why worry. We are at present about five miles from the Canadians and I go over once or twice as I have a brother in the 1st Battalion. I was glad to read of the Havelock boys being over and I hope to meet some of them over here. If ever you saw France you would understand what they are fighting for as it is a lovely country and the people are very good to us. Well, Ike, I am glad you are taking your pension and I hope you will have many years to enjoy it. We get well fed out here and have nothing to complain of. Remember me to all friends.

Potato Crop Will Be Light

Immense Amount of Rainfall is Given as the Cause

The farmers of this district complain of a shortage in the potato crop. That is why the price on the market this year is from 20 to 25 cents a bushel dearer than last year.

The sad part of it all is the slender silhouette has gone out, no longer does woman need to starve herself and eschew starchy foods in order to mold her figure to fashion's form. Only the genuinely fat man or woman who has been ordered to cut potatoes from the diet can afford to rejoice in at least occasional removal from the table of temptation in the shape of a harmless potato. When the prices likely to prevail it is a safe gamble potatoes won't appear on the bill of fare three times a day in the coming winter.

Some Compensations.

If potatoes had been a failure this year owing to the immense amount of rainfall, there is some satisfaction in knowing the peach crop has been the largest in many seasons. Out in the sunshine in front of the wholesalers and retailers, baskets of peaches were spread this morning in lavish profusion. The greater part of them had come from the Niagara district, Essex County also contributing an excellent showing. Peaches will never take the place of potatoes, but they will fill the vacant rows in the fruit pantry that in more plentiful small fruit years were occupied by jars of strawberries canned and strawberry jams.

One Year In The Reformatory

Was the Sentence Imposed on Youth Who Pleaded Guilty to a Charge of Theft

Elias Cross was sentenced to one year in the Ontario Reformatory by His Honour Judge Huycke at yesterday's sitting of the County Court. Cross, together with a companion of tender years, pleaded guilty to a charge of having burglariously entered one of stores in Tweed and stolen goods therefrom. The only question was given a term of three years in St. John's Industrial school.

Life-Like Portrait of Minister of Militia

In one of the art show cases of Ray Stuffle on Hunter Street, an excellent portrait of Hon. Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia is on view. The photograph, the work of Mr. Fred Rex, who has secured with a view from Peterborough at the Industrial Exhibition.

The portrait is in a soft sepia tone, beautifully framed. It is in fact a speaking likeness of the well-known characteristic features of the honourable gentleman being faithfully portrayed.

When a man sits for his picture as Hon. Sam Hughes did, and as many a man of mark has done he wants to be at his best; and no one could have been more at his best than Hon. Sam on this occasion, judging from the fervour of the hearty reception which he received at the hands of Peterborough's loyal citizens. And, by the same token, the man of mine who is ambitious enough to consider a set for his portrait, will also take care that the privilege is only accorded to a studio with a well-known Provincial reputation.

CANADA'S SECOND DIVISION AS SEEN BY ENGLISH EYES

There Are No Regiments in the British Army Which March Better Says the London Times in a Breezy Article on the Second Contingent.

"THE SAM HUGHES LOOK"

"Yaas—sure."

If you cross the South Downs in Kent at the present time, and ask the first soldier you meet if you are in the neighborhood of the Canadian camps, you will receive the reply, "Yaas—sure," in the accent which seems to English ears to hail direct from "Chicawgo," but it is pure Canadian.

There are many thousands of Canadians camped on the Kentish Downs. A hundred years ago the Kentish yeomen trained there to meet Napoleon's threatened invasion. Eight hundred years ago along the same line of hills, but a little further west, the Saxons gathered to meet the Norman invaders, and two thousand years ago the Britons tramped along these hill-tops to watch the ships of the incoming Romans. To-day Canada's second army has pitched its huts on the Downs, and if you ask the Canadian soldier whether he likes the spot he replies emphatically, "Yaas—sure." If he did not, he would be hard to please.

All the Same.

Canada has stamped her hall-mark on every one of these thousands of her sons—the Sam Hughes look. Whether from the east, or the west, of the far west, or the north—and they come from every corner of Canada—the Sam Hughes look is over them all. You see it in the eyes, whose glance is as straight as that of a machine gun, and in the mouth, which is as firm as a steel plate, and in the poise of the head, which is as steady as the Rocky Mountains. There is an air of assurance and confidence in the walk, as if each man felt quite sure that the earth was made for Canadians; and a super-American aspect of independence, which is all part of the Sam Hughes' look.

There are not merely battalions, but brigades of these tall, broad-shouldered, deep-chested Canadians on the Kentish Downs. Their faces are tanned and they are as fit as men can be.

No one in England has heard much about them—the Press Bureau properly caused us to ignore their arrival—but for three months they have been at home on the Kentish Downs, and in two or three of the little straggling towns along the sea their maple leaf is more familiar than the badge of the Kentish battalions. All the girls have several Canadian admirers each—more.

But for all the intense Canadianism of these sons of the Maple Leaf, there is no doubting the breed from which they have sprung. They look, indeed, more Anglo-Saxon than the English, for they have the pioneer bearing which must have marked the Anglo-Saxon invaders, but which centuries of settlement have tamed in the English. They are more like our forefathers than we are ourselves.

Marching As to War.

Take your stand on some edge of the Downs a few miles from the camps, and watch a brigade of the Canadians come over the hill-side. They are marching as to war, battalion after battalion, each with its mule train of ammunition, its supply waggons, its ambulances, and a line of cooking stoves on wheels, bubbling as they go, with the smoke trailing from their chimneys. After them come the guns, and the long line winds down the steep lanes to the sea level, and crawls away across the miles of marshland towards the bivouac for the night. It is a ready-for-war brigade, made and half-marked in Canada. But, as you stand near the little old church, where the dead of the parish have been buried during a thousand years, and as you watch these roving fighters swing back, the breasts of many of them bare to the sun and the breeze, and their gray-blue eyes bright with the joy of living, you begin to forget that they are all from Ontario, and that they are men who call themselves by that new name of Canadians. You see in them the old Anglo-Saxon fighters who conquered Britain and made England.

They bivouac on the chilly marshes for the night, sleeping on their waterproof sheets, and at half-past five in the morning they are astir again, for they are to fight the battle of Hastings anew, as invaders, with another brigade as the defending enemy. The defenders—men from Quebec, Nova Scotia, Newfoundland, and New Brunswick (a battalion of French-Canadians among them)—have bivouacked on the hillside, and at daybreak line the trenches prepared for the defence.

Light on England.

The fight occupies most of the day, and ends when the invaders, bridging a canal, turn the defenders' flank and gain the country at their rear. Like all true soldiers, when the fighting does not immediately concern them, some of the defenders smoke peacefully in the shade at noonday under the grass, awaiting the signal for action. Here and there one of them gazes over the country-side, with eyes for the beauty of the view.

"Sure, I never thought England was like this," says a New Brunswicker. "I always imagined England was all built up; I don't think there'd be fields and sheep and trees. I guess I'd like to have a good look around England when this war's through."

The real excitement of the day is that of the scouts who crawl round cornfields, lie in wet ditches, and escape capture by miracles. A scout comes in, galloping, pulls up beside the officer who sent him out, and reports. He wastes no time in saluting, but just shakes his head and says: "Nothin' doin'." There is no excess of ceremony, but the Canadian officers and men understand and respect each other's worth.

It is a fine sight to see these Canadian brigades march past on the Downs, for there are no regiments in the British army which march better, and that is saying a great deal. You can see that every man of them is proud that he is a Canadian, and means to make everybody proud of Canada.

Like their cousins, the Americans, the Canadian soldiers have a well-formed souvenir habit. They love spoons, old Sheffield plate tankards, table forks—any little thing to remind them of their visit to England.

"I think the real reason why that king chained Bibles in the churches," a Kentish sexton said, "was that he knew the Canadians would be coming."

"Well," replied a Canadian soldier, I guess I'd like the chain too."

Many of them will either take living souvenirs back to Canada, or they will come and settle in England when the war is over. All the girls for miles around have engagement rings.

The members of the Executive Committee, as well as the three representatives of each of the affiliated societies of the local council will be expected to be present to take an active part in the meeting.

Important plans for the winter's work will be discussed. Among other things delegates must be chosen to represent the local council at the annual meeting of the national council to be held in Toronto from October 26th to 28th.

The Marchioness of Aberdeen is coming to Toronto especially to be present at this meeting, as she is the council's advisory president, and a cable has been received from her saying that she will be glad to be present at a reception to be tendered to her at the Toronto council on October 19th.

Surgeons Make a New Jaw For Ossified Man

WASHINGTON, Sept. 29.—The cure for the "solid ivory" skull has been discovered in this city. Five physicians of the staff of the Emergency Hospital recently performed an operation by which the ossified jaw of Iacono Ernest was reshaped and an artificial joint for the lower maxillary was chiseled out.

Nine weeks ago the Italian's jaws suddenly clamped shut. He suffered no pain and the first supposition—that he was suffering from tetanus—was found to be erroneous. So tightly were the jaws locked together that it was necessary to break two of the man's teeth to feed him. He was taken to the hospital, where it was found that the bones of the upper and lower jaw had become a solid structure.

Bishop O'Brien Presented Prizes to Winning Pupils

Interesting Event at St. Alphonsus Lyceum Last Night—Diplomas for High School and Music Students — Special Prizes to Most Successful.

ENJOYABLE PROGRAMME

The annual concert by the pupils of the Sisters of St. Joseph, St. Mary's Convent, was held in St. Alphonsus Lyceum last night. In addition to the musical programme there was also presentation of prizes and diplomas won at the Junior Normal entrance examinations, and the diplomas for successful students of music. Without any previous announcement other than to the children in the schools, the Lyceum was crowded to the last seat with relatives and friends of the pupils.

His Lordship Bishop O'Brien made the various presentations at the same time, extending to the young people his heartiest congratulations upon the successes they had already attained, and a helpful encouragement to them to persevere in their future endeavors. He then presented the following Junior Normal scholarships and certificates won by pupils of St. Peter's High School at the mid-summer examinations, also the Commercial diplomas and prizes to the children making the highest standing at the Entrance examinations:

Scholarships and Certificates.

Praised the Teachers.

Bishop O'Brien paid a tribute to the success-ful efforts of the Sisters, of their ardent devotion to the welfare of the pupils, both in the new Continuation Classes at St. Peter's School and in the music studies at the Convent. The results of their efforts this year and in past years, he said, was a striking evidence of the attention they had directed to the children placed in their care.

Rev. Dean McColl also spoke words of encouragement to the young folks, and Rev. J. J. O'Brien acknowledged Bishop O'Brien's interest in the general development of the children.

Miss McDonald's Success.

Among the students of music who were honoured last night, Miss Margaret McDonald, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry McDonald, Charlotte Street, was probably the most notable. In addition to her diploma which she won with first-class honours she received a gold medal, presented by Bishop O'Brien, who paid her special commendation and congratulation upon her advanced success. She received a beautiful bouquet of roses from the Kitchener Red Cross League, presented by little Dorothy Knox, and another bouquet from Mr. T. P. Lancaster, editor of the Havelock Standard. A number of Miss McDonald's Havelock friends attended the exercises. Thus, in addition to the recognition of her musical talent and efficiency there were tributes to her winning personality.

SOLDIER TELLS OF THE BRITISH ADVANCE

LONDON, September 29.—A wounded soldier has given the following account of the British advance:

"At 4 a.m. our heavy guns started a furious bombardment and our small quick-firing guns just behind us opened a point blank fusillade against the trenches opposite, fifty yards away. It literally swept the German parapet. This lasted fifteen minutes. A sharp, fierce barking of our own quick-firers blazing away just a foot above our heads as we crouched down tight in the muddy trenches seemed to drive us mad. I can hardly tell what it felt like. It seems now like a nightmare. I suppose that I was half mad. It was about 4.20 o'clock when the word 'stand by' was passed along. You just pass it along and the order flies down the line of trenches in a few seconds. I felt all stiff and rigid. I remember fixing my bayonet. Then someone said: 'Prepare to charge.' I repeated it to the next chap in a funny squeaking voice. It did not seem like me talking. Then there seemed a pause. I sort of prayed that something would stop the next order. You can't think properly. You just try to pull yourself together. Then suddenly when I thought that it would not happen, everything was shouting 'Go!' and we were all climbing over trench sandbags, rushed forward for a few yards and then fell down in a slush mire, where I saw others dropping, then forward again till we were now within ten yards of the trench. 'Charge!' shouted the officers all along the line, and we all yelled. It was an awful din, everybody yelling themselves hoarse. I remember standing on top of a tumbled down parapet. It was a mass of earth, torn sandbags and pieces of barbed wire. I saw two Germans. They seemed to be hesitating whether to throw up their hands or shoot. Then I wanted to kill a man. A chap does see red. I remember vividly that impelling desire to slog one, I struck with my bayonet and pulled the trigger at the same time, and the other fellow, I just bayoneted him, too.

NO FIGHT IN ENEMY

"We took that first trench without casualty. There was not any fight in the poor beggars. They were all doddering. I began to cool down a bit and the order came along to build a head cover and to hold the trench. We did this by bumping a sandbag across the trench and putting it up the other side. The Germans were now opening fire on us from their second line of rapid-fire and machine guns. We stuck to it for ten minutes, and then were scrambling forward again. Meanwhile during the wait bombing parties had crept forward and were giving the Germans beans. We took all the cover we could, crept along traverses and up communicating trenches, and then when we got within a dozen yards we did it all over again. That yelling, earsplitting charge! I saw three snipers huddled around a machine gun. They were shouting something. I put it across the three of them, and just then I got hit with a piece of shrapnel. I went down and did not get up again till I was hauled back to the first aid, some hours later, but I had heard that our chaps who had gone forward had captured the third line of trenches. They say the fighting there was worse than ever, because the Germans had managed to get up some reinforcements but I shall never forget the effect of the Lloyd-George Specials upon the first German trenches. We had to stand on dead Germans while we rested there and trample over them on our charge for the second line."

"Don't I know every one of the tricks of your trade?" said the new boarder with considerable heat. "Do you think I have lived in boarding houses 15 years for nothing?" "Well," replied the landlady, icily, "I shouldn't be at all surprised." —Tid-Bits.

ENGLISH GROW MORE WHEAT

Plow Pasture Land and Cut Down the Vegetable Crop.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 29.—A general review of agricultural conditions in England forms the subject of a special report from Consul General Skinner at London, showing how England has managed the war necessity for producing food within her own boundaries.

There appears to have been in England no concerted plan like that of Germany for making every foot of soil produce food, but by plowing pasture land and cutting down vegetable crops more wheat was sown than last year. There was an increase of 362,000 acres in the total of wheat land.

In all there were 2,020,250 acres in wheat, which makes an increase of about 10 per cent. and is perhaps one twenty-fifth of the acreage of wheat in the United States last year.

To get the land for the excess wheat crop barley was cut down by 273,000 acres, and rye, of which ordinarily but little is raised, was also cut down. The aggregate of grazing land has fallen off by 450,000 acres. The turnip crop was reduced by 113,000 acres, and peas and beans fell off by 74,000 acres. Potatoes increased by a little less than 2,000 acres. The wheat crop was hurt by wet weather in the Spring, and yields have been only fair.

NORWEGIANS HUNGRY, BUT PILING UP GILD.

Scarcity of Food Alarms the Nation and Prices Soar, While Banks Gain Millions in Deposits

CHRISTIANIA, Norway, Sept. 29—Something very close to a panic is spreading over Norway and Sweden as a result of the alarming scarcity of provisions and the unprecedented prices which are demanded for the simplest kind of food. Norway is on the point of following Sweden's lead in prohibiting the export of all provisions.

The advance in prices in Norway is approximately the same as in Sweden, but in some cases it has been even more marked. Herring, which is one of the main articles of food among the peasant population, are from 2 to 4½ and 5 cents apiece, and the price of oatmeal is 250 per cent. higher than it was before the war. Meat prices have reached the highest level ever known in Norway.

However, Norway's economic and financial condition is better than before the war. Norway's tremendous exports, while they have drained the country of necessary provisions for home consumption and carried masses of the people to the verge of starvation, have brought a tremendous amount of money into the country.

The Bank of Norway—the Government's Bank—had a year ago $20,000,000 in gold in its vaults. To-day it has $70,000,000. A year ago it had issued paper money to the extent of $5,500,000 beyond its deposits, while to-day with the same amount of paper currency in circulation, it has a reserve of $33,000,000.

Deposits in private banks are at present $30,000,000 greater than a year ago.

Pte. Bert. Beach, Brother of Mr. B. M. Beach of This City, is About to Leave For the Front

Mrs. Dermansen of Lima, Ont., sister of Mr. B M Beach of this city, has received the following interesting account of a phenomenon that was recorded in Lima some days ago. On her way to Peterborough Mrs. Dermansen wrote home to Hamilton, where her sister was to spend the week-end. Pte. Bert Beach of the Machine Gun Section, who is about to leave for the front.

The item recited as follows:—

[illegible] the morning of [illegible] from [illegible] saw a strange phenomenon in the western skies. Instead of the usual brilliance of dawn, there appeared a strange, yellowish appearance such as might be caused by the fumes from a sulphur fire. No sun was visible, but on the eastern horizon appeared two [illegible] rainbows. Lima, Ont., was directly under the effect.

The strange portent was visible for about an hour, when one of the double rainbows disappeared. There appeared a [illegible] rainbow. It was not exactly the reproduction of the Holy Cross, but more of an "X" being tilted to one side. Superstitious persons began to have all sorts of beliefs and many did not return to their beds after witnessing the unusual sight.

Shortly after the appearance of the phenomenon, the skies again cleared, the yellowish atmosphere disappeared, and the rainbows withdrew. The upper rainbow first went out of sight, then the lower. A mirage and some sort of a cross with the sun and moon was attributed by astronomers to the strange condition.

Like Time and Tide.

Two Irishmen sallied forth one day in search of sport. They were armed with gun and huge game bag, and as it was their first venture at shooting they were tremendously keen.

Suddenly Meehan spotted a bird, and, taking very careful aim, prepared to fire the fatal shot. Then Fergus seized him by the arm, frantically crying:

"For the mercy's sake don't fire, Meehan! Sure and you've forgotten to load yer gun!"

"That's as it may be, me lad," retorted Meehan, "but me I must! Begorrah, the hurrud won't wait!"

ACCOUNT OF A VISIT TO THE ITALIAN FRONT

LONDON, Sept. 9—The correspondent of the Daily Chronicle sends the following account of a visit to the Italian front in the Trentino, dated Rocca Pietora, Agordo Valley, Sept. 2.

Our hill was a pigmy contrasted with the giants of the mountain family that shut us in on the right and the left. In our front a rolling valley, with a verdure as green as the artists brush of Nature ever painted, swept away northward, ending at the foot of the towering Col di Lana, the centre of the Austrian position at this point.

Where the valley flattened out, the sun glistened on the white walled and roofless houses of the destroyed village of Pieve de Livinallongo—burned by the enemy in his retreat.

The Col di Lana runs up to a point, a round, blunted point, covered with a sparse vegetation. Sentinel-like, beside the Col stands a colossus of gray dolomite granite, with rough-hewn sides and serrated crest.

The Col di Lana, which is over 7,000 feet high, slopes away gently toward the west, and loses itself in the Valley of Livinallongo. On the south and south-west the faces of the Col are thickly wooded. As their lower slopes; beyond the 5,000-foot line there are no trees, the mountain sides are bare and bald as if some Brobdingnagian scythe had swept across them.

"On the lower west side of the mountain is a natural, cupola-shaped protuberance, a supporting point in the Austrian defensive line.

"The Austrian trenches were clearly visible without the aid of field glasses.

"Starting from below the summit of the Col di Lana they bend away westward and downward, connecting with the convexity which some one has nick-named 'Napoleon's Hat.'

A Strange Warfare.

"There is something unreal, uncanny about modern warfare as it is conducted to-day among the Trentino Alps. The men in the trenches high up on the shell-torn sides of the Col di Lana see each other occasionally, when they emerge from their burrows and come to grips in the open.

"Then it is rarely rifle, it is chiefly bayonet, but frequently cold steel is replaced by the deadly hand grenade.

"When the Italians won their way up this stubbornly contested hill, capturing trench line after trench line, the Austrians invariably showered hand grenades upon the stormers—without, however, arresting their progress. With the enemy, at all events, the rifle as a lethal weapon in trench warfare seems to be falling into desuetude. A bullet is an uncertain missile. It has been calculated that where one strikes home a good twoscore will often miss the average human target, so the hand grenade here—as in Flanders and in the trenches of the Dardanelles—after a good century and a half of oblivion, is coming into its own again.

"If the infantryman on the Italian side has an occasional peep at his enemy and sees him in the flesh and vice versa the artillerymen posted among the rocky crags of the Trentino, be he Italian or Austrian, can make no such boast. From a carefully concealed position behind some high hill he shoots at an unseen enemy often ten or twelve miles away, whose guns are half buried behind some other hill. There is no smoke, no flash to indicate the whereabouts of the battery engaged in this high-angle fire, and the track of the arriving shell can be but gauged approximately.

"I realized all this and much more as I crept on all fours into a rock-hewn, rock-roofed dugout which served as the chief observation post of the officer commanding the artillery in this zone of operations.

"I might have stumbled on the post had a dozen times without suspecting its existence so well is it concealed. By glueing one's eyes to a narrow peephole one looked across to the valley to the Austrian position on the Col di Lana.

"Half a dozen telephone wires led into a second dugout. Here sat the second in command, dictating his chief's orders to the battery commander many miles away. On the surface about the dugout and its annex not a single living being was to be seen. There was an awe-inspiring, mysterious silence over all. It was hard to believe that this was war and that soon the air would be rent with the crack and roar of deep-throated monsters, whose voice would carry death to the Austrian soldiers in the trenches of the Col di Lana.

"The Austrian guns at Cherz, to the west of the Col di Lana, had been busy that morning searching vainly for the Italian position. Now it was the turn of the Italian gunners. 'You are just in time to see something' said the Italian commandant, an old acquaintance from myself by his side in our narrow rock chamber. He spoke a few words in a low tone. 'Range so and so with common shell. Begin!'

Orders to the Battery.

"The order was repeated in the telephone box and then was flashed over the wire by the officer operator to the battery commander far away. Five seconds had barely elapsed when a shell cleft the air from behind the hills and exploded between the first and second line of Austrian trenches, raising a great column of brown earth where it had landed.

"'That's good, but lower and to the right and left,' commanded the officer.

"The telephone operator spoke again, the guns thundered anew, and this time so remarkably accurate was the shooting that six shells struck full in the first Austrian trench, twisting and tearing the concrete and earth-banked parapet as if it had been hit by an earthquake. It must have gone hard with the soldiers who were in the trench at the time.

"The rain of common shell continued, and the Italian commandant observing a movement among the garrison of the trench, who were running in a crouching attitude along the uncovered communication ways toward the second line of trenches, gave a one worded order. 'Shrapnel!' And the shrapnel, too, arrived quickly with deadly precision and overtook many of the fleeing Austrians before they could gain the sought-for cover.

"And so the artillery fire went on until the sleep sides of the Col di Lana were honey-combed with gaping holes. All this time the Austrians gave no sign. But when the Italian fire ceased the enemy's guns from the neighborhood of Cherz replied vigorously, but wildly.

"Evidently the Austrian commander was angry because of the effectiveness of the Italian fire against his trenches, and sought to silence the offending guns. His shells spread themselves over a radius of many miles, dropping into the valleys behind, where there was nothing to hit worth hitting.

"On our homeward path the Austrian guns, which had in the meantime become silent, renewed their spasmodic fire, their missiles tumbling over hilltops and down into deep valleys in a casual sort of way which made it necessary sometimes to have a nice-sensing recess at hand in which to abide until the shelling blew over.

"And this is war artillery war as it is waged from day to day in the Northern Trentino."

ALLIES' OFFENSIVE NEARING ITS OBJECTIVE

GERMAN LOSSES IN RECENT FIGHTING OVER 150,000

ALLIES ARE SWEEPING CLOSER TO VIMY HEIGHTS AND BASENCOURT RAILWAY

Seventh Day of Great Allied Offensive Finds Them Still Gaining---Germans Have Lost 150,000 in Killed, Wounded and Prisoners.

NO ACCURATE ESTIMATE OF ALLIES' LOSSES

LONDON, Oct. 1.—The seventh day of the great Allied offensive on the Western front finds the Allies sweeping closer to Vimy Heights and Basencourt-Challerange Railway, the objective of the French armies in Champagne. Since the first rush of last Saturday, the Germans have lost more than 150,000 men in killed, wounded and prisoners, according to estimates of correspondents at the front.

No accurate estimates of losses suffered by the Allies are obtainable at this time, though the Berlin newspapers report that the Allies have suffered heavily, especially in the fight around Loos.

Paris despatches to-day assert that the French left are now within two miles of Basencourt-Challerange Railway, and that the French gunners have rendered the railway useless to the Germans by the steady streams of shells. The French right is pushing northward toward the highway crossing at Cernay, battling against most stubborn enemy resistance.

CAPTURED 121 GUNS.

PARIS, Oct. 1.—The French have now captured one hundred and twenty-one German guns in the Champagne district alone. The second German line was partially smashed by the Allies' artillery. Annihilation or capture of the Crown Prince's army near Verdun is expected shortly.

PARIS, Oct. 1.—The Chamber of Deputies, in a five-minutes' session yesterday, voted to increase the pay of private soldiers from one cent to five cents per day.

LONDON, Oct. 1.—Col. Shannon, of a Western Canada regiment, is among those wounded in the Canadian contingent at the Dardanelles.

BERLIN, Oct. 1.—The War Office last night admitted the evacuation of Hill 191 to the French, who carried on great flanking operations. Bavarians, under Prince Leopold, repulsed several Russian attacks in the Dvinsk region.

LONDON, Oct. 1. The First Lord of the Admiralty, in the Commons this afternoon, said the reason for not publishing figures on German submarine losses was the desire for absolute precision and impossibility of giving accurate statistics.

OTTAWA, Oct. 1.—It is officially reported that the Second Canadian Contingent is now in the front British trenches.

LONDON, Oct. 1.—Copenhagen advices say Germany admits the loss of forty-seven submarines the last few weeks.

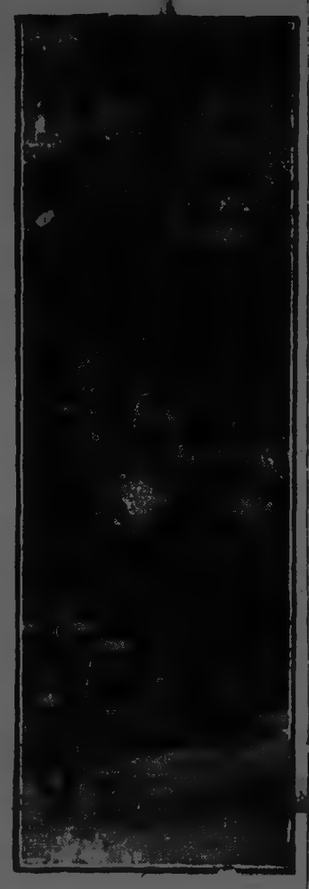
PETROGRAD, Oct. 1.—The Russians have won several minor successes and are again on the offensive against the Germans.

LONDON, Oct. 1.—In another announcement in the Commons, the Government stated that British troops are now within eighty miles of historic Bagdad, Turkey.

LONDON, Oct. 1. The sailing vessel "Helen Benyon" was sunk to-day by a German submarine. The crew was rescued.

ATHENS, Oct. 1.—A French squadron entered the Dardanelles at dawn on Tuesday and bombarded the Turkish shore batteries with great success all day, according to Mytilne despatches to-day.

ROME, Oct. 1.—Admiral Corsi has been appointed Minister of Marine in the Italian Cabinet, succeeding Vice-Admiral Viale, whose resignation was tendered several days ago.



An Anti-Aircraft Gun.—Air raids on Paris by the Germans are scarcer than raids on London, due in part to the effective defence provided by hundreds of anti-aircraft guns in the suburbs of Paris.

Russians Have Gained 25 Miles in Dvinsk Battle

Germans Have Been Forced Back Eight Miles Near Molodechno, According to a Petrograd Report---Terrific Battles Being Fought.

PETROGRAD, Oct. 1.—Territorial gains of considerable extent by the Russians are indicated by the latest information received at the War Office. The Germans have been pushed back from the terminal station at Gluboksi, one the Evientsyany-Gluboki Railway to a point midway to the Vilna-Dvinsk railway. The position thus reached is the station of Postawy, representing a gain of 25 miles. In the district west and south of Molodechno, the Germans have been forced back eight miles across the Lida-Molodechno railway beyond the village of Krewo.

At no part of the northern lines have German gains been announced, although battles of great intensity are being fought on the line from Koziany, on the Divna River, to Krivo, a distance of sixty miles in a straight line. On account of a bend to include the Vilna line to Smorgon, the actual extent of this front is 80 miles.

The Germans have concentrated strong forces along this line, including considerable bodies of troops drawn from the Pripet region.

South of the Pripet the Germans have won a local success at Czeterisk, 20 miles west of the railway junction at Sarny. They appear to have gained control of the Styr to a point south of Lutsk, which lately has been the scene of heavy fighting and now appears to be in the hands of the Germans.

A strong effort also is being made by the Germans in the region of Novo Alexinier, 15 miles north of Tarnopel. The Russian authorities believe this movement represents an attempt to reach the great highway between Kremenetz and Ostrog. Further south, on the stripet, west of Tarnopol, the Russians have had the best of the fighting.

HINDENBURG'S BIG PLAN.

LONDON, Oct. 1.—Reviewing the situation, the Petrograd correspondent of the Times says that, according to prevailing opinion in Russian military circles, Field Marshal Von Hindenburg, regardless of the menace to Germany's western front, has brought up fresh forces at Osmiany (south-west of Vileika and Smorgon) and is preparing another blow at the Russian right wing in order to sweep south-eastward in an effort to bar the route of retirement for the Muscovite Baronovichi army.

For this reason, the correspondent says, the general staff emphasizes the importance of the line drawn from Vileika to Ivanels, thirty-five miles from Minsk, as Von Hindenburg's real objective. The crossing of the Styr by large Teutonic forces and the revival of the offensive at Kolki also constitute a new and formidable factor with which General Ivanoff must reckon.

LIVERPOOL, Oct. 1.—The White Star liner Baltic arrived from New York to-day.

Bombarded The Enemy Hangar

CONSTANTINOPLE, Oct. 1. — A Turkish aeroplane bombarded the enemy hangar on Lemnos Island. The Turks surprised the enemy trenches in Suvla Bay region and silenced enemy batteries near Ari Burnu.

Charged With Fraud In Securing Passport

NEW YORK, Oct. 1.—Andrew D. Meloy, who was arrested by department of justice agents when he arrived on the steamer Noorw Amsterdam was arraigned before United States Commissioner Houghton, charged with conspiring with Franz Rintelen, a German, who merchant to defraud the United States government in securing a passport for Rintelen.

Meloy, who said he had recently been engaged in promoting Mexican enterprises, was held in $10,000 bail for a hearing October 7. Meloy was taken off the steamer Rotterdam by British authorities at Falmouth. He had several weeks ago.

Hattie Bieple, Meloy's secretary, also taken off the Noorw Amsterdam was held as a material witness.

Meloy, his secretary, Hattie Bieple and Franz Rintelen came to N. Y. Gaschen were taken off the steamship Noorw Amsterdam at Kirkwall by British military authorities. Vigneri Rintelen was sent to an English detention camp, where he still is.

Meloy and Miss Bieple were informed to-day of the decision of the department of justice.

Rintelen sailed on the Noordam with a passport stating he was a citizen of Switzerland. Department officials admit that before Rintelen secured this passport he had secured passports under three assumed names and Gaschen Meloy is alleged to have written a letter on file at August 1 stating that he had known Gaschen for a long time and knew him to be a citizen of Switzerland.

PETROGRAD, Oct. 1.—At a meeting of the cabinet a preliminary political censorship of the press was informally proposed by the Minister of the Interior, but was rejected by a majority. The question was, however suspended, as there is a strong

KITCHENER TELLS LABOUR MEN THAT CONSCRIPTION'S COMING

British War Office Sends Message to Recruiting Stations to "Buck Up" Enlistment—Falling Off Causes Concern, Says Official Telegram—Human Wastage in New Offensive Great

LONDON, Oct. 1.—Conscription is drawing nearer with each fresh charge of British troops against the German works in Northern France. The successes scored by the allies in their great offensive increases, rather than diminishes the possibility of compulsory service. Something must be done to replace the men who are dying or going out of action in what may prove to be the greatest battle of the war.

Lord Kitchener, it was learned today, put the situation frankly before a conference of Labor Union officials in an address on Tuesday. The British army, the war lord said, is now of the required size, but the most serious problem is the keeping up of a sufficient supply of trained men to replace the human wastage in the fighting in France and at the Dardanelles. He said he preferred the voluntary system of obtaining armies, but he told the Labor officials with the utmost frankness that the present recruiting is wholly inadequate to fill the gaps that will be made in the British armies.

Lord Kitchener said he did not want to press compulsory service except as a last resort. His personal plan, he said, was to divide the country into districts and to call upon each district for a specified number of men. If the quota was not forthcoming by voluntary enlistment, he said, the Government should then resort to the draft among men eligible for military service along the same plan used in the United States during the civil war.

Speech Made an Impression.

Kitchener's speech made a deep impression on the union heads. As a result, it was announced to-day, the laborites will conduct vigorously a campaign of their own to secure recruits among the workers instead of merely assisting in other recruiting campaigns.

This, seemingly, is the feeling everywhere in Government circles. If conscription is found necessary, it is now likely that it will be reached by gradual stages, calculated not to antagonize the pubic, and profiting by the wave of patriotism that has swept the country since the reports of British successes in France and Flanders.

The War Office to-day sent the following telegram to all recruiting stations:

"Falling off in receiving recruits recently causes Kitchener and War Office greatest concern."

In this message is not productive of results, the Government will consider at once an intermediary plan along the line suggested by Lord Kitchener in his conference with the labor leads. If conscription is found inevitable it is probable that the Government will limit itself at the start to unmarried men between certain ages.

600,000 IN SERB ARMY.

Includes All Able-bodied Males from 18 to 60 Years of Age.

NEW YORK, Sept. 30.—Serbia has an army of about 600,000 men in the field to resist invasion of that country by the Teutonic allies, according to information received by the Serbian Agricultural Relief Committee from Prof. Losanitch, of the University of Belgrade.

The professor estimates that Serbia has lost about 130,000 men since the war began, and that about one in every five who were wounded died. The army includes, he says, practically all the able-bodied men between the ages of 18 and 50 years.

The money sent to Serbia by the Relief Committee was used to purchase farming implements and materials, and these were distributed in the districts devastated by the war, with the result that part of them is now under cultivation.

Sanitary conditions in the army are now normal, and British and French missions have inoculated the whole army against typhoid and cholera. The number of soldiers who have been crippled is large, and many of them are homeless.

BIG CHAMPAGNE CROP

EPERNAY, Oct. 1.—While in other parts of France the vintage is being carried out under more or less normal circumstances, the difficulties in Champagne are very great owing to the fact that the battle line dominates part of the vineyards. Still it is thought the crop may be 30 to 100 per cent more than last year's.

An Exalted Yawn.

"When I went to church last Sunday," said a young woman visiting Washington, "I sat directly behind a high executive officer for whom I have always had the greatest veneration and whom I have regarded as almost more than mortal. I tried hard not to be rude and stare at him too much, but I could not help my eyes wandering toward him occasionally. I glanced at him just once near the end of the sermon, and what do you think he was doing? He was yawning, and he yawned a large and vigorous yawn, which came to him so suddenly that he did not have time to hide it behind his hand. I must confess that I was delighted. My veneration for the executive officer is just as great as it ever was, but I am glad I found out with my own eyes that he is subject to ordinary human weaknesses and cannot help yawning during a sermon."—Washington Star.

Heat Tests of Clothing.

An interesting experiment made in June by a physician proved conclusively that for the sake of coolness only white should be worn in hot weather. The physician spread out in an intense sunshine a large piece of white cloth, another of dark yellow, another of light green, another of dark green, another of blue and another of black. Then, with the help of six thermometers, he made the following table of the various heats which each color received from the sunlight: White, 100 degrees; dark yellow, 140 degrees; light green, 155 degrees; dark green, 168 degrees; blue, 198 degrees; black, 208 degrees. Thus the physician proved that in July or August the man in white is a little less than twice as cool as the man in blue and a little more than twice as cool as the man in black.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

The Bellbird.

The most remarkable thing in connection with the bellbird is its powerful voice. It utters a clear metallic note that can be heard at a distance of three miles. Its noise is like that produced by a blacksmith striking his anvil. Sometimes it repeats its notes in quick succession, sometimes at fairly long intervals. There is no mistake about the voice of this bird; it is loud and piercing and would be heard above the din produced by every inmate of the zoo raising its voice at once.

Except for a space of naked skin on the throat and around the eyes, which during the breeding season is of green color, this bird is pure white. The contrast between the sexes in the bellbirds is extreme, for, while the male is pure white, the female is brownish green. Darwin refers to the bellbird when he points out that "white is a very rare color in terrestrial species of moderate size and inoffensive habits."—Pall Mall Gazette.

In a Bad Way.

There is a Pennsylvania divine who is not averse to telling a good story at his own expense.

Once in addressing a mission meeting in Philadelphia which was attended mainly by sailors the good man had sought to adapt his remarks to his hearers by using nautical similes, and in so doing he ventured somewhat beyond his depth.

"And now what shall we do—what shall we do?"

"You will soon be rid of me for ever, Mr. Smart. Will you bear with me patiently for a little while longer?" She seemed strangely subdued.

"I can bear with you much easier than I can bear the thought of being rid of you," I said in a very low voice. She pressed my clumsy hand fiercely, and I felt no pain.

"You have been too good to me," she said in a very small voice. "Some day, when I am out of all this trouble, I may be able to tell you how much I appreciate all you have done for me."

An almost irresistible—I was about to say ungovernable—impulse to seize her in my arms came over me, but I conquered it and rushed after Mr. Bangs as blind as a bat and reeling for a dozen steps or more. It was a most extraordinary feeling.

Bangs was chattering in his glib English fashion as we descended to my study, but I did not hear half that he said.

One remark of his brought me rather sharply to my senses.

"If all goes well," he was saying, "she should be safely away from here on the 14th. That leaves less than ten days more, sir, under your hospitable roof."

"Less than ten days," I repeated. This was the 5th of the month. "If all goes well. Less than ten days."

Again I passed a sleepless night.

She came to visit me at 12 o'clock the next day. I was alone in the study. Poopendyke was showing Mr. Bangs over the castle.

"I came to dress your hand for you," she said as I helped her down from Red Ludwig's frame.

Now, I have neglected to mention that the back of my hand was swollen to enormous proportions, an unlovely thing.

"Thank you," I said, shaking my head, "but it is quite all right. Britton attended to it this morning. It is good of you to think about it, countess."

"You will never let me do anything for you," she said. Her eyes were velvety. "It isn't fair. I have exacted so much from you, and"—

"And I have been most brutal and unfeeling in many of the things I have said to you," said I despairingly. "I am ashamed of the nasty wounds I have given you. My state of repentance allows you to exact whatsoever you will of me, and when all is said and done I shall still be your debtor. Can you, will you pardon the coarse opinions of a conceited ass? I assure you I am not the man I was when you first encountered me."

She smiled. "For that matter, I am not the same woman I was, Mr. Smart. You have taught me three things, one of which I may mention—the subjection of self. That, with the other two, has made a new Aline Titus of me. I hope you may be pleased with the transfiguration."

"I wish you were Aline Titus," I said, struck by the idea.

"You may at least be sure that I shall not remain the Countess Turnowsy long, Mr. Smart," she said, with a very puzzling expression in her eyes.

My heart sank. "But I remember hearing you say not so very long ago that you would never marry again," I railed.

She regarded me rather oddly for a moment, "I am very, very glad that you are such a steady, sensible, practical man. A vapid, impressionable youth, during this season of propinquity, might have been so foolish as to fall in love with me, and that would have been too bad."

I think I glared at her. "Then—then, you are going to marry some one?"

She waited a moment, looking straight into my eyes. "Yes," she said, and a delicate pink stole into her cheek, "I am going to marry some one."

I muttered something about congratulating a lucky dog, but it was all very hazy to me.

"Don't congratulate him yet," she cried, the flush deepening. "I may be a very, very great disappointment to him and a never ending nuisance."

"I'm sure you will—will be all right," I floundered. Then I resorted to gaiety. "You see, I've spent a lot of time trying to—to make another woman of you, and so I'm confident he'll find you quite satisfactory."

She laughed gaily. "What a goose you are!" she cried.

I flushed painfully, for, I give you my word, it hurt to have her laugh at me. She sobered at once.

"Forgive me," she said very prettily, and I forgave her. "Do you know we've never given the buried treasure another thought?" she went on, abruptly changing the subject. "Are we not to go searching for it?"

"But it isn't there," said I, steeling my heart against the longing that tried to creep into it. "It's all balderdash."

She rested her warm red lips "Have you lost interest in it so soon?"

"Of course, I'll go any time you say," said I, lifelessly. "It will be a lark, at all events."

"Then we will go this very afternoon," she said, with enthusiasm.

My ridiculous heart gave a great leap. "This very afternoon," I said, managing my voice very well.

She arose. "Now I must scurry away. It would not do for Mr. Bangs to find me here with you. He would be shocked."

I walked beside her to the chair that stood below the portrait of Ludwig the Red and took her hand to assist her in stepping upon it.

"I sincerely hope this chap you're going to marry, countess, may be the best fellow in the world," said I, still clasping her hand.

She had one foot on the chair as she half turned to face me.

"He is the best fellow in the world," she said.

I gulped. "I can't tell you how happy I shall be if you—if you find real happiness. You deserve happiness—and love."

"I want to be happy! I want to be loved!"

She gripped my hand fiercely. "I want to be happy! I want to be loved! Oh, I want to be loved!" she cried, so passionately that I turned away, unwilling to be a witness to this outburst of feeling on her part. She slipped her hand out of mine and a second later was through the frame. I had a fleeting glimpse of a slim, adorable ankle. "Goodby!" she called back in a voice that seemed strangely choked. The spring in the gold mirror clicked. A draft of air struck me in the face. She was gone.

"What an infernal fool you've been," I said to myself as I stood there staring at the black hole in the wall. Then I gently, even caressingly, swung old Ludwig the Red into place. There was another click. The incident was closed.

A very few words are sufficient to cover the expedition in quest of the legendary treasures of the long dead barons. Mr. Bangs accompanied us. Britton carried a lantern, and the three Schmicks went along as guides. We found nothing but cobwebs.

"Conrad," said I as we emerged from the last of the underground chambers, "tell me the truth. Was there ever such a thing as buried treasure in this abominable hole?"

"Yes, mein herr," he replied, with an apologetic grin, "but I think it was discovered three years ago by Count Hohendahl and Count Tarnowey."

We stared at him. "The deuce you say!" cried I, with a quick glance at the countess. She appeared to be as much surprised as I.

"They searched for a month," explained the old man guiltily. "They found something in the walls of the second tier. I cannot say what it was, but they were very, very happy, my lady." He now addressed her. "It was at the time they went away and did not return for three weeks, if you remember the time."

"Remember it!" she cried bitterly. "Too well, Conrad."

She afterward invited Mr. Bangs and me to dine with her that evening. She also asked Mr. Poopendyke later on.

Poopendyke! An amazing, improbable idea entered my head. Poopendyke!

CHAPTER XVIII.

I Traverse the Night.

THE next day I was very busy, preparing for the journey by motor to the small station down the line where I was to meet Mrs. Titus and her sons. It seemed to me that every one who knew anything whatever about the arrangements went out of his way to fill my already rattled brained head with advice.

Just before leaving the castle for the ferry trip across the river that evening I was considerably surprised to have at least a dozen brand new trunks delivered at my landing stage. It is needless to say that they turned out to be the property of Mrs. Titus, expressed by grande vitesse from some vague city in the north of Germany. They all bore the name "Smart, U. S. A.," painted in large white letters on each end, and I was given to understand that they belonged to my own dear mother, who at that moment, I am convinced, was sitting down to luncheon in the Adirondacks, provided her habits were as regular as I remembered them to be.

I set forth with Britton at 9 o'clock in a drizzling rain. At half past 11 o'clock we were skidding over the cobblestones of the darkest streets I have ever known, careening like a drunken sailor, but not half as surely, headed for the Staatsbahnhof, to which we had been directed by an object in a raincoat who must have been a policeman, but who looked more like a hydrant. It was pouring pitchforks.

"Britton," said I wearily, "have you ever seen anything like it?"

"Once before, sir," said he. "Niagara falls, sir."

At half past 12 the train from Munich drew up at the station, panted awhile in evident disdain and then moved on.

Appeals to Everybody.

Many people overlook the advantage of newspaper advertising. If the farmer has stock to sell, he can find buyers, if he wants to buy, he can have the sellers come to him. When anything is lost or found, when help is wanted, or a position is sought; when any article from a baby carriage to a pet fox could be exchanged to advantage, a small advertisement in the newspaper will accomplish the desired result.

Nearly everybody can use the advertising columns to advantage at some time, and every person will profit by reading the advertisements regularly.

"Nothing," replied Tommy.

"Oh, yes, there is," said his mother. "Out with it."

"I've been punished," sobbed Tommy.

"What for?" asked the mother.

"Nothing—"

"Nonsense!" exclaimed his mother. "What is it?"

"Well," halted the boy, "teacher asked us all a question, and I was the only one who could answer it, and she caned me."

"Caned you for your intelligence!" exclaimed mother. "Preposterous! What was the question?"

Judge Hoke of Sandy Bend

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate

When the court at Sandy Bend had been opened in due and legal form Judge Hoke assumed what he considered a proper judicial dignity and said:

"This ar' a case such as we hev never had afore us before, but we think we kin straighten out the kinks and do justice to all. Three days ago thar red headed critter over thar, who calls hisself Tom Jones, come humpin' down the trail from Big Find to ax if thar was any law in this kentry and to holler fur justice. He had a wife up thar at Big Find. He went home one evenin' to find that she had skipped with another man. The name of that man was Abe Skinner, and that's him over thar with the broken nose.

"What ginerally happens out yere in this land o' gold and hard times when our wife runs away? If we ain't mighty glad of it, which we mostly be, we git on to her tracks and foller 'em till we overtake her. If she's alone we take her by the ear and lead her back. If she's with a critter we pop him over. Thar ain't no law in the case, but the custom is purty well known. The man who steals another man's wife expects to be popped by the injoored husband, and he likewise expects to pop that same injoored husband if he gits the chance.

"Tom Jones didn't pursoo. Thar was the broad trail before him, and he had guns and knives and a hoss, but he hadn't the sand. He jest comes a humpin' down yere to holler fur the law and shriek fur jestice and to git all men, includin' this court, down on him fur his doggoneness. His wife, who ar' that female over thar with a mouth as big as a bar'l, had gone off with Abe Skinner as aforesaid and had him headed for this very camp. As they flies from Big Find they meets up with Jim Hope, who's the cuss over thar with the game leg and one eye gone. Jim he stops 'em and sez:

"'Abe Skinner, what you got thar?'

"'A female.'

"'Who is she?'

"'Tom Jones' wife.'

"'And what you a-doin' with her?'

"'A-runnin' away to Sandy Bend.'

"'Then you needn't go no further. I've been wantin' a wife fur the last six months, and I reckon I'll take her off your hands!'

"Waal," continued his honor, "Jim Hope he had his gun plump on Abe Skinner and his finger on the trigger, and Abe had to give in. This yere court can't larn that the woman objected to the change. On the contrary, thar is evidence that she didn't keer a continental, as Jim Hope is a better lookin' critter than Abe Skinner. The couple heads this way by the trail, while Abe Skinner takes a short cut and arrives fustly and comes to me to yell fur jestice. That's two fellers yellin' fur jestice and a third one with the woman. The woman gits yere in doo time, along with Jim Hope, and over by the creek they meets Joe Scott, who stops to say:

"'Jim Hope, I was jest goin' out to hunt fur one.'

"'What you mean?'

"'I want a female woman fur a wife, and you git down and skip!'

"Thar was a gun on Jim, and he had to give the woman up. This court can't larn that she shed a tear or did any kickin', but Jim he comes whoopin' down to me and wants law and jestice and all that. That makes three of 'em a wantin', and so I tells the constable to arrest Joe and the woman. Yere's four men and one woman, and the law 'pears to be purty badly tangled up. Fustly, Tom Jones, is this woman your wife?'

"Sartin she is," answered Tom.

"'Hev you got the dockyments to prove it?'

"No, but I married her in the Injun Territory a y'ar ago."

"Waal, this court has nothin' to do with the Injun Territory, and that marriage won't stand yere unless the woman wants it to. Mrs. Jones, as I will call you, what made ye run away from Tom?'

"Got tired of him," replied the woman.

"Do you prefer Jim Hope or Joe Scott?'

"I ain't pertickler."

"That makes the case easier. Hank Williams, stand up."

Hank stood up and proved to be a middle aged man of decent appearance.

"Hank, d'ye want a wife?" asked the court.

"I dew," was the reply.

"Then I'll marry ye to this woman."

"Hank Williams, will ye take this deluded woman to be yer lawful wife?"

"You bet!"

"And will ye cherish and defend her and keep all the other critters off?"

"I will."

"Mrs. Jones, ye hear what the critter sez. Ye may be married, and ye may not be, but this court ain't a-goin' to run any chances of any future rows and killin's. Will ye take Hank for better or worse?"

"Reckon so."

"And will do yer best?"

"Yes."

"Then jine hands. I pronounce ye man and wife, and durn my hide, which pr' the hide of this court, I'll turn out and help hunt down any human critter as tries to come between you and Hank! I now consider that jestice has been done to all hands and all around, and it only remains fur the happy bridegroom to head the purcession to my saloon and treat all hands over the happy event, and thar won't be no ill feelin's and nuthin' to find fault with."

Too Much.

Andrew Carnegie tells a good story illustrating the canniness of the Scot.

An Irish friend had insisted that a Scotchman should stay at his house instead of at a hotel and kept him there for a month, playing the host in detail, even to treating him to sundry visits to the theater, paying the cab fares and the rest. When the visitor was returning home the Irishman saw him to the station, and they went together to have a last cigar.

"Now, look there," said the Scot. "I'll hae nae mairc o' this. Here ye've been keepin' me at your hoose for a month an' payin' for a' the amusements an' calsh an' so on. I tell you I'll stan' nae mair o' it! We'll just hae a toss for this one."—Harper's Weekly.

Know the Stars in the Dragon?

Winding in and out between the stars of the Great and Little Dipper is the constellation of the Dragon. The tip of the tail lies between the pole star in the Little Dipper and the pointers in the Great Dipper, but much nearer the latter and only a few degrees below the pointers. The rest of the constellation, outlined with faint stars, carves downward and around the Little Dipper, when with a final coil it terminates with the two bright stars Gamma and Beta, which mark the head of the Dragon, or, in fact, its eyes. Aratus in describing the constellations speaks of the Dragon as "with eyes oblique retorted, that askant cast gleaming fire."

Its leading star, Alpha, near the tail of the Dragon and halfway between Mizar (the middle star in the handle of the Great Dipper) and the lowest star in the bowl of the Little Dipper, is known by the name of Thuban. Four thousand years ago it was the pole star.—Mary Proctor in Chicago Tribune.

Does Your Cat Cough?

Poor pussy! As if the immemorial charges against her of keeping us awake o' nights and of eating canary birds whenever she gets the chance were not enough, the doctors have just discovered that for years she has been responsible for the spread of diphtheria. Dr. G. J. Awburn of Manchester, England, having traced an epidemic of this disease in a suburb of that city to a pet cat belonging to one of his patients, has found, after much clever investigation, that all cats are peculiarly susceptible to diphtheritic affections of the throat. He has therefore recently been warning all families who own cats to watch them carefully and if they develop coughs to forbid their being hugged and petted. Dr. Awburn further recommends that if the cough persists and the cat begins to grow thin to have the animal destroyed at once. The only really safe way, he says, is to let the first wheeze be pussy's death warrant.—New York World.

The business man was sitting in his office thinking of starting for home when a suspicious looking person came in with a leather bag in his hand.

"If you don't give me £5," said the visitor, coming at once to the point, "I will drop this on the floor."

The business man was cool. "What is in it?" he asked.

"Dynamite," was the brief reply.

"What will it do if you drop it?"

"Blow you up!"

"Drop it!" was the instant command. "My wife told me when I left home this morning to be sure to send up a bag of flour, and I forgot it. I guess it will take just about as much dynamite as you have there to prepare me for the blowing up I'll get when she sees me!"

"I'm a married man myself," said the dynamiter and quietly slipped out.—Illustrated Bits.

Out of the Schoolroom.

A schoolboy was asked to give some information in regard to the Cary sisters, the once famous New England poets, and he said of them:

"The Cary sisters were two poets who lived in Massachusetts most of the time. They went to New York, where they made many fast friends. Their fastest friend was John G. Whittier."

At the time of the Longfellow centennial, when the school children were writing so much about him, one boy wrote:

"Longfellow's poems were mostly of his own composure, but he wrote 'Tails of a Wayside Inn,' where others did the talking. He was the poet laureate of our country and was a crackerjack when it came to real poetry."—Lippin

Amazing Appetites.

If a baby had the appetite of a young potato beetle it would eat from fifty to one hundred pounds of food every twenty-four hours. If a horse ate as much as a caterpillar, in proportion to its size, it would consume a ton of hay every twenty-four hours. A caterpillar eats twice its weight of leaves every day; but a potato beetle devours every day at least five times its weight in foliage, every bit of which represents just so much money to the farmer.

The most destructive of all insects, however, is the grasshopper, which, when in good health, consumes in a day ten times its weight of vegetation. No wonder that whole districts are devastated by its multitudinous swarms.

THE HEART.

How It Acts In Everyday Life.

The human heart, in a healthy man weighs but eleven ounces. It beats from long before birth until death, in an average lifetime, about seven million times, allowing seventy beats to the minute. Every twenty-four hours this slight organ performs labor equivalent to lifting a ton of material eighty feet into the air. If the blood becomes poor, and filled with poisons from diseased kidneys, the heart is not only starved, but poisoned as well. It soon becomes exhausted and unable to meet any extraordinary demand which may be made upon it. Supply pure blood; get the kidneys to working; tone up the feeble stomach! Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery purifies the blood, relieves the kidneys and tones up the alimentary canal. Give the heart the food it needs and it will continue to work till the natural end of life.

Berlin, Ont.—"I have used Dr. Pierce's medicines and found them to give perfect satisfaction. I had a stroke and got very bad. The doctor said I had no blood, my heart got very weak. I finally quit the doctor and began taking Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and Favorite Prescription. When I had taken about five bottles I commenced to notice a marked improvement, and in about one year and a half I was alright, could do my own work. I really think these remedies saved my life as I was in very bad condition.

"I have used 'Pleasant Pellets' in my home for several years and have found them to be good. We keep them in the house all the time. I think I owe my good health of to-day to Dr. Pierce's medicines." Mrs. Henry Harmer, 91 Victoria St.

The modern improvement in pills—Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. They help Nature, instead of fighting with her. Sick and nervous headache, biliousness, costiveness, and all derangements of the liver, stomach and bowels are relieved, prevented, cured.

IN THE SLEEPING CAR.

He Meant Well, but He Tickled the Wrong Toes.

"It's strange how I always manage to get in wrong—not in the wrong berth, just simply in wrong—whenever I travel on a sleeper," remarked Frank B. Duncan of Pittsburg.

"It seldom fails," he went on. "When I get into a Pullman section it's just a question of what's going to happen. I always know it'll be something. Now, take, for instance, the other night when I started here. Right across from me were a nice looking little woman and her small son, a lad perhaps ten years old. I was afraid the kid would turn out to be one of the noisy kind and keep me awake that night, being so close to me. But he was a well behaved little chap, and I slept that night like a top.

"While I was dressing the next morning I could see a little foot sticking out between the curtains across the way. I felt so grateful to the kid for not keeping me awake that I wanted to make friends with him, and I reached over and grabbed one of his toes. 'Wee, wee, wee,' I says, chuckling to myself.

"'Sir-r-r,' I heard a woman's voice reverberate just then, 'will you leave my foot alone?'

"Just then the porter came running up, and before I could explain I heard her telling him that that fellow across the aisle had attempted to get familiar.

"How was I to know she had such a dainty little foot? Oh, well, if it had not been that something else would have happened. I never knew it to fail on a sleeper."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Very often when making a pie the juice from the fruit soaks through the under crust and spoils the whole appearance of it. To prevent this try brushing the crust over with the white of an egg, and you will never be troubled in this way.

It is always wise to boil a new clothesline before using it, as this not only prevents it from stretching, but makes it last much longer. New pegs should be soaked in cold water for a few hours, as this keeps them from splitting.

Submarine Dreadnought on Which Experts Are at Work.

(c) 1915 by N Y HERALD CO

This submarine will have large guns intended for long range fighting. As the submarine has no fighting masts, the range finders will be in aeroplanes at a considerable height, connected with the submarine by wireless. Americans are already at work on this idea. The big guns will not be in the interior of the ship, but will be on the superstructure and will be in self-bailing structures, with light armored gun shields over them. Smaller guns for defence against aeroplanes will be carried. The submarines will be much larger and heavier than the present type. The recent discovery both in the United States and in Europe of steel that will not corrode in water has made it possible to submerge the guns with the bomb without rusting the guns. This does away with the heavy, complicated disappearing gun carriages and strengthens the ship. At present one of the greatest difficulties the navy has to contend with is the periscope, but when the telescope makers really tackle this proposition, as they are beginning to, the periscope will arrive. Engines are at hand, and the rest is easy, at least comparatively so.

GREECE HESITATES, AWED BY MIGHT OF TEUTONS

Correspondent Writes That to the Greek the Allies Seem Far Off.

TEUTONIC ALLIES ARE NEAR AND IMPOSING

(SPECIAL DISPATCH.)

LONDON, Sept. 25.

Greece's view of the war and her disposition to take part in the great conflict are the subject of a letter from an Athens correspondent, who writes that the people of Greece are by no means entirely convinced of the certainty of a victory of the Allies over the Central Powers and Turkey.

"The military achievements of the Austro-German armies," he says, "look rather formidable when viewed from this neutral distance, and the possibility of a dash through Serbia or Roumania, thus creating an unbroken line from Berlin through Vienna and Budapest to Constantinople, is one which must necessarily excite the gravest misgivings in the minds of patriotic Greeks.

"In some circles, therefore, it is argued that Greece would be running very great risks in taking sides against the German Powers and Turkey, who, after their successes in other directions and after establishing their supremacy over the remainder of the Balkan Peninsula, would probably turn and crush the Hellenic kingdom. At such moments, when the timorous Greek regards the prospect of German, Austrian, Hungarian, and Turkish hordes sweeping through the neighboring States, England and France and Russia seem very far away indeed, and the persistent efforts made in Greece to magnify German successes add to the reluctance to intervene in the struggle of giants.

"If this feeling in Greece, which can also be found in other small neutral countries, were fully understood by the Allies and not ignored as one of the unpleasant factors of the general situation, and if a clearer perception of this frame of mind had existed at the beginning of the year, the mistakes made in connection with the initiation of the Dardanelles operations might well have been avoided.

"The doubts which exist regarding the outcome of the war are very largely due to the organized German propaganda carried on so thoroughly since the beginning of the conflict to influence Greek public opinion. This propaganda is similar to that conducted in America, in Holland, in the Scandinavian countries and elsewhere. There are some features of it especially adapted to Greek conditions. Contemplating the effort put forth to inspire the Greek press and to impress Greek public opinion it is wonderful that Mr. Venezelos, standing for a policy that is almost openly anti-Turkish and anti-German, should have been able at the recent elections to obtain such a huge majority in the Chamber of Deputies. For German propaganda has been more discreet in those offices, and the blatant blunders perpetrated in America and Holland seem to have been avoided here.

"The great sympathy for England has been a most important factor in counteracting German machinations. Every Greek is taught as a child to respect the part played by English sympathizers in the struggle in which Greece threw off the Turkish yoke. But the bonds of friendship created by the century-old sympathy have been weakened in some degree by certain events which occurred in 1907. In the early part of that year, when Greece was on the verge of declaring war against Turkey in connection with the Cretan troubles, there was a remarkable demonstration of sympathy with Greece on the part of a number of British public men. A message of sympathy and support, signed by members of Parliament and other prominent men, was sent from London to Athens, and a very general impression was thereby created that if Greece went to war with Turkey she would have the actual as well as the moral support of Great Britain.

"That impression, created by the well meant but unhappy protestations of philHellenic English radicals, was disappointed, and in many circles in Greece England came to be regarded as perfidious Albion. The memory of that period, which is near enough to be fresh in the minds of many Greeks who lived through the bitterness of the crushing defeat inflicted on their country by Turkey in 1897, has been very cleverly exploited by German propagandists in recent months, unscrupulously, of course, since England cannot be held responsible for the errors of a few sentimentalists, but none the less effectively.

"It has been suggested that England is not reliable and that the firm declarations made by Mr. Asquith and other British statesmen that there will be no peace until Germany is utterly crushed do not necessarily mean that they will be fulfilled. It has been argued that England, after luring Greece into a campaign against Turkey and the Germanic Powers, may be expected, if events shape themselves unfavorably, to leave her Greek allies in the lurch. All this cleverly circulated talk has had a certain effect. The great majority of the Greek nation sympathize with the Allies and anticipate a substantial gain to the cause of pan-Hellenism from their ultimate victory over the Germanic Powers and Turkey.

"But even with this prevailing sympathy which has defied all German attempts to undermine it, and with this expectation of actual gain to Greece, the uppermost feeling at the present moment is rather one of cautious reserve. There is no desire anywhere for rash adventures. Greece, if she moves at all, will not do anything until the preparation of the Balkan situation will have been completed. Above everything, it will be realized that quick action will thus be Greece's only safety. The attitude of Bulgaria has been definitely ascertained for some time, and there appears to be no reason to delay slowly and cumbrously. Greece must be sure of [illegible] incurring no risks and equally sure of reaping [illegible] substantial rewards before [illegible] will take the first step against Turkey."

BULGARIAN GENERAL SAYS TURKS SAFE

Thinks British and French Are Unprepared for Attack on Dardanelles.

(SPECIAL DISPATCH.)

BERLIN, Sept. 25.

Under a Sofia date the Prager Tagblatt prints an interview with General Kowatschew, commander of the Fourth Bulgarian army, who, during the Balkan war distinguished himself at the battle of Bulair. He gives his views of the Russian retreat.

"The Russian army is at present so situated," said General Kowatschew, "that there is little chance of it taking the offensive again for some time. To my mind the principal reason for the Russian defeat was lack of strategy on the part of the commanders, the scarcity of officers and ammunition, and the incompetence of the average Russian soldier. Another important factor is the lack of harmony among Russian commanders and their failure to co-operate with their English, French and Italian allies. They went ahead with the campaign without any proper consultation with their allies. I am convinced that if the Teutonic allies begin an offensive campaign against Servia with the object of establishing a connection with Constantinople, there will be no chance of the Balkan States entering the war against them.

"The Dardanelles are now the chief theatre of war, and events have shown clearly that the British and French there are entirely unprepared to combat successfully their Turkish adversaries. The operations thus far have been a failure. The British and French will have to effect a landing at the point which was our objective during the Balkan war. The Dardanelles constitute the key to the whole situation, which the Allies must obtain at any sacrifice, no matter how great. However, it appears to be almost too late now, as the Turks are so strongly intrenched as to make success against them almost impossible."

AN OAK TAUBE FOR NAIL-DRIVING USE

(SPECIAL DISPATCH.)

BERLIN, Sept. 25.

All kinds of statues and monuments have been erected in the cities and towns of Germany in commemoration of the great war, among them Hindenburg statues without number, big iron crosses and knights and soldiers in wood, in which nails can be driven at so much a nail. Not to be outdone, the city of Gotha will now erect a monument to the German monoplane, or Taube, as it is called. A mass meeting was recently held for the collection of the necessary money, and this having been obtained, the statue is now being constructed. As the Taube really originated in Gotha the statue is regarded as particularly appropriate. It will be placed in the big square in front of the town hall, and will rest on a granite foundation 25 feet high.

The monoplane will be built of oak, and on each side will be the figure of a soldier holding a [illegible] in which contributions will appear in relief. Professor Lehnert of Leipzig has been appointed to charge of the whole affair. For the benefit of the war fund a certain sum will be charged for the privilege of driving [illegible] into the structure and it is [illegible] that quite a sum will thus be [illegible]. The statue is to be erected [illegible] and there appears to be no reason to delay slowly and cumbrously. Greece must be sure of [illegible] incurring no risks and equally sure of reaping [illegible] substantial rewards before [illegible] will take the first step against Turkey."

ROUMANIA, 'GENDARME OF BALKANS,' NOT LIKELY TO REMAIN NEUTRAL

Stopped the Last Balkan War in 1913 by Show of Force and Got the Dobrudja Province, Promised Her in 1878, and Has No Love for Teutons or Bulgaria.

[By a Student of the Balkans.]

Diplomatists of all countries, neutral as well as belligerent, are watching anxiously the third struggle between Latin and Teuton that has begun since Austria's ultimatum to Serbia. This third struggle is between Roumania and Bulgaria; the earlier two were, of course, that between Mr. Cambon and Prince Lichnowsky in London and that between Prince von Buelow and Baron Sonnino in Rome. In both the earlier tussles the German protagonist failed in his endeavor. What will result from the present encounter?

Such lack of affection as exists between Roumania and her neighbor, Bulgaria, is no mere difference caused by propinquity. To be sure, the Bulgarians chant dismally about the fruits of victory being snatched from them by the treaty of Bucharest in August, 1913, but it is an odd fact that Roumania asks nothing from Bulgaria and comes no possession of her neighbor. All that she wants is a square deal. And if a Roumanian talks rather cynically about his country's hope of ever getting a square deal from Bulgaria one must remember that his cynicism is not without some reason.

A fruitful, generous country sustains an easily governed population as a rule, and to the axiom Roumania is no exception. Her last participation in actual warfare was in 1878, when her troops, defeating Osman Pacha at Plevna, saved Russia from the Turk to a far greater degree than even Belgium saved France and England at Liege last year. It is no exaggeration to say that the people have trusted their rulers and their governments, and that her statesmen, for the most part, subordinating personal ambitions to the desire for the country's industrial development, have deserved well of that confidence. Bulgaria, on the other hand, has had new programmes forced on her by a rapid procession of Prime Ministers, each of them having the self in turn of a weak, vacillating monarch.

Roumania held only one international policy for thirty-three years and changed it almost overnight, having discovered that being an appendage of Austria was unprofitable and reactionary. Thirty years of pipe dreaming came to an end. Thereafter, since 1911, Roumania has leaned toward her natural [illegible] and educator, France.

Now, above all nations, it was Bulgaria which was responsible for that change. At the conference of Berlin, in 1878, which settled peace between Russia and Turkey Roumania was forced to give up her rich productive vineyards of Bessarabia—because that province was strategically necessary to Russia, and rights for the Little States, in the eyes of Bismarck, who presided at that conference, were about as real as dreams of Elysium—and to accept in exchange the small Dobrudja province, marshy, sandy and utterly infertile, which was to be handed over by the newly created State of Bulgaria, en vassalled to Turkey by the treaty of the conference.

No Bulgarian statesman has ever explained why Bulgaria did not hand over the Dobrudja, as the treaty stipulated. For Roumania the plain fact remained that the conference had done its work, signed its treaty and gone away and that Bulgaria's dishonored acceptance was never met; it was the Balkan prologue to Dr von Bethmann-Hollweg's "scrap of paper."

It may well be imagined that staring hard for thirty years at a broken promise induced Roumania with no kindlier feelings toward Bulgaria as time went on. And yet the desolate Dobrudja was not worth a war. Nor was the Concert of Europe vastly concerned by Roumania's grievance. To the Concert, indeed, it was as academic as somebody else's toothache. Roumania was incensed against Russia, which had snatched away Bessarabia, and turned to Austria. It paid Austria to act the part of the big brother, for one thing, such attitude kept the awkward question of Trans-Sylvania quiet. Public opinion in Roumania began to waver, then to alter. And then came the Balkan War of 1912.

At this point a bit of secret diplomatic history is worth recording. The present writer was in Bucharest in September, 1912, when the war between Bulgaria, Greece, Montenegro and Serbia on the one side and Turkey on the other was begun by the withdrawal of the Monte negrin Minister from Constantinople. Three months previously it was known there when that moment has arrived.

As a prophecy regarding what Roumania's course will be in this war, it would seem to one accustomed to their methods of thought that (even if they are not attacked by their gentle Teuton friends with the object of seeing that ammunition should go through their neutral land to the Sick Man of Europe) Roumania probably will remember that in the Balkans neutrality has not been a [illegible] paid. It certainly did not [illegible] Roumania in 1912.

[illegible] Kirk Kilisse as the result of German army contractors' plundering in ammunition and their own Young Turks' backsheesh, the Bulgarians decided that they would like to keep the land they had won in the fighting. I make no doubt that King Ferdinand was quite sincere in June, 1912, but six months later Dr. Daneff had his ear and Gueshoff, with his English commercial training and his notions of playing fair, had been deposed. Viewing the change of mind, seeing themselves being hoodwinked again by another Power, the third time in thirty-five years, Roumania's army was mobilized and strolled casually, like a lot of gamekeepers, into Bulgaria while that unhappy land was engaged in fighting Greece and Serbia.

Not without some irony, in reply to King Ferdinand's protests, King Carol refused to regard the march of his own army as a military manoeuvre, his attitude earned him the sobriquet of the "Gendarme of the Balkans." The Roumanian army fired not a shot, but King Carol made the warring States compose their differences, and the treaty of Bucharest was signed and sealed in a fortnight. Incidentally, the Roumanians got the Dobrudja, a little State, after all this waiting, and King Ferdinand got another Prime Minister. In less healthy countries Dr Daneff would have had a fatal accident for making a fool of his royal master.

It will be seen from this chronicle that the conflict is between two opposing schools of thought alike different in diplomacy and strategy. Like the Germans, the Bulgarians believe in shock tactics, in using all the strength at the beginning, and keeping up the effort until somebody is winded, like his German relatives, King Ferdinand is apt to allow principle to wait on expediency. Like the French, from whose ancestors, the Latins, they also spring, the Roumanians have long memories and they believe in being a reserve force quite swiftly at the right moment. In common, too, with the French, they have the intuition which tells them when that moment has arrived.

HAS CONFIDENCE IN FRENCH GENERAL

Views Expressed by Colonel Barone, the Well Known Italian Military Critic.

(SPECIAL DISPATCH).

PARIS, Sept. 25.

Great confidence in the military situation on the western front and in the ability of General Joffre and the high French command is expressed by Colonel Barone, the Italian military critic, in an article which has just appeared in the Preparazione.

After having paid a visit to the French lines and having examined the trenches and the positions where the most furious fighting has taken place, Colonel Barone is convinced that the supreme French command will adopt the offensive directly the opportune moment arrives, and that then, "despite the great difficulties to be overcome, the action will be continuous, with the probabilities of victory all in favor of France."

Colonel Barone considers that both in the first line trenches and in the secondary lines of defence the French troops are admirably trained, that an excellent understanding exists between them and their officers, and that both the [illegible] joined recruits and the [illegible] paigners are full of confidence and [illegible] in France both the army and the people convinced of [illegible] to make any sacrifice.

Colonel Barone has reason to believe that a very different [illegible] prevails among the Ger[illegible] the Germans have been ob[illegible] in their garrisons in Belgium [illegible] the western front, and their [illegible] that very few of them will ever return to Germany. The number of desertions is increasing daily, a fact which he regards as peculiarly significant. In these circumstances and also in view of the fact that the Germans are wasting their forces in Russia, he feels assured that the German Titan will soon be at his last gasp.

In conclusion Colonel Barone considers that the French, British and Italian forces ought to spare no effort to be ready for the day when the Germans discover their error in wasting so much energy on the eastern theatre. He urges the public, however, to be content to leave the choice of the right time to strike this decisive blow to those in authority, for he is persuaded that the French commander in chief is worthy of the fullest confidence.

Unassuming and phlegmatic, General Joffre, when it comes to questions of military technique, is a soldier of the first order and a born strategist. Those who are impatiently waiting for some great action, says Colonel Barone, "will do much better to leave the conduct of affairs to him."

BOTTLE WITH MESSAGE FROM THE BLUECHER

(SPECIAL DISPATCH)

BERLIN, Sept. 25.

The Danziger Zeitung reports that a bottle was cast up on the beach at Stolpmunde in which was discovered a paper with the following message evidently written in haste:

"A last word from S. M. S. Bluecher. Lieutenant von Gersdorff. My parents live [illegible] Hamburg. Hamburg. Kindly send this to them."

As the Bluecher was sunk by the British in the North Sea last January this bottle had travelled hundreds of miles. It followed the North Sea current eastward, then made a voyage around Denmark and into the Baltic, finally being cast up at Stolpmunde. The wish expressed by the [illegible] dead [illegible] was carried out by the fisherman who found the bottle.

FRANCE PREPARES FOR INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT

Marked Change Will Come After War, in Opinion of American Observer.

LEAGUES TO BOYCOTT GERMAN PRODUCTIONS

The France We Have Known as Amiable and Refined Will Hereafter Also Be Powerful.

(SPECIAL DISPATCH).

LONDON, September 25.—"An American observer on the Rhone," writing to the Morning Post on "The Recuperation of France," says:

"In times of peace prepare for war, is an adage the tremendous force of which has been brought home to the Entente nations by the experiences of the last thirteen months. The French, whose neglect of this preparation was the least flagrant, have been the most successful in quickly repairing their deficiencies. Not satisfied with that, they are the first to apply themselves systematically to the equally important business of preparing for peace in time of war. If the French people, as I have noted before, are talking less about the war than formerly, it is largely because they are talking a great deal about meeting the conditions which will confront them when peace shall be declared. The civil members of the population are leaving the conduct of the war to the government and General Joffre. They have reaffirmed their confidence in the former, and their confidence in the latter needs no reaffirmation—a profound religious faith would better than anything else describe their feelings toward him. But the business of preparing for peace is strictly theirs, and they are going at it with a zeal and thoroughness that it is exhilarating to witness. There is no prematureness about this.

"They are not speculating about the terms of peace, but they know that they will restore the regions now in the temporary occupation of the enemy and will give them back their severed provinces. They see in the future an unmutilated France relieved from the Prussian nightmare which has haunted them so long, and they realize that that means the dawning of a marvellous new era, which, under the freedom of the republic, will afford to this people, in many respects the elite of the human race, a scope for its talents and its initiative unique in its history. France intends to take full advantage of this opportunity, and she rightly judges that she cannot begin preparing to do so too soon.

"No such drastic measure as the total abolition of spirituous liquors is contemplated but the prohibition of absinthe, the suppression of the privileges of the 'bouilleurs de cru' which have permitted nearly a million people to engage in private distillation practically exempt from governmental control, a heavy increase in the tax on spirits and other measures proposed will unquestionably result in greatly reducing alcoholic excess. The exceedingly reasonable attitude of the liquor trade in all its branches and its apparently sincere desire to co-operate in securing real temperance reform in aiding the efforts of the government.

"The war has made it possible to measure accurately the extend to which the Germans had succeeded in their commercial penetration of France and the degree in which the latter has depended upon goods of German origin, and the French people are determined to remove this commercial menace as thoroughly as the intend to eliminate the German military danger. They intend to keep German products out of France for the future, and will endeavor not only to replace them by articles produced at home but to supersede the Germans in the markets of the world. The list of the measures already taken or under contemplation is much too long to refer to detail, but the following may be mentioned:

"Creation of naturalisations and more stringent naturalisation laws for the future.

"Formation of leagues and societies for the perpetual and efficient boycotting of all business concerns in which Germans are interested in the slightest degree, and of all merchandise of German origin.

"The development of those lines of production in which Germany has been pre-eminent or successful, especially of branches of what may be termed scientific industry.

"Increase in the facilities for education in industrial science and assistance and encouragement in the training of industrial scientists.

"Increase and development of the utilisation of the mineral resources of the country.

"Development and extension of the utilisation of electricity in industrial production, especially in industries, chemistry and metallurgy.

"Intense utilization of the enormous water power so plentiful in many parts of France for the production of electrical energy for industrial uses.

Industrial Development.

"The last two of the above mentioned of the elements of what is now termed hydroelectricité, have already undergone a rapid and remarkable development during the last few years, and it is no secret that during the war they are being utilized with the greatest success in the manufacture of munitions and in making up for the loss of the coal supply and the furnaces and forges of those departments of northeastern France which are occupied by the enemy. The effort which is to be made for greater development along these lines is of an importance which it is almost impossible to exaggerate. There are almost no limits to the possible achievements of a systematical industry which is based upon an unlimited supply of hydroelectric current. In this direction French science is perhaps a short period in advance of the world.

"The France which we have known as a loved has been an amiable France, a gifted and refined France, the France which we are soon to know will be all that and more. She will be an unanswerable France, a powerful France. A France which will carry the fruits of a tremendous industrial production to the four corners of the earth, as she has hitherto carried the gems of her fantasy, the charm of her thought and the human [illegible] of her life."

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

The Mistaken Identity of Tommy

By ADDIE F. MITCHELL.

Copyright, 1915, by E. C. Parcells.

Mrs. Vaughn put down the letter she had been reading, with a troubled little sigh. Her daughter Madge looked up from the step.

"What's the matter, mother? You look as if you had been reading your death warrant."

"I have—the death warrant of our summer's peace. Aunt Mary North writes to ask if we won't keep her Tom while she and Mr. North go abroad for the summer."

"Who's her Tom?" asked Madge succinctly.

"Her stepson. I've not seen Aunt Mary since she married Mr. North, and I know next to nothing of the North family. But Mrs. Wilson knew Mr. North when they were living in Chicago (that was in the time of the first Mrs. North), and she said there were two girls and a boy. The boy was in kilts then, and that was five years ago, so he must be about eight or nine years old. Aunt Mary says he has been ill with typhoid and that she remembers with hope for his health that the air at Pinecroft is healing."

"But we can't have him, mother. Think of having an eight-year-old boy on our hands the whole summer! We can never get enough cooked for him to eat, and he'll be drowned regularly once a week and break all his arms and legs on the other days. And I wanted a quiet, heavenly rest this summer before I have to go back to that awful office. And it will be—well, the other kind of a time with a Tommy around, that is certain."

"But, Madge, I can't refuse Aunt Mary. She was poor father's favorite aunt and always so good to him. No, Tommy will have to come, whether we want him or not."

"Well, then, when?"

"The letter says next Tuesday unless they hear from us that it is not convenient."

"Tell Aunt Mary I have the smallpox or that I died suddenly at the news—anything. Please, mother!"

"I was wondering," said her mother, "whether an eight-year-old boy would be afraid to sleep in a room by himself. Shall we put a bed in the alcove off my room or fix up the south chamber?"

"All the boys I've ever seen," answered Madge, "were afraid neither of the things under the earth nor of those upon it. Give him a room to himself, and then you'll be saved the everlasting clatter of fishing tackle and knives and toads and things in your room."

Still grumbling, Madge helped her mother get ready the south chamber. As she worked she grew interested and even took from the walls of her own room some interesting prints which she thought would be suitable for a boy's room.

"I can't see, though, why Aunt Mary didn't take the little wretch abroad with her—the sea air would do him good. Take out all the fancy things, mother, as you value them."

"If you only understood big boys as well as you seem to understand the small ones you would not be twenty-four and still single," teased her mother.

"I do, mother," said Madge vehemently. "I understand them altogether too well, and that's the very reason I am still single."

There was no immediate reply to this, and Mrs. Vaughn turned her attention to the room.

"Get all your old picture books and put them on that shelf, Madge, and I think I'll bring Jim's old hobbyhorse down from the attic. He may despise it, but you never can tell."

"I suppose I could make him some kites," said Madge. "There's all that red and blue paper and miles of yellow string. Perhaps if I make a big one he'll get fastened to it and fly off to Mars. And while I'm up in the attic I'm going to bring down some of Jim's old overalls."

Arrangements were finally completed, and Madge rather looked forward to the coming of the little boy, so that when Tuesday came she willingly drove to the station for him, though she protested that St. Lawrence and his gridiron were as nothing to the torment she was undergoing. She took along a bag of cookies, "just to stop up his mouth so he can't ask questions," she explained.

The train was late, and Madge got a little cross as she waited in the open trap with the hot sun beating down upon her. The pony was restless, and she dared not leave him to go inside of the station. When the train finally steamed in, however, she gave the reins to a porter and went to find her young charge. She watched the few who came out of the coaches nervously, with one eye on the dancing pony, but as far as she could see no small boy was on the train. Fearing that he had not heard the name of the station called, she spoke to the conductor, who told her that no such person was on the train.

"Well," she thought, "I suppose I should be glad of it," and was going back to the trap when it occurred to her that he might some way have got past her into the station and might be waiting for her there. She looked in. No one was there but a very tall young man, who was leaning back rather limply against the seat, pale as from a recent illness. Madge gave him more than a passing glance because she wondered who he might be. Young men at Pinecroft at this season were a rarity.

"Looks sick," she muttered, "or a little daffy." She was getting into the cart when a quiet "I beg your pardon" caused her to wheel around. The strange young man, hat in hand, was certainly speaking to her. She merely looked her surprise.

"Are you not Miss Vaughn, and weren't you expecting me?" Her blue eyes widened into a positive stare of amazement.

"I—I am Madge Vaughn, but you—you must be mistaken," she said.

"I am Dr. North—Tom North, my mother wrote." He was blushing a little at the queerness of her reception.

"You—you are little Tommy? "Why"— She began to laugh merrily, and the young man laughed, too, a bit stiffly, for he did not understand the joke. "You have the advantage of me," he said.

Madge sobered at his tone and realized that she was not displaying any marked hospitality. She held out a repentant hand, which the young man took eagerly. "We're sort of cousins, I guess," she said. "Anyway, if you are Tommy North we've been looking for you, so get in, and we'll start."

"I can go away if it is not convenient," protested the man.

"Convenient! After I've worked for three days getting picture books and kites and little blue overalls ready for you? No, sir; you will have to use all those things."

"You see," she explained as she drove along, "we got the impression from some one that you were about eight years old. Your mother never mentioned your age or height, and so we got ready for a small boy, and—and here are some cookies I brought along so that you would not ask questions on the way home." She thrust a paper bag into his hands.

They were both laughing like children as they drove in at the gate, and by the time explanations were made to Mrs. Vaughn the young man was thankful that the surprise had happened. He felt that it had been a good thing to take Madge by surprise, for when two people have laughed together they have rapidly progressed in their acquaintance.

On the very first day Mrs. Vaughn had looked at the two with comprehension in her eyes, and as the weeks grew into months she felt reasonably sure that Madge would never go back to the office.

"Why should she," whispered the older woman to herself, "when a prosperous young physician is not only willing, but obviously anxious, to monopolize her?"

The day before he was scheduled to go back to the city a new man by reason of Pinecroft air and agreeable companionship they took the big red and blue kite to the top of a nearby hill to fly it. It soared clear above the trees as the man slowly unwound the long yellow string. The girl watched it rather sadly, for as yet there had been no word of love between them and she realized that she had grown to care so much that it was hard not to let him see it. She felt glad, though, that she had not let him see it, because there might be another girl in the city to whom he was bound, and she—well, she had her work at the office. The tears had come into her eyes, and now they splashed over. The young man looked up just in time to catch sight of them, and, letting the string go, he turned and caught her in his arms.

"Dear," he whispered, "what is it?" She did not speak, but she did not try to get away either, and after a moment he said:

"Is it because I am going away—is it, Madge?" She shook her head.

"Why, then," he urged, "tell me." Suddenly she began to laugh—a soft little laugh that made the man hold her closer.

"I was only wondering," she said, "whether or not there was a girl"—

"You bet there is," he interrupted, "and I've got her right where I want her." Which sentence, slangy as it was, seemed to be wholly satisfactory to Madge.

Shied at the Price.

"I am glad there are not many buyers like an old farmer in Center Bridge. A very distinguished etcher, sketching in Center Bridge, made a study of the farmer's barn. The farmer happened to appear and said he'd like to have the sketch.

"'Ef 'tain't too dear,' he added cautiously.

"'Oh,' said the etcher, who makes $12,000 a year, 'I won't charge you anything for the sketch, but'—

"His eye lighted on the pigpen.

"'But I'll tell you what. You can give me one of those nice little pink sucking pigs there.'

"'Why, man,' said the farmer with a frown, 'do ye know what them pigs is worth? They're worth a dollar apiece.'"—Exchange.

Trees and Fools.

Any fool can destroy trees. They cannot run away, and if they could they would still be destroyed—chased and hunted down as long as fun or a dollar could be got out of their bark hides, branching horns or magnificent bole backbones. Few that fell trees plant them. Nor would planting avail much toward getting back anything like the noble primeval forests. During a man's life only saplings can be grown in the place of the old trees, tens of centuries old, that have been destroyed. It took more than 2,000 years to make some of the trees in these western woods—trees that are still standing in perfect strength and beauty, waving and singing in the mighty forests of the Sierra. God has cared for these trees, saved them from drought, disease, avalanches and a thousand straining, leveling tempests and floods, but he cannot save them from fools. Only Uncle Sam can do that.—John Muir of California.

Just Suits My Needs Building Up the System

"I want to state that I have never taken anything to do me so much good as Dr. Chase's Nerve Food," writes Mrs. Edson Brock, Trenholmville, Que., "and I am never without it in the house. I was so nervous I could not sleep, but now I sleep soundly at nights and wake up feeling refreshed and ready for the day's work. I used the Nerve Food for months and found that it just suits my needs and has built up the system wonderfully. I know it is Dr Chase's Nerve Food that has brought about the great change in my condition and am thankful for it.

"My husband was a great sufferer from itching piles and has been entirely cured by Dr Chase's Ointment."

We are constantly receiving letters like this in regard to Dr Chase's Nerve Food. Everywhere it is being used because of its great restorative and reconstructive influence on the nervous system. Men and women who are run down in health, tired, nervous and discouraged, find in this great Food Cure the means of nourishing the exhausted system back to health and vigour.

Headaches, indigestion, sleeplessness, nervous irritability, lack of energy, and vigour — all tell of nervous exhaustion, and indicate the need of such treatment as Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

Instead of affording mere temporary relief by stimulating the nerves, Dr. Chase's Nerve Food builds up the system by supplying the ingredients from which Nature forms new rich blood and revitalizes the wasted nervous system. Put Dr. Chase's Nerve Food to the test when you are feeling tired out and discouraged, fill the body with new rich blood and new nerve force and you will realize again the joy of good health. 50 cents a box, 6 for $2.50, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

Foe's Flight Became Panic When Africans Appeared

PARIS, Oct. 1—"It was by no means easy work," said one of the wounded at the Grand Palais Hospital in describing the battle of Champagne Saturday. "Never have we seen anything like their barbed wire entanglements. Our shells ploughed up thousands of stakes, but there was an innumerable number left which we had to pull up under the enemy's fire.

"The wire was so thick it was extremely hard to cut. In many places our attacking columns came against Chevaux de frise behind which the Germans lurked. We pelted them with bombs as hard as we could and the sappers who came behind us did the rest.

"The machine guns which stormed at us—that's why so many of us were hit in the legs—were soon put out of business. Then our cavalry turned up. They had gone so long without a chance to fight on horseback that they were keen to get into it. It was a fine dash and the Germans bolted on all sides. What they left behind in the way of materials, arms, effects, and equipment was unimaginable. Their right turned into a panic when they saw our African contingents after them. The Africans certainly cut them up frightfully with the bayonet." An officer with a bayonet wound in one arm spoke enthusiastically of the methodical and orderly manner in which the French Infantry fought. When the rally sounded, all the men formed in their proper sections. "They are all veterans now," said the officer, "and know their profession thoroughly. The Germans left the whirlwind of this grand army."

England Lists Gold Plate of King and Queen

LONDON, October 1—England is preparing to mobilize her entire gold reserve. By this I mean not the gold coin that exists in the vaults of her banks but the immense stores of the precious metal in the form of plate and ornaments owned by the hundreds of great families in this country.

The English treasury has recently sent out circulars marked "Private" to a large number of persons requesting them to furnish particulars of the weight of the gold plate, ornaments, etc., in their possession. No circular has been sent to any goldsmith, but personal inquiries are being made of the latter as to the quantity of gold in their possession, and it is anticipated by several of the largest goldsmiths that the sale of gold plate and ornaments shortly will be forbidden and that these will have to be held in stock pending government action.

For Export to U. S.?

The object of this move on the part of the treasury is, of course, to obtain some idea of the quantity of gold it would be possible to obtain in the country from private sources in view of the financial situation which will necessitate later the export of a large quantity of gold to the United States and elsewhere.

Fully to comprehend the reason of this measure, or, rather, contemplated measure, on the part of the English treasury some little understanding of the broad facts of the present financial situation is necessary.

There is at present a big debt due by England for goods obtained chiefly in the way of munitions of war from the United States.

In the ordinary way of trade these goods would be paid for by the export from England of other goods, but England's export trade has for the moment almost ceased to exist.

Gold Only Way.

If England cannot discharge her debt to the United States by exports, there is practically only one other way by which it can do so, and that is by an export of gold. Other methods have been suggested, into which, however, there is no need to inquire.

Payment by an export of gold is the plain and obvious method by which England ultimately must discharge her debt to the United States, and in order to do this and at the same time preserve English credit the English treasury must find some means of greatly increasing the gold reserve at the Bank of England.

War loans, however successful they may be, do nothing to accomplish this purpose. All a war loan really does is to transfer "credits" from the ordinary joint stock banks to the credit of the treasury at the Bank of England.

War loans, however successful they may be, do nothing to accomplish this purpose. All a war loan really does is to transfer "credits" from the ordinary joint stock banks to the credit of the treasury at the Bank of England, but this scarcely affects the gold reserve.

Doesn't Help Debt.

These credits enable the treasury to pay their liabilities in England and to a limited extent in the countries of their allies but it does not help the treasury to meet its obligations in the United States. To do this it becomes necessary for the treasury to obtain a much larger supply of gold than it at present can command.

The plan the treasury has in view is to take the quantity of gold it may need in the way of gold plate, ornaments, etc., that are now in the possession of private individuals and pay for the gold so commandeered in war stock or by a special stock to be created for this purpose.

The gold so taken will be purchased by weight and will be melted down at the mint for the purpose of coinage.

The whole scheme is being carried out under the control and direction of Noel Behrns, a nephew of the late Lord Rothschild and one of the chief financial experts at the treasury. Mr. Behrens is at present acting as Mr. McKenna's private secretary at the treasury.

Royalty Seen First.

The first persons to be approached on the subject were members of the royal family. This was done, of course, for the purpose of creating a royal example in patriotism which the members of the great aristocracy and wealthy families in whose hands most of the ornamental gold lies would perforce have to follow.

King George has agreed to let the treasury have the whole of the contents of the red and white rooms at Buckingham Palace, which contain practically all the gold ornaments in the way of cups, figures, pilgrim bottles, and boxes in the private possession of the monarch.

The King, of course, could not give up any treasure owned by the nation, but the gold in question is the personal property of His Majesty. Their value in weight was estimated by the court goldsmith on the accession of King George at $2,500,000.

Queen's Contribution.

Queen Alexandra has also agreed to let the treasury have all the gold ornaments at Marlborough House, with a few exceptions, one of the most notable of which is, by the way, the massive gold shield given by the Kaiser's father to Queen Victoria who bequeathed it to King Edward, who in turn bequeathed it absolutely to his consort.

This shield is one of the most valuable gifts that one monarch has ever conferred on another sovereign. It is about three feet in diameter and made in three rims of solid gold, the two inner rims bearing carving work of the richest and finest quality; the outer is ornamented with scenes from Biblical history set in coloured jewels.

The court goldsmiths estimated the total worth of the gold plate in the possession of the 200 families on their register at $10,000,000.

"THIS WAR A BLESSING"

Full Text of Ex-Toronto Pastor's Remarkable Utterance in New York—Suffering is Brooding the Race Back to Real Manhood

Considerable interest was aroused in Toronto by a brief despatch from New York to the effect that Rev. Dr. Charles A. Eaton, pastor of the Madison Avenue Baptist Church of that city, and formerly the minister in charge of the Bloor Street Baptist Church, Toronto, had declared that the present war was a blessing. Here is a fuller report of what he said, which makes his strange utterance more understandable.

"The real problem for the United States raised by the war is the place which we are to hold among the nations when peace returns. Three facts will largely determine the issue. First—We are now and must remain a world power. Second—As a people we do not want war either for ourselves or our neighbors. Third—When peace comes there will be enthroned a world public opinion, and this public opinion, which will be part judgment and part conscience, will determine the influence of each nation over the others.

"This war is the greatest blessing that has fallen upon mankind since the German Reformation. The world was losing its soul. Germany, under the blight of militarism, had lost her moral sense, and her culture had become an efficient engine of destruction, a menace to herself and to all the world. Russia lay stupid, sodden and hopeless under an iron despotism. France had forgotten God and was smothering in the froth of a frivolous and immoral aestheticism.

"Britain, chief among democracies, had distilled within her veins the poison of class hatred and individual selfishness and was fast sinking into a kind of social coma. America, sucked in materialism, prosperous, hollow, restless, dissatisfied, was drifting toward spiritual anarchy. Everywhere the soul had died out of the bosom of man.

Suffering as Rebuilder

"We needed a cross, and God has laid this cross upon the world. We are being purged by pain. Suffering, the beautiful mother of greatness, is brooding the race back to nobility, to unselfishness, to idealism, to real manhood.

"We, alone of the greatest nations, stand outside the struggle. And this constitutes at once our danger and our opportunity. While we are not fighting with arms, we are, nevertheless, in the war, and have been there since the first day. If as a people we live up to our history we shall win for ourselves a place of leadership among the nations. If, on the other hand, we temporize and shrink from accepting the burdens of our own greatness we shall be despised by the nations and shall lose our moral leadership, perhaps forever.

"This is where America stands today—at the parting of the ways. Our makers of opinion see the issue with remarkable clearness. Never has the newspaper press of America risen to such noble and worthy leadership as today. If the press has already found its soul, shall we not hope that politics, business, and religion will catch the large meaning of the age, and unite to make our beloved nation the real servant and friend of mankind."

Must War Upon Wrong

"In view of these great considerations, what ought America to do?

"First—We must accept our own responsibility without reserve. We are for men, for government of, for and by the people; for justice and liberty and humanity. We must protest clearly, officially, and firmly against every violation of these ideals. And if our protest leads us to loss, or even to war, we must be ready and prepared to pay the price. We cannot profess high principles without accepting full responsibility for our principles; and we cannot assume responsibility without paying the price.

"Second—We must let all the world know that American citizenship is a sacred thing, and its rights cannot be violated by anyone anywhere without a reckoning to the last penny.

"We hate war, but we would rather perish fighting for right than rot in shameful and cowardly ease. God is calling us to lead mankind out of its failure and ruin into peace and progress. But if mankind loses its confidence in us and its respect for us we can neither lead nor serve."

DENIES THAT SWEDEN INTENDS TO JOIN WAR.

Rumor of Intervention on the Side of Germany is Scouted in Stockholm.

STOCKHOLM, Sept. 28—Rumors that have been current regarding Sweden's impending abandonment of her neutrality and intervention on the side of the Germanic powers are totally unfounded and are strongly contradicted from an authoritative source.

The report of the transfer of a substantial number of Swedish merchant vessels to American owners, which had been taken as the foundation for the intervention rumor, is probably founded on the fact that old Swedish vessels aggregating 20,000 tons have lately been sold to Norway and Denmark at favorable prices. This tonnage, however, is being amply replaced by building orders to Scandinavian shipyards.

It is deeply regretted here that such misleading news should find currency, awaking unjustifiable suspicions, and interfering materially with friendly relations and commercial intercourse between England and Sweden.

DOG KEPT GUARD OVER MASTER'S BODY

PITTSFORD, Oct. 1—John Casaretti, 60 years of age, failed to return home to dinner at noon. His daughter went out to the apple orchard where her father had gone to work at an early hour in the morning, and found him dead. His body lay on the ground beneath a tree, from which he had undoubtedly fallen and fractured his skull. His dog, and only companion of the morning, had remained near the dead body of his master.

Mr. Casaretti was a prosperous farmer and lived on the Pittsford-Victor road, two miles east of this village. A son, Joseph Casaretti, conducts the general store at Bushnell's Basin. The dead man leaves a wife and several other children.

Dr. James A. Ames, coroner, physician performed an autopsy and found death to have been due to a broken neck. Coroner Henry Kleindienst granted a certificate of accidental death.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

MISSES' DRESS.

By Anabel Worthington.

Young girls who are attending school and college need many frocks for they have little time for mending and dressing when provided with a limited supply. The example shown in the accompanying illustration has much charm.

The waist is much of the shirt waist description. In the fulness of the front [illegible] in two pleats at each shoulder [illegible] joined to the forward edges of the circular backs. The closing is in the centre of the front and leaves the neck open, with a high roll collar trimming the back and sides. The sleeves fit the arm closely and set at the wrist.

The two-gore skirt has the front yoke depth and the sides in one piece, and the back to yoke depth and the sides also in one piece. Fitting in the portion of the centre front and back which is cut away, is a pleated section which is pressed very flat and forms a plain oblong panel.

In making this dress one may combine plain silk or a plaid or stripe with plain material of another texture or color, using one for the pleats and trimmings. The one color idea prevails, however, and this must be the dominating tone even if a second fabric be used.

The dress pattern, No. 7334, is cut in sizes 14, 16, 18 and 20 years. Medium size requires 5½ yards of 44 inch material, with ⅝ yard of 27 inch goods for collar.

This pattern can be obtained by sending 10 cents to the office of this paper.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 10 cents, or 2 for 25c.

HAVE DARK HAIR AND LOOK YOUNG

Nobody Can Tell When You Darken Gray, Faded Hair With Sage Tea

Gray, faded hair is caused by a lack of sulphur in the hair. Sulphur is the principal element required to keep the hair its natural color. Years ago the only way to get sulphur was to make a tea of sage leaves, but now we get this delightful mixture by asking at any drug store for Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound. You will get a large bottle of this old-time recipe, ready to use, for about 50 cents. Everybody knows that Sage tea and Sulphur darkens the hair so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied. It is easy to use, too. You simply dampen a comb or soft brush and draw it through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; after another application or two, it is restored to its natural color and looks glossy, soft and abundant.

PEAT AND STRAW FODDER

Also, Germany Turns to Vines and Nettles for Spinning.

STOCKHOLM, Sept. 29—It is reported from Berlin that a concern has been formed there to try to find new materials for fodder, either through the adaptation of peat or the increased use of straw and root tops. The dearth of imports of fodder is severely felt, and chopped straw has been gradually resorted to for feeding horses. The making of straw flour has largely increased. The dry Summer has made the straw harvest exceedingly poor in some places, and the fixing of maximum prices for this commodity is expected soon.

On the initative of the Minister of War an organization also has been formed for obtaining substitutes for spinning materials. The people are requested to gather hop vines, nettles and other suitable plants, which will be bought by the Government for the textile industries.

The price of meat is constantly rising.

FRENCH SMASHING AT VIMY HEIGHTS REPULSE ALL COUNTER ATTACKS

Germans Are Fighting Desperately to Stop the Allies' Drive by Starting Attack Themselves---British Hammering at Foe Around Loos, Drawing off the Enemy's Reserves From the French Attacking in the Neighbourhood of Souchez

PARIS (French Official) Oct. 1.—The French have made further progress in their drive eastward toward the Vimy Heights, according to an official communique from the War Office this afternoon. The Germans are violently counter-attacking in the Argonne and Champagne regions and north of the Aisne, but their onslaughts were repulsed. East and southeast of Neuville two German attacks were repulsed, said the official statement. "The first was directed against our fortified works in the Giornay Forest, and the second against the French trenches south of Hill No. 119."

"North of the Aisne near Soupir the enemy delivered a violent demonstration against our trenches," said the communique. "His cannonade and musketry fire, however, were not followed by any infantry actions."

"In the Champagne region we abruptly arrested by our hot fire a counter-attack delivered by the Germans in the rigion of Maison de Champagne, northwest of Massiges.

"During last night's advance north of Massiges we took 280 prisoners, including six officers."

LONDON, Oct. 1.—Before many hours it is believed here the Anglo-French armies will be thrown forward in a smash at some new point in the German line. While infantry actions have been vigorous principally in the Champagne and Artois regions, there has been no let up in the bombardment of the German works at any point on the whole line.

No official report has come from the British headquarters for several days. Press despatches, however, convince the London public that the full force of the British attack is being directed at the Germans around Loos for the purpose of drawing off the enemy reserves, thus aiding the French in the operations east of Souchez.

PARIS, Oct. 1.—A personal telegram of congratulations from King George to President Poincare and Gen. Joffre to-day removed any doubt that the present onslaughts of the Allies do not constitute the beginning of the great drive. The British monarch sent warm congratulations on the successes won by the French troops "at the outset of our common offensive." President Poincare replied with a similar message recalling victories won by Gen. French and the British.

LONDON, Oct. 1.—King George to-day presented medals to the heroes of the Lusitania disaster. The officers and members of the liner's crew were among those decorated.

PARIS, Oct. 1.—Reports from Italian sources to-day say that several clashes between Bulgarian and Serbian patrols have occurred within the last few days. Both Bulgarians and Serbians are entrenching along the border.

PETROGRAD, Oct. 1.—Officiil admission from the War Office that news of important Russian successes is being purposely withheld combined with reports of victories for the Allies in France, has inspired the greatest optimism here. The War Office, it is understood, to-day will issue a statement within a few days regarding the number of prisoners and guns taken in the recent operations. This statement will give evidence that the long Russian campaign has shaken the morale of the Austro-Germans and weakened their ability to stand attacks. On the other hand the War Office expects to show that fresh levies have filled the ranks of the Czar's armies, and adequate supplies of ammunition are en route to the front.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 1.—It was strongly indicated in Government circles to-day that the recall of Capt. Von Papen will be suggested to Ambassador Bernatorff when Secretary Lansing meets the German Ambassador in New York to-morrow.

LONDON, Oct. 1.—The Norwegian bark Actie was set afire and destroyed by a German submarine in the North Sea according to despatches received here this afternoon. The bark was en route to England. The submarine then towed lifeboats with crew to Cape Naze, Norway.

BERLIN, via Wireless, Oct. 1.—Germany has not yet determined what disposition she will make of Belgium, Under-Foreign Secretary Zimmerman declared in a Dutch newspaper interview, but she is determined that any solution of the Belgian problem must make certain "that Belgium will not be England's vanguard."

"Germany has always wanted peace, and she wants a guarantee that the present war will not be repeated," said the foreign official. Zimmerman added that Poland's future too, is still undecided, but he said the decision in both instances would be left to Germany that no one was able to impose his will upon Germany. Under-Secretary Zimmerman told the correspondent that Germany has no intention of violating Holland's neutrality or attacking her economic or political independence. Germany, he said, appreciates Holland's strict neutrality as to Belgium."

OTTAWA, Oct. 1.—The first on the roll of honour of the Second Canadian Division, is Capt. E. W. Hallam, of the 18th Battalian, London, Ont. Capt. Hallam was killed in action last Wednesday. Capt. Hallam was formerly of the 7th Regiment, London, Ont.

The Second Division, which left for France two weeks ago and which went into the trenches on Saturday last, has been in action. The first casualty list in which the name of Capt. Hallam appears, is said to be a comparatively light one, not containing more than a dozen names, mostly of the Eighteenth Battalion. It is not believed that the division is taking part in the driving operations now on but that the casualties have been sustained in feint attack to divert the attention of the enemy from the other front.

Lt. S. Wharton, of the 7th Battalion has been wounded. Lt. Wharton is a British Columbia man, whose next of kin is in Plymouth, England.

PETROGRAD, Oct. 1.—Gen. Alexi Kuropatin, who was the leader of the Russians in the last Russian-Japanese war, has been appointed chief of the new Grenadier Corps and is at the front.

ROME, Oct. 1.—Despatches from Athens say that public opinion in Bulgaria has caused a halt in the war preparations of the Czar. The sentiment in favour of Russia is rapidly increasing in the rural districts and mutinies are threatened in the army if they are asked to join the Austro-Germans. A report from Austrian sources declared Premier Radoslavoff of Bulgaria will visit Berlin in a day or two to confer with German officials.

NEW YORK, Oct. 1.—William Dublier, United States electrical expert, who has been engaged in Britain for nine months installing electric detectors all about the coasts of the British Isles, is authority for the statement that the Germans have lost seventy-three submarines to date on or about the coasts of the British Isles and France.

CASUALTIES IN 2nd DIVISION

18th (Western Ontario) Battalion of Second Canadian Contingent Sustained a Dozen Casualties in its First Turn in Trenches

HEAVY SHELLING

(Willison Cable Copyright)

LONDON, Oct. 1.—The 3rd Battalion, 1st Canadian Division, was subject to a heavy afternoon's shelling during the period of the great British advance according to reports now reaching London. The officers and men took refuge in the shell trenches and the Huns absolutely failed to do any serious damage, while only three men sustained injuries, and those were of a trifling character. The 18th Battalion, of the 2nd Division, sustained some dozen casualties during the battalion's first turn in the trenches. The wounded have already arrived at Shorncliffe. Numerous officers of the First Division are in London on leave at present. One of these officers declared "when our turn does come we are ready for it, the men have all recovered from the strain of the earlier struggles and are in fine health, the best of spirits, and ready for anything."

DO NOT FORGET THE BAND FUND

Once More the Citizens of Peterborough Are Reminded of Their Duty in Connection With the Overseas Musicians Squad at Millbrook Fair

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

The committee of the speakers' Parliament of instruments for the Overseas matter of instruments for the Overseas Band is hard at work. They are preparing a statement as to the needs of the band in the matter of instruments and in regard to the cost of supplying the instruments, and will be in a position to tell the public just what is required. The Examiner urges upon the public the necessity of generously supporting this project. It is up to every citizen to get in behind the Band movement and do his or her share to see that the fund required is forthcoming speedily. The instruments are needed at once and there should be no delay. The Examiner has so far received $120 for the band fund for which on behalf of the band thanks is expressed.

In connection it should be mentioned that the cheque received yesterday was from The Matthews-Blackwell Company and not Mr. Matthews' private contribution.

The band and platoon drill squad of the local detachment left on the 11.40 G.T.R. train to-day for Millbrook, where they will give an exhibition at the Millbrook Fair. [illegible] route is also west to Millbrook. The presence of the band and drill squad is expected to create a great deal of interest in that neighborhood.

Capt. Lenty is in charge of the band while it was mounted at 6 o'clock this morning.

The Halifax Chronicle says: Lieut. Arthur J. Perks of Peterborough, who for nearly two months has been a recruiting officer in Halifax, first for a month at the Parade tent, and latterly at the Exhibition grounds, leaves to-day for Sussex there to rejoin his regiment, the 64th Battalion. Lieut. Perks made good. He was the first in charge of the Parade tent, and from its opening until the present day has justified its existence. However, the success attained was much due to the recruiting effect and Lieut. Perks set a standard for courtesy and kindliness to the men entering the tent to recruit that went a
